Major Henderson's Turn.

James had departed when Major Henderson came in with a dose prepared for us. Some time ago we had the felicity of calling the major a land swindler and bringing forward statistics to prove it. Instead of putting his ill gotten gains in his pocket and lighting out for the east to build a mansion on Fifth avenue and join the Four Hundred, he remained to bluff the public and to get even with us. He gave out that our removal would soon take place, and yesterday he cranked up the machine for the job.

We encountered the major in front of the postoffice. He opened fire without a word. We stood and looked at him while he fired six bullets and then stepped forward and took his gun away and advised him in a brotherly way to go out of business. He broke down and wept in humiliation and then retired to his office. We feel a bit sorry for him. He has carried a gun on his hip for fifteen years, and to suddenly find out that he had been lugging three pounds of old iron around all this time was too much for his nerve. We understand that he leaves town tomorrow and that he will exchange his gun for a brickbat.

We say, and in no boastful way, that we object to being "removed" from this earth in an informal way. We shall fight against it as long as possible. In each and every case we shall shoot back. When the king of terrors comes along according to program we shall try to shuffle off in a decent way, but those gentlemen who get impatient and try to force things should inclose 10 cents to pay for a photograph of our private editorial graveyard and select the spot where they wish to lie.

Searching Among Smouldering Ruins

For Victims of the Recent Raid by German Airplanes on London.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

London, July 9.—Most of the injured in Saturday's air raid are progressing favorably and no further deaths have occurred. Some streets in which bombs fell were still closed to traffic today. The police were still searching among the ruins of east end tenements for a number of persons missing. In several instances nothing remains of dwellings except smouldering ruins around which gathered women and children searching for some member of their homes.

TIE UP THE DOGS

Two More Owners Fined for Violating Bylaw

For allowing their dogs to be at large, Adam Davidson and Gordon McFarlane were each fined $2.00 and $2.60 costs at the police court this morning.

This is only a starter for the week, as the police intend to prosecute every owner of a dog found on the street unless it is under leash and muzzled.

The magistrate accepts no excuse whatever for a dog being at large.

SHOCK OF EARTHQUAKE AWAKES POPE BENEDICT

Rome, July 9.—Pope Benedict was awakened Sunday morning by an earthquake which shook the whole of Rome. The Pope enquired as to the extent of the earthquake, and learned there was no damage and no victims.

THREE CHANGES IN DRAFT BILL

Ottawa, July 9.—Three suggested changes in the initial terms of the military service act have been promised Government consideration by Premier Borden.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier urged that the maximum age limit for combatant compulsory service be fixed at thirty-five years, instead of forty-five, as in the bill, a proposal the Premier confessed he had already made himself in the Cabinet.

Mr. Fred F. Pardee, submitted the suggestion that, for national, humanitarian, productive and economic reasons, unmarried men and widowers without dependents should be called first in all the classes, a suggestion, the Premier stated, which impressed him and commended itself to serious consideration.

Mr. Duncan C. Ross reiterated his conviction that no youth should be conscripted until he was twenty-one years of age, and fell heir to the privileges as well as the responsibilities of citizenship, a recommendation which found the premier with an open mind.

The Servant Problem.

"What has been the greatest difficulty with which you have had to contend, Mrs. Kinder, in your struggle with the servant girl problem?"

"Preventing the good ones getting married."

Natural Longing.

However old, humble, plain, desolate, afflicted we may be, so long as our hearts preserve the feeblest spark of life they preserve also, shivering near that pale ember, a starved, ghostly longing for appreciation and affection.

"A Soft Answer."

A somewhat tactless youth had taken an unwarranted liberty in criticising the new hat of a lady friend, and she was about to say that she was not inclined to be dictated to by any man.

"I do not propose"— she began, but he interrupted her.

"If you did," he murmured, "I should certainly say 'Yes!'"

And his offense was forgiven.

His Idea of a Miracle.

"You say there are no miracles nowadays?"

"I do, most emphatically."

"What, for instance, would you consider a miracle?"

"If a man should make a fortune in New York and then go to Chicago or to Pittsburgh to spend it I should consider that a miracle."

ABOUT ROSES.

The Soils and Fertilizers That Best Suit Free Bloomers.

Prepared by the U. S. department of agriculture.

THE roses classed in the lawn and border group are adapted to a wide range of soil conditions and may be counted on to succeed in any but extremely heavy or very sandy soils. Many of them will do well even on such soil types. The principal essentials are thorough drainage and a plentiful supply of organic matter, with a reasonably constant water supply during the growing season. In general, a soil capable of growing good garden or field crops is suitable for roses. The deeper the soil and the better the preparation at the beginning the more satisfactory will be the results.

The best fertilizer for roses is rotted cow manure, though any other well rotted manure or good compost will serve the purpose. Fresh manure, especially horse manure, should be avoided, though if no other manure is available it may be used with extreme care. It must not come in direct contact with the roots when planting, nor should any quantity of it be used immediately beneath the plant to cut off direct connection with the subsoil and the water supply. Of the commercial fertilizers ground bone is excellent as additional food. It will not, however, answer as a substitute for an abundant supply of compost. Cottonseed meal, where it is cheap enough, may be used as a substitute for bone. Wood ashes are sometimes a helpful addition, or when they are not available lime and muriate of potash may be used and should be applied separately. Rose growers having only sandy soils should make more frequent applications of manure than those dealing with the heavier soils, since the organic matter burns out more rapidly in a soil rich in sand.

Your Figure.

One hears a great deal about the "perfect 36," and it really isn't 36 at all. Here are the alleged measurements:

Neck, 13½ inches; bust, 37 inches; waist, 26 inches; hips, 40 inches. The length of the skirt from the waist line to the floor is 42 inches.

The perfect 36 should measure 19½ inches inside the sleeve measure. The line down the back from the base of the collar to the waist line should be 15½ inches. These figures are for the average, but the measurements, of course, can vary. For instance, the perfect 36, according to tailors and dressmakers, range from 36 to 38 inches, although 37 is the ideal.

Seventy-five per cent of women are below the 36 standard, and most of the rest are over. This is because they have permitted their muscles to become flabby and loose from lack of exercise and have either taken on weight or lost it.

Don't Frazzle Baby.

There are cross babies and happy babies, placid babies and nervous babies, ugly babies and smiling babies. The only difference between a baby with a mean disposition and the grown up person with a mean disposition is that the baby usually has a cause for his meanness which may be remedied. Although a cross baby is not always a sick baby, something is certainly wrong if a baby cries much of the time. Now and then there may be a baby that is cross because it does not receive too much attention. Nothing makes a baby more peevish than to be trotted around all day for the amusement of the family and part of the night for his own amusement. A baby tires very easily and, like his elder relatives, he is usually cross when he is tired.

TWO WAYS TO ACQUIRE AN ESTATE

1—By saving, stinting, sacrificing; fighting the world at every turn, battling the blows of business competition; running the risk of fire, theft, embezzlement and misfortune; skimping your family, and yourself maybe, and standing only one chance in twenty of reaching Old Age without being dependent upon others for support.

2—By securing a Life Insurance Policy—A Policy which guarantees to pay your Beneficiary at your death, either a definite lump sum or an income every month as long as she lives—an income that is fixed, certain, regular, inalienable, unassailable, untaxable, and which cannot be lost, sold, dissipated, squandered or mortgaged.

Which is the EASIER and MORE SENSIBLE Way to Acquire an Estate?

TWO WAYS TO BEQUEATH AN ESTATE

1—By Testamentary Document: Requires an Executor. Must go through legal red tape at court. Requires court costs. May require months or years to settle. This kind of Will can be broken or set aside. Property is subject to attachment for debts of the deceased.

2—By Life Insurance (when the Beneficiary is named): Requires no executor or administrator—you are your own executor, your own administrator. No need of court proceedings—no expense of court costs. Does not require time to settle. This is a Will direct which no lawyer can break nor court set aside. Policy is not subject to attachment for debts of the deceased.

Which is the SAFER and BETTER Way to Bequeath an Estate?

MR. PAYNE WILL APPEAL JUDGMENT AGAINST HIM

Breach of Promise Case That Was Recently Won by Miss Elizabeth Lonsdale to be Carried to Higher Court.

At the last session of the County Court held here, Miss Elizabeth Lonsdale of Warsaw was given a verdict for breach of promise against J. R. Payne, formerly of Warsaw, but now of Dummer, Sask. Mr. Payne did not defend the suit. When the report of the hearing reached him, he was surprised, according to his own allegation. He will appeal from the judgment handed down by Judge Huycke, and in a communication to The Review makes the following statement:

"My attention has been called to a report published in various papers of the trial in the suit of alleged breach of promise to marry—Elizabeth Lonsdale vs. myself—which trial, I understand was held on June 12th, and I take the liberty of publishing an explanation of why I was not present to defend, and of refuting a number of the statements on which great emphasis appears to have been placed by the trial judge.

"In the first place, notice of trial in this action was dated May 29th, 1917, being served on my solicitor on that date and immediately mailed to me at Dummer, Sask., as shown by the date stamped on the said letter, and received at the post office here on June 13th, the day after the trial. It is difficult to account for this great delay, as in the ordinary course of mails it should have arrived here on June 3rd at the latest, which would have allowed me ample time to have reached Peterborough.

"Almost everyone knows that a man is innocent until the contrary is proven, and if even a part of the evidence of some witnesses, given in a court of law, when there is no one present to contradict it, is believed, the party asking for judgment usually gets a verdict in his favor. It was well known to both the plaintiff and her solicitor that I was absent in Saskatchewan, and further, it was generally known that I was at Dummer, where I had spent about eighteen of the twenty-four months prior to the 17th January, 1917. It would therefore have been only fair to me to have given a longer notice of trial, and I can only infer that judgment in default of my appearing was desired.

"I flatly deny the following statements made in the glaring headlines of the report, viz: "Hesitated on the eve of the wedding"; "Gave no reason why," and "Engaged two years." I told the plaintiff on the 12th January, the day after I met with a serious accident, that I could not be present on the 17th inst. This was surely a reasonable notice under the circumstances. I was disabled for one month, and I admit that at the end of that month I refused to marry the plaintiff, and my reasons for this action would have come to light at the trial if I had been given a reasonable opportunity to be present. The statement that I had giver no explanation for refusing to marry is an absolute falsehood. I explained my reasons to Miss Lonsdale clearly for not wishing to marry, and I am advised that I have a good defence to the action brought by her.

"In view of the fact that the people of Warsaw village know that I was here for at least nine months out of twelve in each of the years 1915 and 1916, they will be able to give it the incredibility which it deserves, and understand better than the newspaper reporter apparently did the extent of the weekly calls, long drives, etc., and when the case is appealed the public will be in a much better position to judge for themselves what the truth of the whole matter is, and as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to any damages or not.

OBJECT OF ORANGE ORDER IS TO SECURE EQUAL RIGHTS FOR ALL

Local Lodges March in Procession to St. James Church and Listen to Inspiring and Thoughtful Sermon by Rev. B. Greatrix

Every year on the Sunday before the glorious 12th of July the Orangemen of the city assemble at their hall and march to one or other of the local churches. Last night, despite the unfavorable weather conditions, the local lodges turned out over 350 strong and headed by the Salvation Army band marched to St. James' Methodist Church.

The center seats had meen reserved for them but it was found that this was not sufficient and the members of the congregation gladly made room for the visiting brethren.

Rev. Benj. Greatrix, the pastor, warmly welcomed the members which comprised not only the men but the Lady and Juvenile lodges.

Be True to Principels.

Mr. Greatrix took for his text the sixth verse of the fourth chapter of Joshua. "That this may be a sign among you, that when your children ask their fathers in time to come saying, What mean ye by these stones?" He said in part: Not being a member of your order, which I suppose is my own fault, I can only contemplate your order from without or through such information as you yourselves have been willing to divulge. Any person who carefully ponders your declaration, studies the qualification for membership cannot but be struck by its fairness and its good intentions. It is certainly not the fault of your order if all within its pale are not good and loyal citizens, warm, patriots and free from bigotory. Irreverence, profanity, coarseness, ungentle conduct, an illiberal begotten spirit, are placed under the ban by your order. Let me say, the surest way to secure increasing respect, a larger following, will be to demonstrate in daily life these principles and the quickest way to lose public respect, to forfeit public confidence, to be shorn of influence, is to violate or disregard these same principles.

If I am not mistaken one of the principles of your order is to inculcate tolerance, to secure equal rights to all, to present to all the inviable right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience, and your mode of action, your method to secure this condition of things is not by being offensive but defensive.

There are some people who entertain the idea that this hated word Protestant is of recent origin. That is a mistake. If not the term at least the principle it stands for runs back to the earliest times and is nothing more than the voice of God's spirit finding expression in declaring his will and the securing of the best interests of his creatures against the blind assumption of the arrogance of men entertaining cruel distorted views of God, rendering them cruel and oppressive, heartless under the awful delusion that they were doing God service by destroying men and women who did not, and would not stultify, themselves and silence the voice within them by accepting tenets that degraded the intellect. These same people were ready to crush the spirit of freedom so as to bar the intellectual, moral, spiritual and material progress of the race.

Protestants of Old.

Abel was a Protestant when he protested against the unrightous conduct of Cain. Was not Moses a Protestant when he protested against the policy of Pharoh in his treatment of Jehovah? Was not Elijah a protestant when he protested on Mt. Carmel that King Arab and his wife had sold themselves unto Baal and were sending the country swiftly to its doom, and vindicating the statements of Jehovah and the right of the people to worship God in simplicity and in harmony with their ancient faith? Was not John the Baptist protestant when he protested against hollowness and hypocrisy, a blind submission to a tradition that buried the worship of God under a mass of dead formalism and made religion a veritable charnel house, whose pestilential odors could not be disguised by all the drapery and perfume of gorgeous ritualism?

What are the Allies fighting against? German deoptism and militarism with its blind subservience to world power, that would reduce the the appaling and hateful doctrine of nations of the world to a condition of vassalage from which would be excluded all independence, all initiatative, and all freedom.

The world hopes for freedom and advancement both physically, mentally, morally, spiritually, and has rested in the race of men who from time to time have appeared on the stage of action. Again and again has the statement of Scripture "Where there is no vision the people perish" been verified. Ideas have been blurred, indistinct, devoid of attractiveness, of power to inspire or enthuse and the people have deteriorated in moral fibre and in resisting power.

When the Order Was Born.

I shall not attempt to describe the condition of things that existed when your order came into existence, but they were such as justified men in banding together, to defend the sacred cause of liberty, right to worship according to the dictates of conscience, to oppose and defeat a spirit that would force men to abandon their most sacred convictions, crush their honest impulse, their faith in God. It would be madness in the extreme when racial and religious differences have been so accentuated, causing a super heated atmosphere that only needs a match to start a conflagration, the result of which none could fortell.

Why Quebec Holds Back.

Men are talking at Ottawa about a referendum and a six months hoist, an appeal to the country in reference to this conscription measure. Why? There is need of action, immediate action. England is combing out her last five hundred thousand before drafting her youth. We know that Quebec has not sent her quota by the present method of volunteering, but why? I have heard two opinions that may be but rumors. They are, 1st, that God is punishing France for her treatment of the church and therefore all good Catholics ought to abstain from helping her; 2nd, refraining from assisting so as to conserve the man power that in the near future she may be able to demand larger concessions from the powers that be in shaping a policy that shall tend to increase her influence. In either case it is the church authorities that hold the key to the position.

I have said that one of the characteristics of your order is that it is defensive and not an offensive, that it is to harmonize and not to antagonize, not to create distrust but to breed confidence, not to endanger but to ensure safety. There is reason for your existence, there is just ground for its continuance.

By some means a torrent has swept over a portion of the valley, creating considerable havoc, destroying some sids, endangered others. Men say we must minimize the danger, we must avoid such a calamity or it will occur again. We will build up such a protection that if the current comes this way, we can direct it into a safe course, securing ourselves, our families and our property from injury.

The tolerant spirit of your order was beautifully illustrated some years ago in the City of Toronto when the Knights of St. John assembled in convention. This is a distinctly Catholic organization coming to what might be termed the greatest Orange city on the continent. It happened that the parade of the Orangemen prior to the 12th took place when they were in the city and the two orders passed one another at the same hour on the same street and such wa sthe self control of these antagonistic societies that no unseemly action was noted or remark was heard. I would like to see the same thing happen in Montreal where the tables are somewhat reversed. It would certainly be the best proof possibel of the influence of Rome's teaching. Let us be thankful for a religion that teaches self control and breathes love to all.

Th Free, Untrammelled Press.

No public consor stands guard over the press of our land, claiming the right to inspect all articles before circulation, lest there should be anything that would impair the authority or hurt the feelings of those who sit in the seats of the mighty, or interfere whatever with plans that are of especial interest to the favored few. If there be a hireling press in this land, it is because men are willing to accept the hireling price. We have great reason to be proud of the public press of Canada and the high standard of its editorials. It is almost unanimously out for the condemnation of all things that would impair the honesty, morality, or the honor of the people of the nation. A free press is one of the essential stones to the best interests of the people and the stability of the nation.

Men in Canada do not fear the gag, they are free to discuss theories, express convictions and advocate changes and no one dare molest them as long as they keep within legitimate bounds.

The Order's Honor Roll.

After pointing out the necessity of a system of education where the poor man's child will have the same advantages as the child of the rich, where they will contend for the same prizes, the pastor closed his splendid address by referring to the manner in which the Orange order had shown their loyalty to the Empire when 60,000 of them had enlisted and of this number 10,000 had paid the supreme price. There was no higher or nobler expression of loyalty for the welfare of the world and the security of British institutions.

Vote of Thanks.

When the lodges returned to their hall a resolution was unanimously passed extending the thanks of the order to Rev. Mr. Greatrix, the choir and the officials of St. James Methodist Church for their kindness and also to the Salvation Army and Adjt. McElhiney for the services of the band.

The secretary will forward copies of the resolution to the parties interested.

Magistrate Dumble Acquits Mrs. Sims of Keeping Whiskey for Sale---Text of Judgment.

Police Magistrate Dumble this morning dismissed the charge of selling liquor preferred against Mrs. Sims, and tried at the police court last week. The judgment is as follows:—

Daniel Thompson Against Fannie Sims

Charge under Section 40 of the Ontario Temperance Act, for exposing or keeping for sale liquor without a license.

I find on the evidence that this Mrs. Sims lived at 350 Charlotte Street, Peterborough, but two rooms of her house were by her rented to a man and woman, who occupied them, and that a lodger, Mr. Burns, occupied another room. He took his breakfast at her house and returned in the evenings about seven o'clock from the mills where he worked as boss dyer. That he supplied money to defendant to pay for liquor which she imported from Laurence Wilson Company, Montreal, by Dominion Express, the money being usually committed to defendant to enclose in the letter ordering the liquor, sometimes written by her in her own name and sometimes written by Mr. Burns, the lodger.

I do not find any clear evidence of the sale of liquor by the defendant, nor any giving of liquor. I simply find that she as agent for Mr. Burns ordered the liquor, paid the express charges when liquor came, and receipted for it; but it was Mr. Burns' liquor, and used by himself. He admits that he gave some of it away, and that he treated some of his friends when they called on him, but I do not find that Mrs. Sims sold any of the liquor or disposed of any of it, or even drank it. It is truly a very large quantity, 18 bottles holding 18 imperial quarts came to her house between May 26 to the 1st of July. It seems like an immoderate quantity to be used by one consumer, but as there is no direct evidence against Mrs. Sims I am constrained to dismiss the charge.

Dated July 9th, 1917.

UP TO DADDY.

MY hanky's got mefume on it,
An', wee, it smells so good!
I asked dad for some of it,
An' dad said that him would,
An' him reached up on to the shelf—
My dad's so awful tall—
An' got the bottle, 'cause me couldn't Reach up there at all.

Dad said, "I'm thinkin', Snookums,
If you was just a bit—
A wee bit—bigger than you are You'd not have asked for it."
I wonder if my daddy knew
How I squirmed round inside
When him said that, because I had
Dess reached an' tried an' tried.

I wonder 'f when dad putted it
On my hanky he knowed
That I had asked mamma for
Some of it 'fore her goed
To town. I didn't tell him
When her comes home again
An' askys where I getted it
Snookums will have to splain.

But dad'll be here when her comes,
An' him'll twist a curl
Around my ear, an' him'll say,
"Honey, don't scold my girl!"
An' mamma will roll up her eyes
An' say what can her do,
An' her'll say, "She's a spoiled girl,
An' it's because o' you."

But anyhow my hanky's got
Mefume on it, an', wee,
It smells so good that I am glad
My dad's so good to me!
An' him fordot to put it up,
Or maybe him don't cares,
An' I'm 'll put some on my doll
When daddy goes downstairs.

An' my doll will be smelly,
An' so will be my dress,
An' I'll mefume my hanky
A little more, I guess,
An' make the whole world smelly
'Fore mamma comes again,
An' den I reckon daddy
Will be asked to splain.

His Boots.

Major Green said to his servant one morning: "James, I have left my mess boots out. I want them soled."

"Yes, sir," the servant answered.

The major, dressing for dinner that night, said again, "I suppose, James, that you did as I told you about those boots?"

James laid 25 cents on the bureau. "Yes, sir," said he, "and this is all I could get for them, though the corporal who bought 'em said he'd given half a dollar if pay day hadn't been so far off."—Argonaut.

MEDALS AND RIBBONS.

Some of the Decorations Worn by Returned Men.

By the medal ribbons they wear one may know what campaigns our soldiers and sailors have seen, and what special distinctions they have won. Such medal ribbons are always worn on the left breast. Any ribbons worn on the right are representative of medals awarded outside the army or navy, and are usually those given with life-saving awards.

The medal ribbon of the Victoria Cross has first place of all decorations on the tunic of a soldier or the jacket of a sailor. The army V.C. winner is entitled to wear the rich dark red ribbon, the sailor a blue ribbon.

Other medal ribbons worn by soldiers akin in color to that of the V. C. are those that go with the Order of the Bath, the French Legion of Honour, the Long Service or Good Conduct medals. Each of the above-named ribbons is a plain red or crimson.

The blue riband of the naval V.C. might easily be mistaken for the ribbon of the Khedive's Bronze Star, the Meritorious Service, or the Royal Humane Society medal for saving life. All are plain blue, of slightly different shades.

Other medal ribbons sometimes seen in Canada are those worn by the winner of the D.S.O. (red centre, blue edge), the D.S.O. Cross (blue, white, blue), of the Distinguished Service medal (two white stripes on blue).

The Military Cross is easily known by the white edge and purple centre of the ribbon. The D.C.M. ribbon is red on each edge and blue in the centre, and the Military Medal owner wears a blue, white, red ribbon.

Some members of the C.E.F. wear the medal ribbons that go with the special medals awarded for bravery in the field, but no authorised medal ribbon has been issued for this war. The "Allied" ribbon worn by some men is not an official award, and may be worn by anyone without challenge.

What marks the warrior who has been wounded is a strip of gold braid sewn on the tunic sleeve for each time wounded, or a strip of silver braid if sickness caused him to be invalided home.

Original members of the First Canadian Division may be recognised by the color of their shoulder straps, blue for the infantry, red for the artillery, A.S.C., A.M.C., and yellow for the cavalry.

Members of the C.E.F. who have been at the front are given a button centred with a shield bearing the Union Jack, and inscribed, "For Service at the Front."

Men invalided home from England get a button with the Union Jack square in the centre, and the lettering, "For Service Overseas."

The various colored and shaped patches worn on the sleeve by returned soldiers were first issued to the Canadian troops at the Somme, to enable the officers and men of various divisions, brigades, and battalions to be recognized readily.

The First Division men wear one large red patch on the upper part of the arm, and the Second Division a blue patch. The brigades and battalions are also indicated by smaller colored patches below the large ones, green being the mark of the First Brigade, red for the Second, and blue for the Third, and the shape of the patch indicates the battalions bearing them, circular for the First, half circle for the Second, triangular for the Third, and a small square for the Fourth.

A Geological Discovery.

The minuteness and perfect state of preservation of some of the remains found in the rocks of organisms which lived untold millions of years ago is beautifully shown by the researches of Professor F. W. Oliver on an archaic type of seed discovered in the lower coal measures of Lancashire. These seeds are only about one-fifth of an inch long, but under the microscope their integument is seen to possess ten ribs, which project like little arms from the top of nucleus. Many pollen cells were discovered and these have been sectioned, and what appear to be fossil sperms, occurring in pairs in each pollen cell, have been detected. The plants that bore these seeds have not yet been traced.

Synopsis of Canadian Northwest Land Regulations

The sole head of a family or any male over 18 years old, who was at the commencement of the present war, and has since continued to be, a British subject or a subject of an allied or neutral country, may homestead a quarter-section of available Dominion Land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for District. Entry by proxy may be made on certain conditions. Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of land in each of three years.

In certain districts a homesteader may secure an adjoining quarter-section as pre-emption. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Reside six months in each of three years after earning homestead patent and cultivate 50 acres extra. May obtain pre-emption patent as soon as homestead patent on certain conditions.

A settler after obtaining homestead patent, if he cannot secure a pre-emption, may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.00.

Holders of entries may count time of employment as farm laborers in Canada during 1917, as residence duties under certain conditions.

When Dominion Lands are advertised or posted for entry, returned soldiers who have served overseas and have been honorably discharged, receive one day priority in applying for entry at local Agent's Office (but not Sub-Agency). Discharge papers must be presented to Agent.

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH

Sound the dear old bugle, boys, it was a glorious day;
There were boxing bouts in almost every state, they say;
And many heads wese busted from New York to Frisco bay, ...
While you were fighting in Flanders.

Chorus

Hooray! Hooray! We've coined a lot of dough;
Hooray! Hooray! We thought you'd like to know;
We will get the money while you fellows get the foe,
While you are fighting in Flanders.

A Warlike People

The Americans are a nation of fighters, all right. There were twenty-five or thirty bouts July 4, and Benny Leonard and Johnny Kilbane have just signed to fight July 25 for $10,000.

Instead of American statesmen exhorting the housewives of the nation to purchase only one-fourth of a pound of, instead of the usual one-half pound of round steak for the family dinner, why not turn their attention to the exponents of the more or less noble art of self-defense who are getting war-time prices for their stuff?

Although Mill and Ricardo and a host of other political economists long ago bombed the ancient theory out of its trench, it no doubt will be contended by some that boxers keep money in circulation and thereby produce prosperity. One trouble with the contention is that boxers don't put money in circulation. They immediately tie up their earnings in a big stone, to dazzle their tap-room admirers and manicure ladies in barber shops where they get their necks shaved.

However, one must remember that boxing shows make our blood red, and with porteins costing about 25c a portein at the grocery and meat market maybe boxing bouts must be used as a substitute.

Quick Work

Hans Wagner was manager of the Pirates for two days, and evidently knew what he was about when he refused to serve. On Hugo Bezdek's assuming charge, the freebooters dropped two before the new boss could begin to boss.

The End of a Perfect Day

It was a summer's evening, and the Pirates' work was done;
They'd played another game of ball
And some one else had won.

Ty Cobb, like the Mississipi river, keeps right on going. He made two hits yesterday and has hit safely in thirty-five consecutive games.

A small boy from the sand lots of Detroit was pitching to the Tiger batters in practice yesterday and suffered a fractured arm from a line drive. He was taken to a hospital. This is a practice that should be stopped by a league rule.

Umpire Billy Evans was right again yesterday when he ordered both the Tigers and White Sox to quit hurling epithets at each other from the benches.

It never pays for a player—not even Ty Cobb—to trifle with Buck Weaver around third base. In the eighth inning yesterday, when Cobb slid in safe at that station, Buck and Ty engaged in a little repartee. Buck let a throw slip away from him as a ruse to lure Cobb off the bag, but it didn't work. Then Cobb, just to have a little sport at Buck's expense, made a feint to score. The Sox third socker pounced on the Georgia peach and if the field umpire had been looking Cobb might have been called out.

Wouldn't Work Twice.

In a Canadian camp somewhere in England a second George Washington has been found. He, in company with several others, had been granted four days' leave, and, as usual, wired for extension. In fact, it was so original that it has been framed, and now hangs in a prominnt spot in the battalion orderly rooms. It ran as follows:

"Nobody dead, nobody ill; still going strong, having a good time, and got plenty of money. Please grant extension."

And he got it!

Relics of Hudson Bay

Some rusty relics were dug up at Toledo, Wash., while a man was digging a hole. They consisted of human bones and three rusted knives, all of the same pattern, an old coffee pot and an odd shaped bottle. It is thought the knives are of the Hudson Bay Company period.

Length of Animals' Lives

Whales seem, on the whole, to be particularly gifted with longevity; those which supply us with whalebone are supposed to live for several centuries. Elephants rank fairly high; in India they often attain the age of one hundred years.

STAND ERECT, PLEASE!

Simple Secret That Makes One's Carriage Perfect

The slouch is neither fashionable nor healthy; the over-balanced straight front has departed; round shoulders have long since gone from style; the military bearing is the thing. There is an old family in France, once bearing a famous title, which was known for the wonderful bearing of its women. Some thought it was the innate sense of being well born, the pride of race or position that caused the erect, easy grace of the women but it wasn't. The poorest of their peasants held the secret had they chosen to use it.

While the women were small children they were made to stand flat against a door three times each day for five-minute periods. The head was against the door, the shoulders flattened against it, the hands and elbows touched, as well as back and heels. This brought the body to its perfect position, spine straight, chest out, shoulders in, balance just above the ball of the foot. Pretty soon this erect position became second nature.

A stiffly straight position is neither healthy nor beautiful. It gives one an appearance of being purse proud, affected or self conscious. While the body should be held straight, there should be a freedom of muscle and a relaxed look to make one really graceful. Try this exercise of standing against a door a few moments each day. Presently the muscles will become accustomed to the pose, so that, while you will never unconsciously take that exact posture, you will at least stand straighter and more firmly than before. And remember that grace lies in relaxed lines. Do not walk or stand rigidly, or you will lose all claims to beauty.

DANCING FOR BAD FEET

Other Ways to Keep Feet Healthy or Cure Them

Mothers are undoubtedly responsible for a great deal of this unnecessary suffering, by not seeing that their growing girls are properly shod. Not for a moment would one advocate ugly wide-toed shoes which would arouse the derision of school-fellows. Almost all bootmakers keep footwear which is straight on the inner sides. Physical exercises and dancing strengthen and improve the shape of the feet. For the woman whose feet are already disfigured the services of an expert in pedicure are indispensible to cure and keep away corns. Women of gouty constitutions are very liable to corns and should be careful to reduce the amount of acidity in the system by careful diet and by doses of some harmless saline corrective.

One of the most painful of foot troubles is a soft corn between the toes. This may cause, if long neglected, excruciating pain, and even inflammation and suppuration, and in many cases is practically incurable, though a clever chiropodist's treatment at regular intervals will minimize the discomfort.

To keep the feet in healthy condition they should be washed every night in warm water with a mild antiseptic soap. Gouty people experience great relief from foot troubles by soaking the feet twice a week in hot water with washing soda added, which bath is also helpful in the case of hard corns. Any hard skin should be gently rubbed down with pumice stone and the nails cut squarely across while soft, with sharp scissors. Ingrowing toe nails should be treated without delay by a chiropodist, as if neglected a painful surgical operation becomes necessary.

SEEDS OF SUSPICION

Children Learn To Suspect Too Easily —Result in Deceit

F[illegible] not necessarily an [illegible] quality, is one which [illegible] earliest youth is apt to be absorbed from petty sources and like an ordinary garden weed thrives with apparently no cultivation. To the natural susceptibility of childhood nothing is more permeating in its influence, and to live in its atmosphere is but to insure certain forms of deceit.

To a child who has been lovingly and simply reared the trust thus instilled in him both reflects character and affects it and teaches the only true standard by which to judge all things, and just as trust educates us, so also does suspicion degenerate.

"A man is known by the company he keeps"; this is an infallible test for his thoughts and desires and ambitions and loves are thus revealed—he gravitates naturally to his most congenial sphere," and so, if through suspiciousness we feed and influence young lives, how can we wonder at their retaining a relish for deceit in after years!

Grape Blanc Mange

Grape juice blanc mange is made in this way: Add three tablespoonsful of granulated sugar sifted to two of corn starch and to a little cold water, stir smooth, and then add to a cupful of water boiling with three cupsful of grape juice. Boil for four minute and pour into small molds or dessert dishes. Serve with whipped cream and a custard in which lemon peel or orange peel has been steeped.

WHERE SHIPBUILDERS BECAME POLITICIANS

Leading Public Men of Maritime Provinces Made Fortunes from Shipyards—Long and Honorable List

Lucian, in Vancouver News-Advertiser, gives some most interesting facts about shipbuilding in the Maritime Provinces in the olden days. He says: The revival of wooden shipbuilding recalls to mind a great number of Canadian public men who were shipbuilders in the early days. The first four Ministers of Marine and Fisheries in Canada were shipbuilders and ship owners. Hon. Peter Mitchell, one of the fathers of Confederation, built ships at or near Newcastle in his own county of Northumberland, New Brunswick. The next was Sir Albert Smith, a former Premier of the Province, who, though a lawyer by profession, built and owned a good many ships, and accumulated thereby a substantial fortune. The third was Hon. J. C. Pope, of Prince Edward Island, who was a practical shipbuilder, like his father. Then came the Hon. A. W. McLean, afterwards Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, who with a partner, built a number of ships at Great Village, in his own county of Colchester.

Some Other Builders

Among other shipbuilders who were in public life one could mention, Hon. John Lefurgy, Senator Yeo, Capt. Walsh, Lieut. Governor and Senator Howlan, and Hon. William Strong, of Prince Edward Island; Mr. Moffat, of Restigouche, N.B.; Hon. Robert Young, of Gloucester; John A. Covert, of Sunbury, and Mr. Murchie, of Charlotte; Hon. Josiah Wood, later lieutenant-governor of New Brunswick, formerly member for Westmorland; Senator Muirhead, of Northumberland; Gaius Turner, of Albert County; the Troop family, of St. John, and George F. Baird, of Queen's County.

Nova Scotian List

From Nova Scotia one might mention such men as James W. Carmichael and the McGregor's, of New Glasgow, Pictou County; the Kitchens, McKenzies, and McLellans, of River John; the Primroses, the Ives, the Yorstons, of Pictou. The Hon. Edward Kenny, at one time lieutenant-governor of Nova Scotia, and his son Thomas, were among the largest ship owners in the province, and had an interest in ships built in many shipyards. Senator Northrup, of Halifax, built and owned ships. The Kaulbachs, father and son, of Lunenburg, were large shipowners, and both were representatives of the county.

STUDY ONE'S OWN FARM

Soils Differ and General Advice is Not Enough

The soil is the farmer's capital—his workshop. Upon it is founded the whole business of farming, and upon its fertility will depend in large measure the success of the farmer's operations. Too often it is not given the proper care nor is sufficient intelligence exercised in its use.

The plant derives certain substances necessary to its development from the soil; the most important of these are nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash. The farmer should know whether his soil contains these in sufficient quantities to meet the requirements of a maximum crop providing good cultivation is given, or if he is not getting satisfactory yields, he should find the cause. No two farms have been treated and cropped in past years in exactly the same way, which means that even adjoining farms may be entirely different so far as soil requirements are concerned. To bring it up to a state of profitable productiveness one farm may need a rotation different from the other or a different fertilizing treatment.

Bulletins, books, experts and governments help the farmers in many ways, but they cannot be expected to furnish every detail in a manner to fit his every need. The farmer himself should learn what his crops require, learn what his soil contains, learn what is lacking in his soil, learn how to supply the deficiencies, and then he may safely look for increased yields and greater profits. It involves study, but the farmer must work out many of his own problems on his own farm under his own conditions, by trial, by test, and by experiment.

PRODUCE NEW MAIZE

Indian Shewing Ability to Raise Grain on Arid Lands

The Indians have given the white man a new kind of maize, which will go another long step toward producing food. The great arid desserts of the west have been considered negligible so far as areas fit for the production of food crops without expensive irrigation.

The Pueblo Indians of Colorado have learned to raise a peculiar kind of maize which will resist drouth. This new kind of maize is planted by the Indians as deep as 18 inches in the ground. It sends forth a single root which penetrates deeply into the soil, finally reaching low enough levels to bring moisture to the plant.

By reason of peculiar formation this plant is able to push its way up through 18 inches of hard, dry desert soil and find the light. Because of the absolute aridity no weeds or other vegetation seek to crowd out the plant and therefore it bears quite freely. By putting all the energy into a single root, the Pueblo Indian maize is enabled to reach moisture and give life to the plant on the surface.

WONDERS OF NATURE

Snail Can Live Indefinitely Without Inhaling Air

It is a fact that while the common snail has lungs, heart, and a general circulation, being in every respect an air-breathing creature, it is, nevertheless, able to live indefinitely without inhaling the least bit of air. Experiments have clearly demonstrated that any or all of the usual life conditions may be removed in the case of the snail without terminating its existence or indeed impairing its functions. The snail retreats into its shell on the approach of frosty weather, and causes the opening or mouth of its shell to be hermetically sealed by a secretion of silky texture absolutely impervious to air and water. In this condition, therefore, it is plain that the little creature is deprived of three of the four elements of life—air, water and nourishment.

Armed Trawler Sinks Two Hun Seaplanes---Two German Ministers Forced to Resign by Kaiser---Germans Again Suffer Severely in Attacks on French Positions.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, July 10.—Today's official announcement says: "Last night we advanced our lines slightly east of Oosttaverne, one mile northeast of Wytschaete. South of the Ypres-Comines canal we carried out a successful raid and captured some prisoners."

GERMANS LOSE HEAVILY.

Paris, July 10.—Yesterday evening the enemy's bombardment reached a degree of violence in different sections of the Aisne front. Counter attacks on trenches north of Laffaux mill and southeast of Ailles were repulsed by our fire. Further east at about nine thirty p.m. the enemy made a strong attack on our positions at Hurtebise monument and Dragon. His effort was vain. Unable to approach our line enemy troops were dispersed, suffering severely.

Surprise attacks on advanced posts southeast of Corbeny in the vicinity of Courcy in the sector of Auberive and near Caurieres wood, cost the enemy losses and gave him no result. A number of prisoners remained in our hands. The night was calm elsewhere.

SPLENDID WORK DONE BY GUNNERS FROM CANADA

Accurate Aim Terrorizes Artillery Forces of Enemy---Young Ontario Aviator Wins Double Honors.

(By Stewart Lyon)

Canadian Headquarters in France, July 10.—In counter battery operations for the destruction of the enemy's heavy artillery very remarkable results have recently been obtained by groupe of Canadian heavies. Within a period of twenty-four hours more than a dozen of the enemy battery positions were put out of action.

Many direct hits on gun pits were noted, and practically every shell fired fell within fifty yards of an enemy gun, although these guns were in most cases from four to six miles distant and completely out of sight of the men engaged. The terrorising effect upon the enemy's gen crews of the sudden tornado of shell is very great. Even when the guns are not destroyed, the enemy usually changes his gun positions after an attack as a means of restoring the nerve of the gunners.

I hear remarkable stories of the exploits of a young aviator from the northern part of Ontario, whose record will soon equal that of the late Capt. Ball, most famous of the recent air fighters. This young Canadian already has won the Military Cross and the D. S. O. It is stated that he goes after his victim as directly as a hawk strikes its prey.

PTE. COPP OF 93rd BATTALION IS NOW AT KINGSTON HOSPITAL

Lieut. Elliott on Leave at Lindsay--Canteen at Barriefield.

Among the invalided soldiers that arrived at the Convalescent Home at Kingston yesterday were Private J. B. Copp of the 93rd Battalion.

The following interesting items were taken from the Barrifield Camp notes:

Home on Leave.

Lieut. Elliott, of Lindsay, who left Barriefield camp with the 109th Battalion, and who was later transferred to the 50th Battalion, was in the city on Saturday and reported to headquarters. Lieut. Elliott was wearing the ribbon of the Military Cross which he won on the field. He is home on leave for a few weeks and will return to the front.

A. & N. Vets to Have Canteen.

Permission was received from Ottawa yesterday by the Army and Navy Veterans to conduct a canteen at Barriefield camp, and to erect a recreation tent. The Veterans will take advantage of this permission and will erect a large marquee where reading and writing material will be furnished the soldiers. Several veterans have volunteered their services, and inasmuch as it is being conducted by men who know the needs of the soldiers, it will surely be well patronized.

MINISTER OF LABOR SURE OF WINTER'S COAL SUPPLY

Says Arrangements Will be Made With United States to Permit Importation of All Fuel Needed in Canada.

Ottawa, July 10.—"We are going to get all the coal we need this winter," said Hon. T. W. Crothers, when asked if he had anything to say regarding the control and licensing order placed by the United States on the export of coal to all countries, even to the countries of the allies, including Great Britain and her colonies and protectorates.

Mr. Crothers said that C. A. Magrath, the fuel controller., who is at present n New York, had made complete arrangements for Canada's normal supply of fuel from the United States.

Mr. Magrath has appointed an American expert on coal to look after the coal from the mines to the Canadian border to the points of distribution, it will be taken care of entirely by the railway commission under Sir Henry Dayton.

Mr. Crothers has had no report regarding the coal miners' strike in Southern Saskatchewan, which is said to have taken place. When asked if such a strike was a violation of the terms of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, he said it was, but the miners generally had always ignored that legislation.

In spite of the assurance given by Mr. Crothers considerable agitation has been caused in business circles by the proclamation of President Wilson regarding the licensing of exports, especially of coal, fuel, oils and steel. While it is not known how drastic the proposed embargo will be, the coal situation in Canada is such that any cessation of coal shipments is bound to cause an acute shortage in a very short time.

In Buffalo it is understood that commencing midnight of next Sunday no coal can be sent into Canada except under special license, and that for 60 days from that time there would be a very tight embargo against coal shipments to Canada.

Throughout the United States there is very little coal to meet the needs of the winter and the embargo is to enable all the cars and equipment to be used for the supplying of the many centres of the States that are now without fuel.

At the present time coal is a very scarce article in the City of Buffalo and many other cities are in a bad way for fuel. While the Buffalo dealers are not certain as to how tight the embargo will be they are extremely apprehensive and are making strenuous efforts to move a maximum amount across the border in the few days that remain.

Additional villages have been captured. More than one thousand prisoners were taken yesterday. The Russians also captured three field guns, many trench mortars and machine guns and a quantity of war material.

The enemy has retreated to Lomnica River. In two days the Rusisans penetrated to a depth of 6.203 the enemy positions west of Stanishlau.

Union Cabinet With Old Leaders Out

Is the Latest Talk at Ottawa Over the Political Situation.

Ottawa, July 10.—The latest rumor amid the many rumors now afloat respecting the political situation is one to the effect that a nalonal governmen may soon be formed without either Sir Robert Borden or Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The house is evidently hurrying through the conscription bill, which may be sent up to the senate by the last of this week and the government will then be face to face with the alternative of putting through a resolution for an extension of the parliamentary term or preparing without delay for a general election. On all sides there is a feeling that the conscription bill cannot be properly enforced, except by a stable government with an unmistakable mandate from the people. Hence the feeling that a government of some kind should b formed which can confidently appeal to the country and come back to power wth an overwhelming majority.

One Hundred Employes Killed and Hundreds of Others Injured in Most Daring Air Raid Ever Attempted Since War Broke Out---Story of the Flight.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Amsterdam, July 10. — Les Nouvelles of Maestricht reports that Dutch workmen who were laid off at the Krupp works on account of the destruction of the buildings in the recent French air raid assert that a quarter of the Essen plant was destroyed. The material damage is placed at millions of francs and it is said one hundred employes were killed and hundreds of others, including forty five French prisoners, wounded.

A Dairing Raid.

Grand Hadquarters of the French Army in France, July 10.—The most daring air raid yet carried out against the great Krupp munition works at Essen was recounted to a staff correspondent of the Associated Press by Sergeant Maxime Gallois, who defied all the German anti-aircraft defences and bombarded the heart of the German armament producing factories with high explosives, crossed the German front line twice, flew over many Rhenish cities and reached home scatheless.

The whole flight lasted seven hours, during which the daring French aviator was guided only by the moon and stars and the compass, as the voyage was made in the darkest hours of the night, the destination being reached exactly according to plan. Sergeant Gallois narrated his story in the simplest manner. He said:

"Four of us, Lieutenant Ardisson de Perdiguier, Sergeant Durand, another comrade, and myself, left our base at nightfall Friday with the intention of reaching Essen. Soon afterwards we ran into foggy weather and lost sight of each other. I flew at an altitude of 1,200 metres and passed over Metz and Thionville, following the course of the River Moselle, which, however, rapidly disappeared in the mist.

"The batteries fired at me crossing the Rhine, and as I passed over Metz searchlights played about the sky. At Thionville I heard another airplane nearby, but I made it out to be Ardisson's. Aftrewards I was compelled to travel by the aid of the compass, the stars and the moon.

"A Blaze of Luminosity."

"At Treves I saw a heavy bombardment, which I calculated was directed at my comrade. Therefore, I knew I was travelling in the right direction. I did not see Coblenz. I saw the reflection of the moon on the Rhine and found Bonne. From there to Dusseldorf there was a regular sea of electricity, which increased as I got farther north.

"Cologne was a blaze of luminosity, and at Dusseldorf there were all kinds of lights, blue, red and white. All the time the anti-aircraft guns fired as I passed, and around Cologne the gunners were very accurate in the range.

"Leaving there, I saw, like cliffs on the horizon, a brilliant illumination, which seemed kilometres in length, stretching to the left of Essen, while southward was another long line of lights coming from the factories. Arriving over Essen I rose to about 2,000 metres. I circled around, searching for a place where the lights from the worshops appeared densest. Then I threw the first bomb. After counting ten I dropped the second, and then the remainder of the ten I carried at similar intervals. I could not tell whether the bombs exploded, but they probably did. It was impossible to distinguish their effect, owing to the flaming furnace chimneys.

"My duty done, I turned homeward, not having seen my comrades again. The motor worked with wonderful regularity all the time. I came back exactly the same way as I went, and was fired at many times.

"I was thoroughly exhausted, and was suffering from my eyes, which were affected by the strain and wind, as I had lost both pairs of goggles at the start, and was often obliged to put my head outside in order to see the direction. When nearing the base, owing to the darkness I could not tell exactly where I was. I thought possibly I was still over the German lines, and decided to continue westward as long as the petrol lasted. I had a few litres left and was driving onward, when suddenly I recognized a prearranged signal and managed to land just at dawn at the same place from which I had departed. The distance covered was 466½ miles."

Sergeant Gallois, who is thirty-eight years of age, applied four times for the Aviation Corps unsuccessfully because he was declared to be too old, but was accepted on the fifth application, although he had no knowledge of flying. He rapidly learned piloting and overcame the difficulties in night flying, which enabled him to carry out his latest expedition with success. He participated in several other bombing flights over the German lines.

AVIATOR PAGE KILLED WHEN LIGHTNING STRIKES MACHINE

Was Flying Alone in Electrical Storm---Accidents at Camp Borden.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

PETERBOROUGH, TUESDAY, JULY 10, 1917

IF NOT THIS, WHAT?

"I wonder if those who hesitate about what they should do on this bill reflect that at the present moment in France, as the Teuton is compelled to retire he is taking every French female above the age of fourteen years, to work, to suffer, and God knows what else. These are the recruiting agents that appealed to the wide Dominions of this Empire. May I add, not uncharitably, I hope, that if men will not listen to this, neither would they listen if one rose from the dead."—Dr. Michael Clark in the House of Commons.

PENSIONS FOR THE DISABLED.

THE CROWD that was waiting at the Grand Trunk depot the other evening when the train came in from Port Hope are not likely soon to forget the sad spectacle afforded by Private Bishop, of Keene, as he made his way out of the coach. It is seldom a sadder and more complete physical wreck is ever seen. The returned veteran is suffering from the effects of German gas and is all but helpless. He has been under the best hospital treatmnt for months, first in Europe and later at the convalescent home at Whitby, but all to no aparent purpose. The man's disability seems final and complete.

And all this Private Bishop has endured on behalf of his Empire and his friends at home. Now that he has practically given his all—his life—for his country, what is Canada to do for him in return? If the Pension Board is satisfied, after an investigation, that the young man is totally disabled, he will receive the munificent pension of $40 a month, a sum barely sufficient under present conditions to preserve such life as the service has left him.

A man as helpless as Private Bishop appears to be will require the constant services of an attendant. Provisions made by the Pension Board in such cases should take note of this fact and should be for two rather than for one person. This principle has been recognised in the pension scale of the United States following the Civil War. In that country a veteran so disabled as to require the services of an attendant is entitled to a pension of $100 a month, and this is paid without regard to his rank in the army. A private and a general are of the same standing in the eyes of the pension authorities when it comes to making some return for their services.

It has been proposed that the Canadian pension for the totally disabled be placed at $100 a month instead of the $480 a year now allowed privates, and that this be allowed, no matter what the rank of the recipient.

Capt. Burnham believes in a flexible scale, that is one that can be increased or lowered in accordance with the rise and fall in living expenses. It is clear that the present allowance is too low. Private Bishop could, if his health had been spared him, earn from $3 to $4 a day at almost any kind of ordinary labor. If he had never answered the call of Empire, his situation today would be vastly different from what it is. Is he to be allowed to remain a martyr to duty and continue to make sacrifices until the end of his days?

Every day, men lacking limbs lost in battle, others hobbling along on crutches, are seen on the streets of Peterborough. If the country is really grateful for their faithful and unselfish service, this gratitude should find expression in some tangible form. The Government has some proposition for more liberal allowances under consideration. The pension scale originally agreed upon has once already been revised upward, and the indications are that it will be revised again. Urgent necessity for an increase is admitted on all sides. Men will enlist more readily, making the financial sacrifice that in every case such a step entails, if they can be assured that they will not be doomed to a life of poverty if they are disabled or that their wives and children will be properly provided for if their natural protector falls in battle.

WHY RECRUITING FELL OFF.

THE POLITICIAN or the newspaper that claims that the voluntary system failed in Canada owing to a lack of support on the part of the Government is simply playing up one of the cheapest available brands of politics. The voluntary system failed for the simple reason that the country was combed clean of the young men who of their own accord were willing to enlist. Sir Sam Hughes charges that his colleagues in the Cabinet advised him something like a year ago to go easy on recruiting and not strip the country too bare of labor.

Premier Borden denies that he ever made such a suggestion, and the word of Sir Robert is sufficient. If any manufacturers made such a request, it was not likely to affect the situation and least of all to have any influence with Sir Sam Hughes himself. Sir Sam was given a free hand, or at least he always seemed to act on his own initiative and to ignore anything in the shape of advice, whether it was offered by outsiders or by his colleagues in the Cabinet.

It is idle to attempt to fasten upon the Government the responsibility for the necessity of a resort to compulsion. Any young man in Canada who is eligible for military service and who is yet in civilian garb has not one single valid excuse for holding back. There has never been a time since the war broke out that the call for recruits was not urgent, and the opportunities for enlistment unlimited. All branches of the service were in need of men, and the choice was left with those who were asked to volunteer. If a man preferred the navy to the land forces, if he had an inclination for the artillery rather than for the infantry, the choice was left to himself. The aviation corps was open to others, and for those who could not qualify for any of these departments, the forestry battalion and the construction camps were still open.

The recruiting authorities never wearied of the work in Peterborough and left no stone unturned. No more strenuous and intelligent efforts were ever made to raise a battalion in this city than those employed to recruit the 247th Battalion. A census of the district were taken, clubs were formed, co-operation was invited, and all in vain. The work had eventually to be abandoned, even though recruiting meetings were held and addressed by members of the Government, private citizens and men who had worked their way up from the ranks in actual service.

The young men of this city refused to volunteer even for the home defence corps. That fact has certainly been established beyond question. The Government had only one alternative, and that was to resort to conscription. The measure is now before the country, and the principle has been endorsed by an overwhelming majority in parliament. All that remains is to arrange final details and then put the Act in operation. The necessity for compulsion is no more the fault of the Government in Canada than it is that of the authorities in the centre of the Empire itself.

NOTES AND COMMENT.

IS IT TO BE win the war or win the election?

QUEBEC is solid, and the same can be said of the Central Powers.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN is the man of the hour; Sir Wilfrid Laurier the man of the past.

THE MAN who will not enlist for $1 10 a day is not likely to see his duty any clearer if his pay is doubled.

ONE OF THE compensations of the war is the bringing to the front of such a man as Kerensky, Russia's new minister of war.

AT ALL EVENTS, Sir Sam Hughes must admit that it was not German gold—of which he talks so much—that incited the activities of Mr. Allison.

Wit and Wisdom

Tommy—What was your job in peace times Shorty?
Shorty—War correspondent.

Dentist—What tooth is it that troubles you, Sam?
Pullman Porter—Lower five, sah.

Mrs. Gabble—I met Mr. Brown to-day while I was shopping.
Her Husband—That so? What did you have to say?

"So your husband took you to the ball game?"
"Yes. I wish I could make him talk to the cook the way he talked to that umpire."

Chollie—When I was a boy, you know, the doctor said if I didn't stop smoking cigarettes I should become feeble-minded.
Bessie—And why didn't you stop?

The judge was at dinner in the new household when the young wife asked:

"Did you ever try any of my biscuits, Judge?"

"No," said the Judge, "I never did, but I dare say they deserve it."

Edith—That Mr. Dubleigh you introduced me to is a fine dancer; he is so light on his feet.
Marie—When you get better acquainted with him you'll discover he's light at both ends.

Actor—I say, old man, I wish you'd advance me $5 and take it out of my first week's salary.
Manager—But, my dear fellow, suppose it happened that I couldn't pay your first week's salary, where should I be?

"But, my dear," said his wife, after he had complained about the food the new cook had brought in, "You know during these terrible times it is absolutely necessary that we make great sacrifices."

"Oh, of course, but what I object to is that cook making hers in the form of a burnt offering."

As the policeman came suddenly upon them in the back alley, all but one of the newsboys ran. The little chap, as if conscious of the righteousness of his cause, stood his ground and looked the officer bravely in the face.

"You boys were fighting, were you?" asked the officer.

"Yes, sir," replied the boy. Jimmie McGowan stole two of my papers, and I was trying to settle the case out of court."

Sometimes, to be sure, the opening is so unfortunate as to incur instant resentment and positively invite refusal. Take the case of a diminutive man of kindly appearance who was accosted by a seedy purist with the words:

"Sir, I am looking for a little succour"

"Well," snorted the wearer of the size 13½ collar, "do I look like one?"

A young man who was not particularly entertaining, was monopolizing the attention of a pretty debutante wih a lot of uninteresting conversation.

"Now, my brother," he remarked in the course of a dessertation on his family, "is just the opposite of me in every respect. Do you know my know my brother?"

"No," the debutante replied demurely, "but I should like to."

MEN'S STYLES FOR NEXT YEAR

He walked carefully from one end of the Gold room to the other. Then he turned around and walked back again. Having done this he raised his arms over his head and bowed. Whereupon he broke into a short snappy trot and circled the chamber, ending with a few revolutions of the body—and disappeared.

He was a model—a gentleman model. On his shapely figure were draped a gentleman's clothes. Around the walls of the room were stationed the members of the National Association of Clothing Designers. They are having a convention in Chicago.

Genuine "Gentlemen" Models

The convention features five genuine expert gentlemen models. Each was a master of the craft, each as he walked with the latest style incasing his Adonis limbs, his Apollinaris torso, was the envy of the spectators, gentlemen all, whoe sat or slouched about the chamber. It was the duty of each model to emerge ten tims from the dressing room, thus gladdening the eye with ten different styles. Fifty styles in all were exhibited. There were no kilts. The styles chiefly ran to conservative cuts.

G. M. Gray, chairman of the display committee explained that the styles revealed were those which woulld be fashionable in 1918. Thus the proceedings were a lifting of the veil of the future.

Beauty in No Way Impaired

Mr. Gray pointed out further that the absence of cuffs on trousers and sleeves, the absence of doofunnies, doohickies and doo-doos on coat and trousers in no way impaired the beauty of the male figure. These things, the designers sought to reveal, necessity being their inspiration, are artificial anyway. Pleats, tucks, ruffles, patch pockets, belts, folds and even lapels were absent from most of the 1918 styles.

"It's all in how you wear them," said one of the designers. "Look-" He, the model, was making the third circle of the room. Grace and dignity combined themselves with an elegant nonchalance which brought salvos of applause from the spectators. He, the model, acknowledged the demonstration with a slight inclination of the head, and after pirouetting thrice, vanished from the scene.

No Recruiting by Jail Delivery

(Chicago News)

Perhaps the attitude of Mayor Thompson toward the war is responsible in part at least for the suggestion said to have been made by Joseph Siman, Mayor Thompson's appointee as superintendent of the Chicago House of Correction, that inmates of that institution consenting to enlist for service in the army would be granted pardons by the Mayor. The offer is as preposterous as it is insulting to the men who wear the nation's military uniform.

Fathers and mothers whose clean minded and patriotic sons are preparing for army service will be reassured by the prompt rebuke of Siman's outrageous suggestion by Capt. Franklin R. Kenney, commandng officer of the Unted States army for the Chicago recruiting district. Capt. Kenney rightly characterizes the suggestion as an insult to the army. Moreover, it could not be carried out without perjury. The laws of the United States require each applicant for enlistment to make oath that he has never been imprisoned under sentence of a court in any reformatory, jail or penitentiary.

The uniform of the United States soldier is a decoration of honor.

Why is it that some persons in positions of responsibility cannot recognize the dignity of army service and the patriotic motives that should inspire enlistment for that service? Chicago is already sufficiently disgraced before the world by Mayor Thompson's attitude toward the nation's participation in the war. Subordinates of that singular executive should be careful not to place indignities upon the American soldier, stupidly or otherwise.

Pay Your Debt To Your Defenders

Turn Your Luxuries Into Comforts For Those Who Have Sacrificed Most.

"Self-sacrifice, self-denial and service lie at the basis of the highest personal and national development."
Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance.

IS it nothing to you that men from all round you have sacrificed home and salary, safety and life, to defend your home as well as their own?

Is it nothing to you that their wives and families tremblingly scan each casualty list, and pale at the step of the postman or telegraph messenger?

Can you see others giving their dearest, without feeling that you must do something yourself? Do you wonder what to do?

You can at least save—and lend your savings to the nation. Canada needs every dollar her loyal sons and daughters can spare, to meet the growing expenses of the struggle.

Every dollar you invest in Canadian War Savings Certificates helps the nation to deal generously with those who are defending you.

Certificates in denominations of $25, $50 and $100, repayable in three years, may be purchased at any Bank or Money Order Post Office at $21.50, $43 and $86 respectively. This means over 5% interest—making them a profitable as well as a patriotic investment.

THE SALVING OF A DERELICT

By MAURICE DRAKE

inquiry into his affairs showed nothing but confusion—confusion more confounded everywhere as the search proceeded. Misappropriation of trust funds had supplied most of the material for his final two years of reckless gambling, but he had no more confined himself to one means of raising money than he had limited his methods of scattering it again.

He had acted behind the scenes in the flotation of two or three fraudulent companies; one, a barefaced attempt to raise money on a barren patch of useless land in the south of Iceland, as recently as a month before his death.

Even had the name of the dead man appeared on the prospectus, it is more than doubtful if clients would have been found sufficiently confiding to invest in such a wild-cat venture.

The company was a mere empty sham, devised with calculating cruelty solely for the purpose of ruining one man, an old retired sea captain, once master of a steamer trading from Scotland to Reykjavik, and now living at a tiny Somersetshire seaport. Averil had met him when staying at Minehead two years before, and found him obsessed by a single idea. The old man had seen the sulphur works of Iceland in his earlier days, and the lying prospectus with its bogus list of directors was aimed at his little capital alone. He invested ten thousand pounds in debentures—mortgages on the most worthless bleak wilderness in that generally unproductive island—and a few hundreds in ordinary stock.

When the crash came, he with hundreds of others, was ruined hopelessly, and after wandering, a plaintive, shaking wreck, about the courts during the inquiry, went back to his little home and died, leaving a daughter to seek her own living in a world not over-kind to the untrained single woman worker.

Other coups of Herman Averil's had brought him greater gain. It is doubtful if more than half of the ten thousand and odd pounds had gone into his pocket. In a hundred other ways he had ruined more victims, executed more brilliantly daring acts of criminality; but nothing more clearly showed his singleness of purpose, his relentless disregard of the ill-fortune of others.

Half a dozen conversations with a chance acquaintance of a holiday, and in his hour of need he could find time amid all the tangled skein of greater affairs to stoop to this little quarry. His memory never failed him. The old sailor's jeering at the primitive methods of the Icelandic sulphur miners, his laboriously acquired knowledge of the sulphur market—his favorite themes of conversation—were all committed to memory; and when he required the old man's savings he obtained the necessary information, bought the three wretchedest deserted farms he could find in the syssel or parish of Lancholtsky-Dyrnolacy, prepared his prospectus, and robbed his victim ruthlessly and with certainty.

Greater frauds, with farther-reaching consequences, occupied most of the time during the inquiry, but the memory of the pitiful questionings of the old ruined sailor lingered in Laurence Averil's mind for years.

Probably because it had been schemed towards the end of his life his father had taken but little trouble to disguise the dastardly nature of the affair, and no particulars were lacking. Mainly at the request of the purchaser of the shares, the vendor of the property—himself an intimate friend of the dead man's—was called and his evidence was conclusive.

"I sold the three farms to the deceased for twenty pounds," he said. "They are called Uthlid, Haukadal and Sveinardal. No, there is no sulphur on them—never was, and never will be. He told me he wanted them because they lay across the line of a projected road between Langholt and Asaa. He said he was going to give the land to the two parishes on condition that they built the road. Farms? Yes, they were farms once—that's how they come to have names; but now they're covered by a skin of lava from six to six-and-twenty feet deep, that came down in the great 1783 eruption. There are a few patches of the original ground uncovered, but they are surrounded by the lava and are difficult to get at, even if it were worth while to try. They were never good ground—broken black shale with a little summer pasture on them at the best; bad even for Iceland farms—and on the good ones they think nothing of feeding their ponies on fish heads and seaweed in the winter. Sulphur? No, not a speck. Why, the volcanic deposits aren't more than thirty feet deep anywhere, and, as I tell you, they overlie black, poor, shaly land. Besides, they're recent—just lava that overflowed about a hundred years ago—no good to man or beast. Do I know Iceland? Yes, well. I lived there fifteen years, and have had business dealings with the place for the last thirty. I live at Leith, and a fish buyer and trawler owner. How did I buy this land? I didn't buy it. I bought some land close to Langholt village, and had this thrown in, because there was some doubt about my actual boundary where a little lava had overflowed the edge of my ground. There was a big boulder in the centre of the Uthlid ground which the eruption didn't cover, and I had this aching desolation thrown into my purchase, so that I could have a definite landmark to swear to. That's all. Is the ground worth anything? No, not a farthing a square mile."

The old sailor despairingly left the court and went to his ruined home to die. He was buried almost before the official receiver had elucidated the whole of the facts of the more important affairs entangled in the Averil failure. To officials engaged in examining the keen business men who, despite their acumen, had yet been entrapped by Herman Averil's specious dexterity, this one case seemed unimportant; but it was long before Laurence, though beggared himself, forgot the despairing eyes and shaking hands of his father's unhappy victim.

His own position was hopeless enough. Although of average intelligence, endowed with a receptive mind and a retentive memory, he knew no business, had learned no profession. He had been through Harrow and Merton as many of the sons of our richer men of the middle classes do go. Having no need for application, he had never been a reading man in the severer sense of the word. His performances were creditable—nothing more.

Tall and lean, he was as near physically perfect as a man of twenty-four should be, and, thanks perhaps to his taste for simple living and the abhorrence of excess he had inherited from his iron father, he enjoyed the riotously perfect health that is the birthright of clean-lived English youth.

His first offer of employment came from his father's friend, Clement Harper, the vendor of the Iceland property. Passing his hand through the young man's arm as they left the court, he did his best to comfort him.

"It's all no affair of yours at all, man," he said. "Unto the third and fourth generation's a cruel doctrine, I'm thinking. Come you and have some dinner with me to-night."

Laurence, lonely and wretched, was moved to the heart by the roughly spoken kindness, and gladly accepted the invitation. Over the coffee cups Harper made his offer.

"I've work for ye, lad, if ye'll take it. Ye can come and learn to keep a fish buyer's books, and be a bookkeeper to the end of your life, if ye will. Or I've mair than that for ye, if ye can stand the roughest, cruellest life on earth. Will ye go to sea on a trawler for a couple o' years, laddie, and learn the business from the bottom? Ye'll see how the worrk's done and where the boats go, and how the trawler skippers worrk their shares of the catch. Learrn it all, lad, until ye can worrk a trawler yersel', and then come back and help me wi' the business"; and Laurence, inclined from childhood for the sea, gladly accepted the offer.

CHAPTER III.

The business of the courts and the arrangement of his own private affairs detained Laurence in London for another couple of months, and it was late in September when he arrived at Leith. He went straight to Harper's offices on the Fish Quay. Clement Harper received him cordially, a little brusquely perhaps, owing to the exigencies of business, but with a warm handgrip and words of encouragement.

"Glad to see ye, lad," he said. "Ye'll sail on Wednesday, the day after to-morrow. Have ye a sea kit?"

Laurence nodded. On the sale of his little yacht he had retained all such articles of clothing—guernseys, oilskins, sou'westers, and sea boots—as he thought might be of use in this new seafaring venture.

"That's well. The worrk'll tear your nice silk-faced oilies to rags in a couple of voyages, but they'll likely serrve ye that long. Now I'm a busy man until four o'clock. Go ye down to the waterside and see your new craft for yourself, and come back to me then. Ye'll stay with me when ashore until ye can get a room of your own—but ye'll not be ashore much. The boat's called the Fairy Belle, and a vairy belle bateau ye'll find her." He laughed joyously at his outrageous pun, and pushed Laurence towards the door. "Be off wi' ye. I'm a busy man the day."

Accustomed as he had been to the appearance of trawlers at sea, Laurence's heart misgave him when he looked down on the disordered deck of the Fairy Belle from the wharfside.

There are no smarter sailors in the world than the fishermen of the northern ports, and when on the great waters their boats are handled in a way that can only excite admiration from the yachtsman who knows his work. Patched though their sails may be and rough their gear, never a line is out of place, and the picturesque coloring of their stained canvas only emphasizes the fact that every sail is doing its utmost work and doing it well. The boats, though often old and even leaky, miracles of discomfort and inconvenience, are yet fast, and, handled as they are by men trained on them from boyhood, they sail like yachts—and racing yachts at that. There is perhaps no lovelier sight to be seen on our coasts than a fleet of trawlers, their sails every shade of red and yellow from deep crimsons and tawny siennas to sulphur and gold and cream, twisting and circling round each other over the trawling grounds.

But in harbor, where a yacht is at her trimmest and cleanest, the slovenly appearance of the fishing vessel is painful to the eye. Her unhoused sails lie in great heaps of sodden canvas about her filthy decks. Her open holds exhale a most offensive odor of fish, and her decks and bulwarks are foul with scales and slime. Every rope, free from the tension of the fresh sea winds, hangs slack and dejected, and the whole vessel is a picture of disorder and neglect.

Laurence looked on the unsavory raffle with sore distaste; the rusty, shabby stove-pipe smoking above the tiny forecastle; the array of patched clothing hung out to dry on the rigging; on a dirty, tousle-haired boy lounging by the hatch, smoking a short pipe and spitting into the depths of the hold from time to time: and when he reflected that this was to be his home for the next couple of years, he was sorely tempted to go back to Harper and accept his first contemptuous offer of a book-keeper's stool. But the strength of mind that had kept the father calm-eyed and quiet through those two torturing years of impending ruin came to his son's aid, and he swung himself down the iron ladder attached to the quayside and set foot for the first time on the deck of the Fairy Belle.

The boy by the hatchway watched him sullenly and in silence.

"Captain aboard?" Laurence asked. The boy spat again down the hatch.

"Na," he said, without moving.

"Mate?"

"Eh?"

"Is the mate on board?" Laurence queried sharply. Accustomed to ready obedience and civility from his own yatch's crew, his temper was rising.

"There's nae mate," the boy said, in the broadest of Lowland Scotch.

"Is anybody in charge of the boat, then?"

The boy stooped over the hatch. "Jock, ye're wanted," he bawled down.

A growling answer came from the darkness below; the top of a ladder leaning against the side of the hatchway began to shake, and two great grimy hands ascended the rungs, followed by a dirty hairy face beneath a slimy sou'wester; and finally the owner of hands and face appeared on deck. Though a man of a good height he was perhaps an inch shorter than Laurence. His shoulders were enormous, and tended to make his ungainly figure more squat in appearance than it was in reality. He was clothed in a torn blue guernsey, trousers of some dull red material, coarse as army blanketing, and thigh boots. He stared at the visitor keenly from beneath shaggy yellow eyebrows.

"What d'ye want?" he asked roughly.

"Are you the mate?" Laurence asked.

"There's nae mates on trawlers. I'm leadin' hand;" and then repeated his question, "What d'ye want?"

"I'm from Harper's," Laurence answered to the full as curtly. "I'm going to sea on this boat."

The fisherman spat on the deck. "We want nae holiday makin' swells aboard here," he said.

"I'm not holiday making. I'm coming as a hand."

"Ye?" The burly ruffian laughed aloud. "Ye a hand?" He burst into a torrent of Lowland obscenity ridiculing Laurence's appearance from head to foot. "Ye white-handed —— whelp, d'ye think to fule me? Ye wharf-loafing, fo'castle-robbing poppy-cock; get off the boat, d'ye hear, or I'll pitch ye overside."

Laurence filled and lit a pipe, his hands shaking with anger, the boy watching him curiously the while.

Then he sat down on the bulwarks and smoked silently until his temper was in hand, and then, laying down his pipe, said shortly, "And now get about it—this pitching me overboard."

The bull-necked leading hand rushed at him with an oath, Laurence lifting his elbows clear of his sides as the rush came. The man laughed aloud as he noticed the action, thinking he meant to strike, and in a moment his arms were around the younger man's waist with a grip like iron.

But he had reckoned without his host. Not for nothing had those arms been lifted to invite that grip. As he straightened his back to lift his antagonist from the deck, he found one of the freed elbows beneath his chin, the other crooked behind his neck, the two forming a cruel vice that bent him backwards and backwards until a fall or a broken neck was inevitable. To save himself he released the waist he held between his arms, and as he staggered free he found himself battered on the mouth and beneath the chin by a series of short upward blows that jarred his jaws and skull like strokes from a trip-hammer. Again he jumped back to get room, receiving one savage, long-armed cut beneath the eye as he went, and the two men faced each other, panting.

So far all the honors of the game were with Laurence, but knowing that in any lasting fight he was certain of defeat, he stood quietly, every nerve strung, thinking his very best.

The rush came quickly, the fisherman striking heavily and quickly, blows any one of which would have knocked Laurence to the deck and probably have stunned him had they got fairly home. Unusual tactics were required. The science of the ring would be childish folly on a deck cumbered with spars and coils of rope, and so, abandoning all science or any attempt to strike or guard, he caught one of the great fists in his own and pulled it towards him suddenly with all his strength, leaping aside as he did so. His quick movements, aided by the initial impetus of the rush and blow, pulled the man over like a falling tree, his head came against the bulwarks with a sickening crash, and he lay snoring and stunned.

Even then Laurence took no chances. He jumped on to the broad back and gripped the great throat with both hands, thumbs downward and buried in the beard, and forced them in to the flesh until the snoring became a choking gurgle.

The boy drew nearer, staring at the pair in silence. Laurence looked up in his face. It was quite unmoved, and, despite the excitement of the fight, the thought of what a floating hell a boat must be, where such a savage struggle could call for no remark from a boy, struck him with dire premonitions. The boy stooped and looked sideways at the face pressed down to the deck. "Ye've knocked him out," he said. "Ye can let up," and Laurence rose, feeling a little hysterical, and wiped his thumbs on his clothes.

The snoring recommenced, and then the man coughed and made an attempt to rise. Laurence, aided by the boy, turned him over on his back and dragged him to a sitting position, leaning his head and shoulders against the bulwarks. He soon regained consciousness. The snoring lessened to heavy, labored breathing, and the bleared eyes opened and glared sullenly at his antagonist. He shifted his position with difficulty and tried to wipe the blood from his mouth with the back of his hand. Then he looked up at Laurence again and muttered some coarse oaths through his blood-clotted beard.

"By G—d, though, ye can fecht," he said, and stirred himself to rise. Laurence put out a hand to help him, but the offer was repulsed; and getting to his feet unaided, went aft, slung a bucket overside by a rope tied to its handle, and began to wash the stains of the fight from his face and hair.

Laurence Averil was no coward, but the brutal and unprovoked ferocity of the fight sickened him. It was over in a matter of a few seconds, and was never more than a nearly silent scuffle at best. Now, as he watched the man plunging his head in the bucket of sea-water, blowing and splashing and rubbing the blood from his hairy face, his first feeling was of wonderment—wonder at the force of the blows he had escaped, at the blind fighting rage that had possessed him and led him—a graduate of Merton—to kneel on the back of a prostrate man and drive his thumbs into his throat. Wonder, too, at the callous behavior of the ship's boy, and the half-dozen of lookers-on who had watched the fight from the trawlers moored alongside or from the edge of the wharf. They had evinced little interest, all behaving as though a fight between a fisherman and a well-dressed young man on a trawler's deck were the most ordinary spectacle in the world. As he stood and looked across at the disorderly decks, at the blood-stained man washing in the stern of the boat, a grim and ugly foreground to the blue waters of the Firth of Forth, and the blue sky beyond, he heard one remark made from the boat behind him, and only one. As commentary it was brief and brutal as the fight itself. A man on the nearest trawler who had seen the whole affair turned and called to one less advantageously placed in a farther boat. "Jock Menzies's got lickit;" he said, and unconcernedly returned to his work of whipping the frayed end of a warp.

Menzies himself having washed his face and dried it on a shirt hanging in the rigging, came back to Laurence. "Is you true?" he asked. "That ye're coming as hand aboard here?"

Laurence nodded.

"Then Heaven help ye, my mannie," the brute said. "Wait till I get ye on open water an' I'll promise ye a weary time"; and he went down the ladder into the hold again.

This sounded encouraging. Laurence picked up his pipe, lit it again, and beckoned the boy to him. "What's your name?" he asked sharply.

"Wilyum Clitheroe," the boy answered, and added, "they ca' me Wullie aboard."

"Where's the captain?"

"Ashoore."

"Who's that?" He pointed down the hold.

"Him ye lickit? Jock Menzies. I wouldnae be you when we're at sea. He kilt a boy off Stornoway two years syne. Strook him o'erside. No; they could prove naething—ne'er tried. He fell overboard by nicht, that's all."

"Who else is aboard this cursed boat?" Laurence asked.

"Oscar. He's a Dane. I dinnae ken his ither name."

"What's the captain called?"

"Menzies. He's big Jock's feyther. He's afeard o' Jock. Jock 'ud be master, but he disnae ken the fushing grounds weel."

This was more encouraging still. If the skipper was Menzies' father, and afraid of him to boot, it looked likely that the son's threat might not be mere unfounded vaporing. Again the thought of the book-keeper's desk came into his mind, and again he rejected it. If brutality was to be the law, so let it be. He thought with less shame of that attempted strangling, and it seemed well to declare war straightway.

He walked to the hatchway and looked down into the gloom. Sounds as of scraping the sides of the hold came to his ears.

"Menzies," he called. "Jock Menzies."

"What dae ye want?" came from below—with more oaths.

"You. Come to the ladder, you dog."

The bearded face came to the light beneath the hatchway. Laurence leaned over.

"I'm going back to the town," he said. "And as you're not man enough to throw me over I'm going unaided. I shall come back to-morrow morning with my kit. Then I shall start work on board—and if you want more trouble you raise your voice or your hand higher than your needs and you'll get it. Mind that. Get back to your work, you muck."

The face disappeared without remark, and Laurence climbed the wharfside and walked up the town. But before he went back to Harper's office he spent three pounds of the twenty that remained to him in a second-hand Colt's revolver. He did not mean to drown "off Stornoway," if he could help it.

CHAPTER IV.

At half-past nine next morning Laurence was again upon the quay. He was attired in an old suit of blue serge, and carried with him a bag containing such changes of clothing as his past experience had shown him to be necessary for a long and probably wet voyage.

The morning was as perfect as only an early September morning can be. The soft autumnal haze upon the beaches and at the foot of the low cliffland only served to throw into clearer relief the brilliant blue of the sky above. A gentle easterly breeze broke the bright waters of the Firth into shimmering wavelets, and the whole coast scene was clear and vivid in cool northern sunlight.

One or two steamers were passing near the shore, and some trails of smoke, low above the distant horizon, betrayed the presence of others. Half a dozen offshore trawlers, laden with the night's catch, ran before the wind towards the harbor. The picture was cheering and pleasant, the fresh morning air stirring the blood in the veins like wine, and Laurence descended the ladder to the deck feeling inspirited by its influence.

Menzies was still below at his work of scouring the hold, the noise of his scraping audible above the open hatchway. Nodding to young Clitheroe, who was washing the breakfast things on deck, Laurence threw his bag down the dark forecastle stairway and swung himself down after it.

Not all the disarray and dirt of the decks above were sufficient preparation for the interior of the dismal hole in which he found himself. The place was in semi-darkness, the stench insufferable, and ventilation there was none. A small stove stood by the bottom of the companion way, nearly filling the triangular floor spacing, its hot pipe offering dangerous handhold to the unwary visitor. A disorder of sticky oilskins, dirty clothing, sea boots, and filth unspeakable covered every inch of available floor. An open cupboard by the entry gave glimpses of unappetizing food, wrapped in paper or lying exposed on tin plates. On either side were two bunks, each about a couple of feet wide, in one of which a tumbled heap of torn and grimy blankets, from which issued a sound of muffled snoring, indicated the presence of a third member of the crew.

As Laurence looked around in the dim light—the place was lit only by a scratched and befouled circular plate of glass in the deck above—for some vacant place whereon to deposit his bag, the snoring ceased and a pale face under a shock of light hair emerged from the blankets and stared at him.

To his civil "good-morning," the pale man vouchsafed only a grunt, following it up with the inevitable question—this time with a strong Scandinavian accent: "What d'ye want?"

Laurence answered it with another. "Where's my bunk?" he said.

"Dis is mine. De boy, he sleeps under me. Jock he has de top one on de oder side," and the pale face and light hair disappeared beneath the blankets again.

Laurence emptied the debris in the one remaining bunk out upon the already cumbered floor until he came to the bare boards beneath. Upon them he flung his bag, changed from his serge clothes into an old suit of dungaree overalls, climbed up the companion, took a deep draught of the clear air, and descended by the ladder into the empty hold. Menzies was scraping slime and scales from off its sides, and looked sulkily over his shoulder at the new arrival.

"Ye've come then?" he said.

"I have," Laurence replied. "What's my job?"

WILL REPAIR ROAD BETWEEN NORTH MONAGHAN AND CAVAN

Each Township to Put up $150 for the Purpose and Cavan to do the Work.

The North Monaghan Council met at the Courthouse, Peterboro, on Monday, July the ninth. Reeve Rye, deputy Reeve Bell and Councillors Henry and Williams were present. The minutes of the last two meetings were read and confirmed. The County Clerk's report re equalized assessment of the County of Peterboro for 1918 was read and discussed.

A deputation from the township of Cavan consisting of Reeve J. J. Henderson, deputy Reeve H. Baptie, and Councillor Ball, Mr. F. E. Wilson and the Rev. G. I. Craw was present in the interests of having the Cavan boundary put in proper repair. Reeve Henderson said the boundary between North Monaghan and Cavan township was in a deplorable condition. Mr. Baptie and Mr. Ball suggested a committee with power to act from both townships.

It was the concensus of opinion that the cost of putting the road into shape is prohibitive without Government aid. All that can be done is to make temporary repairs. The road in question is partly made up of what is commonly known as the long swamp and constitutes the boundary between North Monaghan and Cavan townships. This part, to say the very least, is in unsafe condition for traffic. The balance of the road is well known as the Gravel road and is the main traffic road from Port Hope to Peterboro. This road is badly out of repair in a number of places.

It was moved by Mr. Williams and seconded by Mr. Bell that the township of North Monaghan grant one hundred and fifty dollars toward the Cavan boundary providing the township furnish the men and teams and do the work, and that Mr. F. E. Wilson supervise the work and that teams be paid four dollars per day and men two dollars a day of ten hours. The Reeves of each township are to be a committee with power to add to their number and lay out the work.

By-law number 746 was introduced read and finally passed, authorizing the Reeve and Treasurer to borrow the sum of four thousand dollars from the Bank of Ottawa to meet current expenditure.

The following communications were then read:

From the Brinton Carpet Co., acknowledging receipt of assessment notices re the company's assessment.

Form Gordon, Widdifield and O'Brien, re John Armstrong.

Peter Hamilton Co., plow handles, $1.50.

On motion of Messrs. Williams and Henry, the latter communication was referred to Mr. Peck, the township solicitor.

The following motion was moved and passed: That Mr. Alexander Gordon, the Brinton Carpet Co. and Mr. J. T. O'Connell be notified to remove their fences from the public highway.

The following bills were presented for payment:

Sawyer-Massey Co., crusher repairs, $34.05.

H. B. Rye, express on crusher repairs, 90c, telegram, 54c.

Peter Hamilton Co., repairs, 75c.

R. A. Dobbin, 48 yards of gravel, $7.20.

John McIntosh, 83 yards of gravel, $12.45.

Moved and seconded by Messrs. Bell and Henry, that the above accounts be passed and paid.

Moved and seconded by Messrs. Henry and Williams, that the Foster Moncrief pay sheet, July 3rd to 7th, inclusive, for $282.50, be passed and paid.—Carried.

Moved and seconded by Messrs. Henry and Bell, that Robert Colon's pay sheet presented July 9th, 1917, for $106.49, be passed and paid. —Carried.

Moved and seconded by Messrs. Henry and Williams, that County Constable A. Moore look after dogs in North Monaghan as per bylaw.

Moved and seconded by Messrs. Williams and Henry, that the next regular meeting be held in the Court House at Peterborough on the second Monday in August at 2 p.m.

Another Canine Case to Come Before The Magistrate

The boy was taken to Dr. Amy's, where the wound was cauterized. The owner of the dog will have a chance of explaining to the magistrate how the canine happened to be on the street, as an information has been laid against her.

MRS. A. C. MILLER SOLE LEGATEE ASKS PROBATE

OF WILL OF LATE THOMAS REYNOLDS, HER FATHER.

At the Surrogate Court, Toronto, yesterday, among the applications for the probate of wills was the following which is of local interest:

Elizabeth Miller, wife of Alexander C. Miller, has made application for probate of the will of her father, Thomas Reynolds, laborer, who died on the 30th day of June last. The estate amounts to $1886, of which $386 is personal and $1500 realty. The personal comprises $25 household, $108 insurance and $235 cash in bank. The realty is the value, $1500, of a freehold house at 70 Robinson street, Peterborough. Mrs. Miller is the sole beneficiary under the will.

THE SALESMEN WERE VERY MUCH DISSATISFIED

At the Lindsay Cheese Board yesterday 760 cheese were boarded, and Mr. Flavelle offered 21 1-8 cents for the board, which was accepted, Mr. Flavelle giving Star, Dunsford and Red Rock to Mr. Geo. Gillespie, of Peterboro, who was unable to be present. The factory representatives held out for 21 3-16 cents, the price for which Peterboro cheese was sold, less freight to Peterboro. The Peterboro cheese was bought Wednesday and shiped Saturday, the factories giving half pound a box off regular weight.

It was pointed out, however, that the buyers who secured Peterboro cheese would be unable to get their own out of it, but took the cheese on account of the strenuous competition.

There is a feling among the factories that Lindsay Cheese Board should disband, but Mr. Wm. Flavelle urged them to hold together as it was felt that there would be a chang for the better in the conditions prevailing in the cheese market.

LABOR ISSUES CALL FOR NEXT NATIONAL MEETING

Trades Congress For the Dominion to be Held at Ottawa September 17---A Momentous Gathering of Workingmen.

Ottawa, July 10.—A circular has been issued by the executive directing atention to the 33rd annual convention of the Trades and Labor congress of Canada, which will assemble September 17.

The circular says in part:

"It is clear to the least reflecting that the capital has, during the past months, been the stage whereon the various acts in the most momentous drama in the records of Canada have been played. And in some of these a not insignificant part has been taken by the representatives of organized labor. Not only is Ottawa thus afforded this year an opportunity of noting the advancement made in the domain of labor, but we might say that the entire country, whose representatives have gathered in the capital during these months of grave deliberaton; can learn better than elsewhere the history of the congress and its achivements, as well a the nee of the labor world, xpounded at its meetings. Hence the hope that this year's meeting in Ottawa will be fruitful of very important and beneficial results.

War Problems

"The war has run into the third year of its fury; it is about to enter upon a fourth year of general devastation and upheaval. As in the domain of legislation practically every question is laid aside to devote every energy to the mighty task which the gigantic struggle has imposed upon the country, so with the Congress; very many matters that would, under other circumstances command special attention, have to be overlooked in order to concentrate all efforts in the study and solution of the exceptional problems that the present state of affairs has necessitated. Like last year, we again call attention to one very special subject, namely, the means to be adopted to protect resident labor when after the war this country will have an influx of foreign labor. We need not have any apprehension as far as the returned soldiers and the incapacitated are concerned, but there will be very probably an immense imigration from the shores of devastated European countries, and this will constitute a situation at once important and menaceing as far as Canadian native labor is concerned.

Most Important Meeting

"There is much in the legislation of this year's Federal session that will command attention, and very much also regarding future legislation that is of vital interest to organized labor that should be carefully studied out and reported upon. In fact, there has not been since its very inception a more momentous meeting of the Congress that that of 1917, and it i fervently hoped that the very best ability at the command of labor will be brought into play during the progress of the meeting to fix standards of action for the immediate present, and to blaze out the paths that must be followed in the near future.

Need For Organization

"It is needless to here repeat, what has been reiterated yearly, about the necessity of perfecting our organization. The capitalist, the employer, the dreet opponent of labor interests, is perfectly organized. At the command of these are not only the wealth, but also all the influences that it can secure. Talent, ability, legal acumen, directing powers are all at the service of the most antagonistic. The consequence is that it behoves the friends of labor to meet these conditions with like weapons. This is a situation that must be considered by the convention, and that will not brook delay. Not only must labor render permanent that which it has won in the gigantic struggle for living, but it must advance further and further each successive year along the highway of organization and watchful activity

Selecting Delegates

"Let there be no delay in the election of delegates. To carefully select them and to send to the convention the very best and most practical men possible it is necessary to commence at once. Delays often bring about regrettable gaps in the ranks when the time comes for the meeting. We ned a very strong and influential convention this year—above all other years—and immediate and careful as well as efficient selection is imperative."

The call is signed by C. Walters, president; Jas. Simpson, Alex. Watchman and R. A. Rigg, vice-presidents; and P. M. Draper, secretary-treasurer.

Health and Beauty Answers

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN.

June: The "French complexion fad" you inquire about is probably the craze for liquid powders. They are thought to be more wholesome for the skin, as well as more beautifying and less likely to show, than ordinary powder. The following preparation can be made at home from ingredients to be purchased from any druggist. Get 4 ounces spurmax from your druggist, dissolve in one-half pint hot water and add two teaspoons glycerine. It is splendid in effect, looks very natural and clings as if it belonged to your skin.

Lilly: You will find shampooing with a teaspoonful canthrox dissolved in a cup of hot water is a quick and pleasing way to free the scalp of dust, dandruff and excess oil. This is a cleanser and invigorator most appreciated by one whose scalp is either dry, scaly and itchy or profusely oily. Its use restored healthful vigor to my scalp and induced the hair to come in plentifully with a gloss, and greatly enriched color.

Bess: The best blood cleanser I know is Kardene because it acts on the liver and kidnys, and if, as you say, you are troubled with severe and constant headaches, it is an indication that your kidneys and blood need attention. To prepare, put one ounce Kardene (from the drug store) into one half pint alcohol (whisky should not be used), then add one-half cupful sugar and hot water to make a full quart. A tablespoonful before meals is the dose. This Kardene tonic gently expels poisonous waste from the body and tones up the internal organs so they can do their work. You will find this tonic good for lost appetite, failing strength, and to clear up the complexion.

Loreli: Even the woman of middle age nowadays is determined to keep her flesh down, and who can blame her, now that present styles demand slimness? I always recommend parnotis (which I mix up at home) as the safest, cheapest and best flesh-reducer. Get four ounces parnotis at druggist's and dissolve in one and one-half pints hot water. Cool, strain, and take a tablespoonful before each meal. Dieting or exercise is not necessary with this.

Mrs. S.: My own experience with wrinkles was three years ago, when I removed them with a very simple, inexpensive preparation which I made by mixing an ounce of almozoin (from any druggist's) in one-half pint cold water and adding two teaspoonfuls glycerine. This, by contracting the skin slowly, restores healthy firmness and keeps the surface circulation of the blood so good that a perfectly natural glow develops in the cheeks. I have used it ever since.

Madge: No, you need not have lots of money in order to give your hair and scalp perfect care. I often recommend many made-at-home items which are even better than highly priced patents. As a hair tonic I gt an ounce of Quinzoin at the druggist's, dissolve it in one-half pint of alcohol and add one-half pint of water. Rub, a little at a time, well into the scalp and your dandruff will disappear and you will keep your scalp healthy.

Exie: I brighten my eyes and rest them when tired by putting a few drops of crystos solution into each and bathing the lids with the same. I make the tonic by getting an ounce of crystos from the drug store and dissolving it in a pint of clear water. It will not smart and is soothing and healing. It is the safest way of making the eyes sparkling and expressive.

PRESERVATION OF WOOD

Use of Park and Other Protective Prolongs Life

From the standpoint of the average consumer, more has been expected of wood and less done to help it serve a great variety of uses than almost any other building material. It is a comparatively modern conception that proper preservative treatment is practical and economical on the farm and around the home. Good paint is a good friend of lumber, and, while not usually considered in that light, is the one protection against the natural progress of decay which has been universally used.

Yet the well painted house has unprotected floor beams in moist walls, door steps on wet ground, and many inside surfaces and timbers which are continually exposed to conditions favorable to decay. The wonderful service which wood has given during all the years, with little or no consideration of the factors which destroy, brings into greater prominence the possibilities of preservative treatment under the present day desire for permanence and elimination of waste.

No one expects unprotected steel to do anything but rust, concrete is waterproofed and its surface protected from abrasion and disintegration, fabrics are shielded from the elements, while wood has largely been left to shift for itself. The application of wood preserving methods to the every day uses of lumber, where it needs protection from decay, is in keeping with modern ideas.

THE MENACE OF THE BUSH

Brush disposal, as a fire-preventive measure, is a feature to which some attention has been given, particularly in the west, and some progress has been made. It is believed, however, that, particularly in the east, it is practicable to a materially greater extent than is conceded by most operators. At least a beginning could be made, in many cases, by a more thorough clean-up of inflammable debris in the vicinity of settlements, camps, railways, wagon-roads, logging roads and streams, and along the edges of cutting areas. Such action would greatly reduce the danger of fires causing material damage, and would afford vantage points from which to control fires of accidental origin.

Gasoline Leaks

Where the vacuum system of gasoline feed is used and a leak is suspected somewhere between the small tank and the large tank of the automobile one may check up the fault by blowing into the big tank. Sufficient air pressure must be created in the large tank to force the gasoline up through the main feed pipe. A leak in the main pipe may be noted under these conditions.

No Simple Task

Though it may appear to many to be a very simple matter, the proper washing and cleaning of the motor car is a process which should not be undertaken in a haphazard manner. There are a number of kinks that may well be observed if the car owner would preserve the body finish and keep the varnish lustrous the maximum length of time.

SOMETHING NEW

THE BELL CAR

To those who require a heavier and more expensive car than the Ford, I take pleasure in announcing that I have taken the agency for the new "Bell" car, in addition to the popular Ford line.

Come and look over the "Bell" at $1185 f.o.b. Barrie, Ontario. It will give you a full-sized, full powered five-passenger car with every new improvement and refinement in design, upholstering and finish. It is sturdily built, runs with the smoothness of the most expensive cars and is the most up-to-date car of its size on the market.

I am now in a position to supply the "Bell" and to give cutsomers the regular Duffus Garage service, so well known throughout the country.

TRAGEDY IN MESOPOTAMIA.

Poor Facilities for Caring for Sick Soldiers.

The difficulties of a military campaign in Mesopotamia are many, but one of the most serious is caring for the sick and wounded British soldiers, states a Toronto doctor who served with the British army there, and recently returned to London. Some of his views of Mesopotamia and the difficulties of the Army Medical Service there may be summarized as follows:

"Mespot" is a huge flat desert for the most part, through which the Tigris winds tortuously, with an ever-changing river bed. Arab villages and date palms dot the country at intervals — the palms getting scarcer as one proceeds up stream. All transport is thus thrown on the river, the navigation of which is accomplished by flat-bottomed, shallow-draft steamers usually drawing from three to four feet and taking a barge on each side.

The sick are thus transported and the matter has been a tragedy of the campaign. So many have been the cases of heat-stroke that develop en voyage, and the appliances so inadequate—nothing short of a disgrace. Repeatedly is the question asked: "Why haven't we a supply of ice?" To meet this the authorities struggle feebly, erecting a few plants which to-day cannot turn out one-tenth of what is needed. There is no reason why these boats cannot be equipped with ice-chests, dispensaries, and proper cooking appliances. Next summer, should the campaign continue, as it probably will do, these vital necessities will still be absent.

On visiting an Arab theatre one was particularly impressed with the liberality with which the attendants dispensed ice for cool drinks. It was "touching on the sore spots" to sit there and see these lazy Arabs getting all the frigid beverages they wanted, when at the same moment our own poor soldiers were dying of heat-stroke, and little or no ice to treat them with.

To meet this ice question, a few plants have been built. But nearly ten times as many are required. As to cooking arrangements aboard the river steamers, fires have to be built on the stern of the barges unless, by kind permission of the captain, the ship's galley may be used. This would suffice were there only ten men to cook for, but when you have [illegible] to 200 each tr's down—and all sick men—well——!! Nursing sisters have been placed on some of the boats as an experiment, but they can do little under the circumstances, and the work thus devolves on orderlies and other men. However, really great difficulties confront the authorities, and the writer doesn't want to be too critical.

Always the cry is for doctors—more doctors. One wonders where they are coming from. A medical officer at the front is sometimes inclined to forget the needs of the people at home. But, unquestionably, there are young doctors in Canada—who should be out in the field. Then there are experienced medical men here and in France who should be at home. In alluding to the stay-at-homes, please don't for a moment think the writer refers to those working at home in connection with large hospitals, nor to those who have returned from the front. No, he aims at the men who have graduated within the past five or six years, and who, apparently lost to all sense of shame, stay behind to [illegible] other fellows' practices.

Baby Sleeps.

The smaller a child is the more sleep it requires. The little new baby should have about twenty-two hours sleep out of the twenty-four during the first three months, twenty hours the second three months, sixteen hours from then until one year old. The one-year-old child requires twelve hours at night, with a two to four hour nap; two years, twelve hours, with a nap of two hours, increasing to four hours; three years, twelve hours, with a nap of four hours, lessening to two hours; four to six years, thirteen hours, with a nap lessening from three hours to one hour; seven to nine years, thirteen hours, lessening to twelve hours, night sleep; ten to twelve years, eleven hours; thirteen to fifteen years, ten hours at least; sixteen years and more, nine hours. This is a practicable sleeping table for the average child and may be safely followed unless the child's physician orders otherwise.

About Blouses.

The blouse for summer is to be thoroughly comfortable. That much the early fashions indicate. There are some high neck garments, but these will not be nearly so popular as the ones which are cut round or V shape at the neck. Furthermore, the long sleeve is giving way to the elbow length one. In sport blouses as well as those for dressy wear the shorter length is preferred. The sleeves are fuller or wider at the elbow, and this is a factor in the wearer's comfort.

Sport Clothes.

There are real sporting clothes for the woman who takes part in the outdoor games, and there are the clothes for the woman who looks on.

Revolutionary.

In my dream I was speaking to the man of the far distant future.

"The world has changed since your day," he was saying.

"In much?" I queried.

"In much," quoth he—"in ideals, in aspirations, in all that most nearly touches life."

Could he not exhibit some effect of this which should give me an idea of its extent? At a glance, of course.

He took a moment to consider.

"Well, yes," he said at length. Then he let me see the inside of the average woman's purse.

There was nothing in it but money, absolutely nothing, and with a violent start I awoke.—Puck.

Stern Resolution.

Tramp—No, mum. Y'see it was jest eighteen years ago that me brudder died of overexertion, an' I've been avengin' his death ever since.—Chicago News.

Some Things Come by Instinct.

Seaver—I have to tell that boy of mine where everything is.

Weaver—Have to tell him where the baseball grounds are located, where the circus is showing or where the best swimming holes are?—Judge.

PRES. BARROW SUSPENDS LAJOIE

President Barrow, of the International League, has apparently very little love for Manager Lajoie in particular or the Toronto club, in general. He has not overlooked any opportunity this season or for that matter, any other season to show his supreme dislike for the gentlemen controlling the interest of baseball in this vicinity. Why this should be the case is hard to say as Mr. Barrow practically owes his appointment to President McCaffery. But for the backing of the local magnate the ex-manager of the Leafs, and former resident of this city, would never in all probability, have succeeded P. T. Powers as president of the league. In any event, he has never let an opportunity escape him to make himself obnoxious to the local baseball interests. Last fall, for instance, he "wished" Umpire Freeman upon the Toronto club repeatedly, though he was well aware of the fact, or should have been, that this official was not by any means a Toronto favorite. This is only one instance out of many.

This season Mr. Barrow's enmity has been of the most pronounced kind. A week or so ago he suspended Manager Lajoie for alleged umpire baiting, but after keeping him out of two games, he restored him to good standing with much reluctance. On Saturday he again visited his displeasure upon the champion slugger, "benching him" indefinitely for his part in the trouble at Rochester. "Larry" is not the mildest tempered individual in the world, but according to all accounts he did not do anything to warrant such drastic punishment and the only deduction that can be arrived at, is that Mr. Barrow has it "in" for the Toronto club.

President McCaffery naturally is much "het up" over the suspension of his manager. He has lodged a strong protest with the league leader over his continued persecution of the Toronto club, through its manager, and has advised the former to pay more attention to his umpires and less to the players. In Mr. McCaffery's opinion, the poor work of the arbiters is largely to blame for all the trouble. There are few competent men on the staff. He also thinks that if the president were to take an occasional trip around the circuit, it would be better for the league.

It is a strange coincidence that on both occasions Manager Lajoie has been suspended the Leafs have immediately "celebrated" the occurrence by winning a double header. They did this at Richmond when "Larry" was holidaying, and duplicated the performance on Saturday when the big fellow was enjoying another enforced vacation. Good pitching by both Hearne and Thompson had much to do with the double victory over the Braves. "Bunny," who has won his last five games, came through with a shut-out, while "Tommy" would have repeated the feat but for a bad throw. The games were marked by good and timely hitting on the part of Graham, which indicates that Lajoie made no mistake when he let Costello out, and restored the southerner to his old place in the line up.

SIR SAM BLAMES OTHERS FOR RECRUITING SLUMP

Says Sir Thomas White and Lord Shaughnessy Were Responsible for Falling off in Enlistments---Prefers Militia Act.

Ottawa, July 10.—In the House yesterday Sir Sam Hughes said:

"Possibly more than any other, except the Finance Minister, the influence of Lord Shaughnessy was potent in this embarrassment. Both Lord Shaughnessy and Sir Thos. White complained of the number of battalions being raised in Montreal and Toronto at the same time respectively. In the Montreal area, with a total population of nearly a million, including the adjoining counties, there were being recruited three battalions. On our basis of forty thousand for a battalion of one thousand, there should have been at least twenty to twenty-one instead of three. In Toronto there were five, or, including two formerly authorized but fully completed, only seven were under way where, as compared with the country districts, there should have been twelve. From one or other of these two gentlemen the following fallacious arguments were also advanced.

"Industries would be ruined if so many men were enlisted.

"Farmers could not put in their crops.

"Munitions could not be made.

"The war would be over by July or August, 1916.

"Transports could not be had.

"It would take a long time to get the troops to England as only a certain number could be taken monthly.

"From first to last the tendency of the cry was not the upholding and strengthening of the boys at the front so much as the commercial idea at home.

Prefers Militia Act.

Sir Sam made the following remarks about the Conscription bill:

"I prefer the Militia Act as better, more elastic, more workable, less inclined to cause friction, and more inclined to produce good results, but the Government does not so consider it.

"I, therefore, will not take one minute in discussing that aspect of the question, merely placing myself on record. I shall loyally support any and every proposition enacted in the bill when finally completed, and shall with the least delay freely give my suggestions.

"My preferences are more or less well known.

1. The tribunals are non-military, and are under the administration of the Justice Department. My suggestion would be to place them under military control, but let their composition be non-military.
2. A mere suggestion is the area unit instead of being Provincial should be military district.
3. There should be no special exemptions for "financiers" more than for farmers.
4. It would have been advisable to have had registration.
5. Clergy should not be exempt.
6. In section 11, sub-sec. E is the only one to my mind that should be retained. Is there a man in Canada who may be exempted under section 11 as it now stands?
7. Desertions—It might be well to provide for punishment under this and other sections of the bill, at the front.

FOOD CONSERVATION

SOME little time ago the C. P. R. realizing that economy in the use of food products was an essential of true patriotism during the war, inaugurated a policy in connection with their dining car service which prohibited the purchase of calves, young lambs, little chickens, and baby pigs, as result of which thousands of these tender but immature animals will be conserved to fuller growth and a very material increase in their value as food supply will result. This action was due to the belief that in the face of the serious food shortage which the present world crisis threatens to bring upon us, it is criminal to waste an ounce of food or to indulge in dishes which are secured to-day at the cost of tomorrow.

The practice has been extended to embrace all services operated by the Canadian Pacific, and other Canadian and American lines recognizing the importance of this plan of conservation of young stock, have adopted a similar course.

The Canadian Pacific dining car service has so contrived that the high cost of living does not exist insofar as that service is concerned, it always being possible to obtain, in a Canadian Pacific dining car, a good meal at a moderate price. This has been made possible by making a close study of the traveller's wants and of the portions left uneaten which soon convinced the company that the old established custom of serving extremely large portions was wasteful and extravagant. The result was that when the war broke out and the price of foodstuffs began to soar, the argument was advanced that smaller but satisfying portions at reasonable prices would better meet the situation than the former large portions, the maintenance of which would have necessitated higher prices with much waste. The dietetic blended menus were then introduced, first out of consideration for weak digestions but also with the economic view point that it costs less to have a menu composed of a few dishes for which there is likely to be a general demand than it does to offer a hundred dishes the demand for any one of which is uncertain. This brought about the introduction of the single portion or individual service, particularly for the benefit of lady travellers, who, as a rule, are less heavy eaters than men.

In the practical form of price control and food conservation the C. P. R. dining car system has gone a step further by the omission from their menus of all dishes consisting of the flesh of calves, young lambs, little chickens, and baby pigs. Lamb's fries, sweetbreads and calf's liver also are no longer purchased or used in the C. P. R. service, on the ground that the developed animal provides more food for the nation, and that only full-grown animals should be slaughtered.

PUTTING A SALMON RIVER ON THE MAP

THE map referred to is a map of some importance, for salmon is the big game of the fisherman, and brings in search of it sportsmen from all over the world with big two-handed rods and large noisy reels and (what Canada much desires) a deep purse for camps, guides and outfit. Harry Allen, President of the New Brunswick Guides Association, has known the Cains River as one of the best trout streams in the Province of New Brunswick, and salmon were frequently caught twenty miles up from the junction with the better known Miramichi, but he believed that if the right kind of fishermen got there, they would find salmon all the length of at least eighty miles.

The investigation was made a short time ago by a party of sporting writers and editors from the United States. Maxmillian Foster, a salmon fisherman [illegible] years [illegible] and [illegible] and writes for the "Saturday Evening Post"; Hugh Fullerton, of the Chicago "Examiner," Jack Lait, of the Chicago "Herald," Grantland Rice and W. O. M'Geehan, of the New York "Tribune," and L. O. Armstrong, of the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, D.C., an old campaigner who has hunted and fished in the Canadian woods for over fifty years, and A. O. Seymour, General Tourist Agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, an ardent fisherman.

When they arrived at Fredericton, the local fishermen were pessimistic. "If there are salmon in the Cains," they said, "you have come at the wrong time. They went out with the ice and are now at sea. Better go home and come back in a month." It was cold and [illegible] the worst kind of weather for flyfishing, but nothing daunted they set out.

With eight fishermen, one movie operator from the Essanay Company of Chicago, and nine guides, the fleet started out near the head of the Cains River, fishing the pools as they went down. The first day they struck only trout, but from the second day onwards the movie man was busy. Twice he had to choose between two fishermen who had hooked their salmon at the same time. Maxmillian Foster had a basket of thirteen, ranging from seven to eighteen pounds. The largest measured forty-two-and-a-half-inches, which means that if it had been taken in the fall it would have weighed [illegible] and a-half pounds. Every member of the party [illegible]; he came [illegible], thanks to [illegible] Doctor and Parmacheene Belle [illegible] flies that the Cains River salmon seem to like. In one pool seven beauties, weighing between them sixty-eight pounds, were taken out in two hours, and it was only dark and lack of time that closed the sport. Result, eight happy fishermen, one happy movie man, and one supremely proud Harry Allan, who saw that his claims were justified and that Cains River could take its place for salmon besides the hitherto more famous waters of the Miramichi and the Restigouche.

CHIEF HOWARD WAS MISTAKEN

CALLED OUT BRIGADE FOR WHAT HE THOUGHT WAS A FIRE.

The burning of a red fusee in the window of a Reid street residence made such a flame that Fire Chief Howard played a joke on himself and sent in an alarm of fire about nino o'clock last evening.

When the brigane arrived there was little left of the red fire and the department returned to their quarters and heard from the chief just how it all happened.

From a distance it did look as though a very large fire wa[illegible]gress and some of the residen[illegible] considerably alarmed by the reflection The attendance of the crowd was larger than usual.

ANOTHER EVENING TRIP IS ENJOYED BY MANY

The steamer "Geneva" carried another large crowd of Orangemen and their friends down the river last night on the second of the moonlights held under the auspices of L.O.L. 1175. The threatening weather was no mar to the crowd and the weather man was voted a hearty vote of thanks for holding off any heavy downpour.

Those that cared to dance had music furnished by Nicholl's orchestra, and those that preferred to enjoy a social chat and take in the scenery along the river had a perfectly fine time of it. The boat got back to the wharf about 10.30.

BRITISH AIRSHIPS BOMB TURK FLEET

Enemy Cruiser Golhen and Other Craft Badly Damaged in Attack---Assault Was Made From Height of Eight Hundred Feet---Slight Reverse on Nieuport Front.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

London, July 11.—An air raid on the enemy fleet of Constantinople was anounced in a statement of the Britsh War Office to-day. Bombs were dropped on the Turkish cruiser Ywus Sultan Selim, formerly the German cruiser Goeben. The extent of the damage to the vessel is not given. The War Office at Constantinople was also attacked and a direct hit obtained. British airmen all returned safely.

When the Goeben, surrounded by other warships, including submarines, had been located the attack was made from a height of eight hundred feet Direct hits were obtained on the Goeben and other enemy ships. Big explosiins took place on board them, and several fires were observed.

HUNS' DESPERATE CHARGE

London, July 11.—After a very intense bombardment lasting twenty four hours the enemy made a determined attack on our positions on the Nieuport front at 7.45 p.m. yesterday. Owing to the concentrated and heavy nature of the enemy's artillery fire our defenses in the Dunes sector near the coast were levelled, and that sector was isolated by the destruction of bridges across the river Yser.

The enemy succeeded in penetrating our positions here on a front of fourteen hundred yards and to a depth of six hundred yards. They reached the right bank of the Yser near the sea. Further south opposite Lombaertzyde, after gaining temporarily some of our advanced positions the enemy was driven back to his own lines by counter-attack.

GERMANS AGAIN REPULSED

Paris, July 11.—Artillery fighting was rather spirited north of Jouy in the region of Sapigneul and in Champagne. We repulsed two small attacks on small posts. Enemy left prisoners in our hands. On the left bank of the Meuse (Verdun front) artillery fighting continued very heavy in the sector of Hill 304. In Woevre the Germans delivered an attack against our positions north of Flirey. After a severe combat the enemy was ejected entirely from the part of the trench in which he had gained a footing. There is nothing to report from the remainder of the front.

PUBLIC PLAYGROUNDS SHOW STEADY GROWTH IN FAVOR

Attendanceat King Edward School Grounds Double That of a Year Ago,

The members of the Playgrounds Association held a meeting yesterday afternoon, their first since the opening of the season, and the organization has every reason to feel encouraged over the result of their efforts. The playgrounds are more popular this year than ever, and the attendance has more than doubled. The increased interest is especially shown in the South End, where from 200 to 300 children are at the playgrounds at the King Edward School every day.

There is an urgent need for more funds to provide proper equipment, and to pay the salaries of the supervisors, but the money required for these various purposes is in sight. This is on account of the growing popularity of the movement. The proposition is better understood and the parents of the children are only now beginning to realise that they can become members of the association for the small fee of $1 a year. It does not matter, of course, whether they do or do not, so far as the use of the grounds is concerned, as the children of the non-member are just as welcome to the advantages offered as are those of members, but there appears to be a growing disposition on the part of the parents in the South End to help the movement. It is all a question of getting the matter properly before them. Subscriptions will not be lacking once the opportunity is given the residents to hand in their offerings.

When all the parents of school children are heard from, if any more money is required an appeal will be made to the general public. It is felt, however, that the more members, interested in the movement through their children, that can be secured, the stronger will the organization be.

Mr. G. O. Cameron, chairman of the finance committee, told the committee in charge of the equipment to go ahead and purchase everything required, as he was certain there would be no difficulty in raising all the funds required.

Be Loyal to Your Pledge

When our gallant boys left for the front they were assured that we remaining behind would keep the home fires burning to furnish them with all that is needful in the incidents of war. And life in a German prison camp is so appalling an incident of war that we all are morally constrained to relieve in every way possible the terrible hardships endured therein by British prisoners; otherwise we violate our honor, and lack in true Canadian patriotism.

Our home fires are truly kept burning with the fuel of prosperity—much of which is due to the war itself—and now many Peterborough prisoners of war in Germany are appealing for food and raiment with which to keep body and soul together.

We have so much, and they, oh! so little, that the ladies of the local Red Cross are going to give all an opportunity to contribute a small share of their abundance toward relieving our prisoners' pitiable condition in the midst of bestial enemies.

With this end in view, Saturday next has been set apart as Prisoners of War Tag Day, with a lively hope that from $1200 to $1500 will be contributed in relief of our brave boys who have done their bit in this great war and are suffering terribly for so doing. Every one is expected to do his or her duty

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Petrograd, July 11.—Russia is ringing with the nome of Lt.-General Korniloff, whose astonishing feat in Galicia proves that the new Russian advance is no flash in the pan. W. H. ANDREWS OF HALIBURTON IS FOUND DEAD

IN HIS BED AT A LINDSAY HOSTELRY—INQUEST WILL BE HELD.

Mr. W. H. Andrews, a well known resident of Haliburton County, was found dead in the Simpson House, Lindsay, on Monday night, where he had been stopping since Thursday evening last. Death resulted from a hemmorage.

The deceased, who was in his seventy-third year, resided at the Narrows, Drag Lake, and came to Haliburton County some fifteen or twenty years ago. He was unmarried and cultivated a small farm near the Narrows, and also had canoes for hire. He was an Englishman by birth, and it is said had money.

The canoe in which Messrs. Lee Lindsay and Jack Laking set forth on their ill-fated journey up Drag Lake about a month ago, was secured from Andrews, and the drowning of the two men seemed to have effected his mind. About three weeks ago a brother of the deceased came down from Cochrane and took him to that town in the hope that the change of environment would do him good. He returned to Lindsay on Thursday night and put up at the Simpson House, as was his custom. On Thursday night, it is understood, Mr. Andrews invited Capt. Potts to his room, and the officer left him about 11 o'clock He was in good spirits. On Friday morning the maid, whose duty it was to attend the top flat of the hotel, came to the door of Andrews' room with some material for the bed, but found the door locked. Owing to the scarcity of hired help this maid only gave her services temporarily and failed to leave word at the office that the room was locked. The management naturally concluded that Andrews had gone north as was his intention, as he had not been seen around, and great was the surprise when the room was found locked Monday night. Chief Short was sent for, and when he effected an entrance he found deceased cold in death. He had disrobed, was under the covering and apparently died without a struggle. Coroner Blanchard was then notified, and an examination disclosed the fact that the man died from a hemmorage.

STREET CAR MEN ON STRIKE IN TORONTO

Night Cars Were Run Into Barns at 4.45 This Morning and Not a Wheel Turned After That---Jitneys Are Kept Busy---All Union Labor Behind Strikers.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Toronto, July 11.—At noon the Ontario Railway Board ordered the Toronto Street Railway Company to supply street car service by 3 o'clock, failing which the Board states it will endeavor to give a service.

THE ISSUE.

The men demand an increase of 10 cents an hour in every branch of the service. The company offers a war bonus of two cents an hour.

The present rate of pay for motormen and conductors is 30 cents an hour for all who are in their second year as employes. For the first six months it is 26 cents, and 28 cents for the last half of the first year.

The men refused to submit the dispute to arbitration, either by an independent board or by one appointed under the Industrial Disputes Act, holding that the company had been given ample time in which to settle with the union.

LOCAL LABOR'S SYMPATHY.

George L. Myland, president of the Labor Educational Association of Ontario, sent today the following telegram to Ald. Gibbons, business agent of the Street Railway Men's Union of Toronto:

"Best wishes for the success of your organization in its efforts."

Toronto, July 11.—The threatened strike of Toronto Railway conductors and motormen materialized this morning at 5 o'clock. Negotiation yesterday had no result and at a mass meeting of the employes which began at the Star theatre at midnight 1554 voted to strike and only 73 opposed All runs of yesterday were completed The night cars were run into the barns at 4.45 a.m. and after that not a wheel turned.

Jitneys Are Busy.

The strike did not result in any stoppage at the factories and the large stores. Only those who chose to do so walked. Before the morning rush began an immense number of jitneys were on hand and factories and other large employers sent out all their delivery wagons and trucks bringing in their own employees and sometimes picking up others who had started out on foot.

Labor Men in Sympathy

The fight of the Street Railwaymen's Union for an increase in wages is developing into a general fight of the trade union movement in this city, and the street railway men will have every union man in the city behind the men in this struggle if it comes to a show down.

Some of the men who visited the Labor Temple are very much excited about the affair, and there is talk of going right after the Mackenzie interests.

"They have fattened and lived on the people of this country for years," declared one man, "and it is time the people put a stop to it if the Government does not make a move."

A reference to the Ontario Railway Act in the amendment authorizing the Ontario Railway Board shows a clause empowering the board to take over the operation of a street railway where it finds that the agreement with the municipality has been broken. But the clause does not refer to strikes. Possibly if the railway company fails to secure men to operate the line, they would be failing in their agreement, but Mr. Colquhoun would not commit himself to an opinion.

Board May Take It Over.

Clause 2, section 260, of the Ontario Railway Act, reads:

"The board may take such means and employ such persons as may be necessary for the proper enforcement of such order, and in pursuance thereof may forcibly or otherwise enter upon, seize and take possession of the whole or part of the railway, and the real and personal property of the company, together with its books and offices, and may, for that purpos assume and take over all or any of the powers, duties, rights and functions of the directors and officers of such company, and supervise and direct the management of such company and its railway in all respects, including the employment and dismissal of officers and servants of the company, for such time as the board shall continue and direct such management.

The clauses referring to strikes merely empower the board to mediate between the disputing parties.

ORANGEMEN TO GO TO PORT HOPE

MOST OF THEM WILL GO TO THE CELEBRATION IN AUTOS.

The Orangemen of the city and district will journey to Port Hope tomorrow to help celebrate the Battle of the Boyne with other lodges which will assemble from the surrounding districts.

The three city lodges of men, the ladies lodges and the juveniles will all be represented and the majority of them have arranged for a motor trip while the others will take advantage of the extra accommodation that has been provided by the Grand Trunk.

Lodges from Nassau, Downer's Corners, No. 2440, and Keene will also attend the demonstration.

District Master Williamson will be in charge of the local lodges and it is expected that nearly a thousand will go from here either by train or motor.

Farmers Cannot be Exempted

NOT AS A CLASS, BUT THE MEN NEEDED WILL BE LEFT.

Ottawa, July 11.—When Parliament went into committee on the conscription bill Mr. Prouix (Prescott) suggested that farmers should be exempted from conscription.

Solicitor-General Meighen replied that the farmers could not be exempted as a class, although he doubted if many individual farmers would as a matter of fact be conscripted. Obviously a man who was working 160 acres without help should not be drafted for military service, but he was not prepared to say if six men were working 50 acres of land they should all be exempted. After all, he said, a man could not claim exemption as a matter of right because he was following a useful occupation. The real test was: Could his place be filled by a woman or by some man unfit for military service?

Mr. Prouix, amid derisive cheers from the government benches, suggested that the exemptions include three men for every 100 acres.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, JULY 11, 1917

SOLDIERS' PENSIONS.

The present pensions for the men are, I confidently assert, away below what they ought to be, especially in view of the fact that when the men set out, prices were 50 per cent. lower than they are now. Indeed, the necessities of life have advanced, roundly speaking, 100 per cent.; yet the pensions remain the same. If we were paying a salary, or a wage, well and good. Then we might say caveat emptor—let the man who makes the contract look after himself. But it is not so. We have said to the soldier: Go and fight for us; we will look after you; do not worry about that. And the way we look after him is to give him a pension which is now only half what it was when the pension list was first made out; yet we do not purpose increasing it in any way. And, strange to say, a man who is totally disabled gets $480 a year while his wife gets nothing. His children are provided for, but his wife gets nothing, on the principle, I assume, that man and wife are one, and therefore the wife is not entitled to anything. Or it may be that it is supposed that she would like to take in washing or something of that kind, doing something towards the support of the family. I do not endorse that view. I think that single men should be provided for on one scale and married men on another, and certainly the wife should not be ignored.—From Capt. Burnham's speech in Parliament on Pensions.

THE SOLDIERS' DEPENDENTS.

TWO MEN ENLIST. The one leaves a wife, but no children, behind him; the other a wife and five children. The pay of both men is the same, $1.10 a day, and their circumstances were as nearly as possible alike while they were in private life.

While the men are in the service of the Empire, the country, by way of recognition, sets out to care for the dependents at home. The Government allows each of the wives a separation allowance of $20 a month, which cannot fairly be regarded as other than part of the soldier's pay in addition to his daily wage. The men assign half their pay, or $15 a month, for the support of their families. They cannot devote more than twenty days' pay in any month for this purpose, and even assigning the pay is a matter left to their own choice, but if they refuse to help support their families in this way the separation allowance is withheld.

Under such an arrangement, the woman with no children receives as much as the one who has to find food and clothing and keep a roof over the heads of five offspring. It is true that the Patriotic Fund steps in and supplements the income of both families, grading the allowance according to the number of beneficiaries in the several families, but even this is not sufficient, with the money available, to make the arrangement at all equitable. The childless wife has the best of it again. The woman with the large family is the one whom the high cost of living most directly affects.

It requires no argument to convince any one that there is a serious defect in the present arrangement. It is apparent, too, that the Government has some change in mind, and it is not unlikely that soldiers' dependents will be dealt with by the Federal authorities on the same basis as that upon which the Patriotic Fund is operated, and that the allowances for maintenance will be graded according to the needs of the families who secure part of their income from this source.

It has already been stated that last month the Government sent out with the monthly cheques to soldiers' wives blank forms, to be filled up and returned to Ottawa. The dependents were asked to state whether they were regularly receiving the aid to which they are entitled.

There was no definite question as to whether or not the assistance was regarded as adequate, but the inference was plain.

It may be taken for granted, too, that the majority of the dependents of soldiers find the present allowance less than sufficient for their needs when the increased cost of living since the arrangements were made three years ago is taken into account. The only person who appears to be satisfied is the young wife without children, who is boarding with her friends and whose expenses have not increased as have those of the mother with four or five children still too young to earn anything.

The general sentiment seems to be in favor of grading the separation allowance according to the needs of the family for whose benefit it is designed, just as the Patriotic Fund is administered. With regard to the proposition to increase the pay of the soldiers, raising the separation allowance would really amount to this, but if the man without dependents is to receive a higher rate of wages, the increase can be kept out of his cheque every month and placed to his credit in the bank, to be paid to him at the time of his discharge.

When the men with dependents enlisted they were given the assurance that their families would be cared for during their absence, and in the event of their death. It is now the duty of the Government to see that that pledge is fulfilled.

THE STRIKE IN TORONTO.

FOURTEEN HUNDRED street car employes went on strike in Toronto this morning, and the entire transportation system is tied up. Toronto citizens can walk to and from their work with the exception of those fortunate enough to own horse carriages or automobiles.

Without going into the merits of the dispute between the men and the directors of the company, it is not hard to forecast the outcome. Street car strikes in the past, either in Canada or the United States, have invariably had one result. The company is in the end obliged to give in. For some reason or other a privately owned street car system always seems to be in disfavor with the public. In case of a strike, the sympathy of the majority of the patrons of the line is with the men, and public opinion is generally sufficiently strong to bring about a settlement in their favor. The citizens are opposed to walking. They will insist upon their five-cent transportation with transfers over all lines, no matter what may be the point at issue between directors and men.

The street car employes in Toronto are simply following the course adopted by other classes of workmen when they demand a higher rate of pay, giving the increased cost of living as their reason. It has been stated that the directors of the Toronto Street Car Company recognise the justice of this claim, but that they have decided to precipitate a short strike in order to convince the stockholders than an increase in operating expenses could not possibly be avoided.

It seems unfortunate that the street car systems of the country have never been brought under the operation of the Industrial Disputes Act, as civic transportation lines would appear to be public utilities just as much as are the steam railways of the country. If the Act in question did apply to street cars, the present trouble in Toronto might have been averted.

ADVICE WASTED.

AMONG PUBLIC MEN these days it is regarded as vogue to have something to say for the encouragement of production. Senator Richardson is the latest heard from in this regard. He advises Ontario farmers to lose no time, but to drop their haying and other operations and sow from two to forty acres of fall wheat at once.

It must be conceded that the worthy member of that body of antiquated statesmen at Ottawa has some knowledge of agriculture. It is apparent that he at least knows that wheat is planted in the ground and not produced by grafting the plant on trees. But even with this information in his possession the senator is not an expert. He is out several months with reference to the proper time for sowing wheat. To plant it now would be sheer waste of time and material.

This case is another illustration of the advice with which farmers are pestered by those who have no real insight into the matters which they discuss with so much assurance. The average farmer generally understands his business. If he does not, he is not likely to profit by the counsel of those who know less about it than himself. Let the novice leave the farmer alone. The latter is not in the habit of dropping into a bank or a factory and volunteering advice as to how such an institution should be conducted. This is an age of specialists and experts. The affairs of the world will progress more smoothly if everybody concerns himself with the duties to which he has been called and refrains from attempting to regulate those that have fallen to others.

Wit and Wisdom

Dick Brown was very much addicted to drink and some of his friends determined to get him to take the pledge. To that end one of his neighbors read to him from a newspaper of a man who was so saturated with alcohol that in blowing out a candle his breath caught fire and he was burned to death.

"Burned to death!" exclaimed Dick. "Bedad that'll never happen to me. Bring me a prayer book and listen—'I, Dick Brown, solemnly declare that as long as I live I will never blow out a candle.' "

Landlord (to Pat, who had just paid his rent).—"I hear you are a good judge of whisky, Pat. Now, here are two different bottles, and I want you to tell me which is the best."

Pat takes a glass of each, smacks his lips and looks wise.

Landlord—"Well, Pat, which is the best?"

Pat—"Begorra, yer honor, they are both good, but would you mind filling me another glass of the first. I have forgotten the taste of it."

It was a very bitter night, and an equally freezing and frozen urchin, who, after wandering the streets for some time, at last came to anchor over the grating of a restaurant.

"Swipe me!" exclaimed the shivering boy, as he inhaled great mouthfuls of the savory odor arising from beneath his feet, "I wish I had a slice o' bread to go wiv that there smell!"

He was a new member of the harbor board in a northern seaside town, and was attending his first meeting. The board was discussing a proposal to place two buoys at the entrance to the harbour for the guidance of mariners.

"I beg to propose as an amendment," said the new member, "that one man should be placed there instead of two boys, as the latter are too young for such a responsible position."

FORGET-ME-NOT DAY, JULY 21.

It is the good thought of the organizers of the "Belgian Day," which will be held July 21st,, whch has surnamed it "Forget-Me-Not Day." It is the dainty little blue flower which will be distributed by the young ladies who have graciously offered their services for the National Celebration of Belgium to the generous people who will encourage the work by giving, as much as they will be able, when solicited. The sympathies for Belgium are getting more profound as the sufferings of her inhabitants are increasing under German domination, with the thought and patience which give the certitude of the victory.

So, everyone, no doubt, will be seen wearing a forget-me-not on that day.

If the population holds good, as we say, up to the present they have admirably kept; but there is a limit to human endurance. For this indispensible endurance to continue, Belgium must be helped. Here we have suffered from the rear no doubt, What are our sufferings to compare with those who have suffered through cold and hunger, who have seen their country invaded by modern barbarians worse than those of the past, who have seen their homes burnt, their fields ruined, their relations and friends massacred! And to-day, the deportations are enslaving Belgians who are asking the civilized world, their hands tied with chains, the help for their women and children to whom they took the living means. No one can be unalarmed at the sight of those little innocents who are slowly perishing by all the privations, and that under the eyes of their mothers who have made the sacrifice necessary to save them.

The sufferings of the Belgian people are well known! Everyone knows that they are not merited; it is for the respect of their signature! This is sufficient to obtain the sympathies of the whole world. The Canadians will once more show their generosity on the Belgian Day. The Belgian works will largely benefit from gifts on this occasion.

From now subscription lists are opened in the first page of "Pro Belgica" to the profit of the Belgan Day (see p. 8). Subscribers can choose the works to which they wish to give. The sixteen-page illustrated souvenir paper which will be published on July 21st will be sent to subscribers. The contents and texts of illustrations will be published in this issue of the paper.

Send your donations, as small as they may be, to the Administration of "Pro Belgica," 32 Sussex Avenue, Montreal.

The opening of these subscription lists enables all the persons who desire to contribute to diminish the innumerable sufferings of Belgium. Think of it and do your share.

Candidates for exemption from military service may go before any tribunal in the Province.

Every substantial village will be visited by a tribunal to deal with applications for exemptions.

Later regulations will provide whether or not applicants may appeal through counsel.

Men obvously unfit for service will not have to go through the red tape of appearing before a medical officer.

County judges will be utilized on local tribunals where possible, but these boards wil be made up mostly of laymen.

The presence of military men on the tribunals is not desired by the Government.

Members of tribunals will not be paid for their services. They will serve until 100,000 men are secured.

Appeals will not be restricted to a review of evidence, but will be virtually with new witnesses if desired.

No deposit will be required from citizens who appeal, and costs will be reduced to a minimum, if not eliminated altogether.

Second appeal to the court of last resort are to be discouraged. The Minister of Militia may make such an appeal against the citizen as a matter of right, but the citizen may only appeal to his court if permitted.

THE COST OF PRESERVING

Last summer, many women did not put up their regular supply of homemade preserves; and bitterly they regretted it. They became scared at what they called the high price of sugar. When sugar reached 7½ cents a pound, they let the strawberries and cherries go by. When sugar sold at 8 cents and 8½ cents, they permitted the luscious peaches, pears, plums and apples to rot on the ground.

But never again. This summer will see a genuine, old time revival in homemade preserving; because the women of Canada now realize what a foolish extravagance it was to do without preserves; especially when the increased cost of putting them up is infinitesimal.

As a matter of fact, every woman can prove — with her first lot of strawberries, that the increased cost of sugar is surprisingly small.

Turning back the files of papers publishing market prices, we find that in 1912, 1913 and 1914, up to the outbreak of war, the average price of granulated sugar was 5½ cents a pound. Today, the best granulated sugar retails at 8½ cents. This is an average of 3 cents a pound for the whole of the country.

A quart jar of preserved berries or fruit, requires but half a pound of sugar; so that the increased cost of the sugar, is only 1½ cents a quart, compared with the cost of preserving before the war when sugar was unusually cheap.

Now is the time for the women of Canada to come gallantly to the aid of the country, and help to conserve our food supplies. The fruit crop this year, promises to be a record one, both in quality and quantity. Foreign markets being closed because of the shortage in transportation, it rests almost entirely with our homemakers as to whether this crop worth millions is to be a source of profit or a complete loss.

With the home pantries filled with delicious jams, preserves and jellies; with these delicacies served for desert intsead of pies and cakes; enormous quantities of wheat will be released for the troops in France and for the starving children in Belgium.

A careful consideration of the above facts will show to the Canadian housewife that sugar is not too high for preserving profitably; that the increased cost of sugar has not materially increased the cost of homemade preserves; and that preserving is both an economy and a patriotic action.

STREAMS AND FORESTS

Great Moderative Influence of Trees is Absolutely Proved

Experience has proved that the forest works efficaciously against many dangers resulting from the elements let loose, such as avalanches, falls of stones, erosion, earthslides, inundations. These are facts admitted and indisputable, but how and in what measure does the forest exercise this moderating action upon the destructive power of water? How can it lessen the destruction from inundations? It is in order to attempt an answer to this leading question that the Swiss Federal Station of Forest Research in 1900 installed an observing station in the basin from which two streams of the Bernese Emmental are fed. These streams, tributaries of the Hornbach, are located in the territory of the commune of Summiswald-Wasen, on the northwest slope of the Napf. The geological formation is fissured pudding-stone which decomposes readily. One of the basins, with an extent of 140 acres, is completely wooded. The other with an area of 175 acres has only a small average of wooded district, about 30 per cent. The forest is composed of spruce and of alder bushes. The measurement of the precipitation, rain and snow, takes place regularly throughout the year. In each of the basins there have been installed three rain gauge stations at different altitudes. At the junction of the two streams with the Hornbach certain apparatus registers automatically every five minutes day and night the volume of the water flowing.

The Research Station has: 1. In case of storms accompanied with heavy rains the maximum outflow in the wooded valley is from 30 to 50 per cent. less than that from the other valley, and there is another beneficial circumstance from the action of the forest, that this maximum flow is produced later in the wooded basin than in the other. 2. In the long periods of drought (the summers of 1904, 1906, 1908 and 1911) the wooded district gave without interruption a flow of water while in the denuded valley the stream dried up and all the springs ceased although at a normal time they have an abundant flow. These observations seem thus to have demonstrated irrefutably the moderative action of the forest upon the regulation of the stream flow which some have denied.

Encourage Home Garden

Horticultural societies and other local organizations can do no better work than encourage the cultivation of the home garden. It not only adds to the beauty of the home, but the cumulative effect upon a municipality spans the chasm between civic pride and civic neglect.

FEED FOR DAIRY COW

Should Store Flesh on the Animal by Right Care

The milk produced by a dairy cow of proper type is in proportion to feeds consumed plus the reserve of feed stored in the body as fat and flesh. As an example of the latter it has been shown that fresh cows may be fed on a maintenance ration or even starved for several days yet produce milk in fairly large quantities with, however, a proportional decrease of weight and flesh. Again it has been proven that cows of proper type having a store of flesh before calving will not only milk more heavily but also more persistently during the succeeding milking period. It is clear, therefore, that this supply of fat and flesh stored on the dry cow of dairy type will be drawn upon when most needed and be either given off as milk or so take the place of feeds consumed in supplying bodily needs that a larger proportion of these feeds may be utilized for milk production.

Ships Made of Stone

Concrete holds its own in the construction of our homes, our public buildings, our bridges, our monuments and even in our ships. Harbored safely in Norwegian waters is an enormous thousand-ton barge, built entirely of concrete; a 70-year-old skiff of stone floats merrily on the waters of the River Seine, while a concrete barge is daily towed up and down a certain portion of the River Thames.

THE SALVING OF A DERELICT

By MAURICE DRAKE

Menzies snorted contemptuously. "If ye're sae set on workin' in harbor," he said, "ye can wash the floor o' the hold. Ye'll find a bucket on deck. Yon's a broom"; and Laurence set to work upon the first paid manual labor of his life.

It was a weary business. Forward the hold went beneath the floor of the forecastle, and, owing to the low headroom, the scrubbing had to be done on hands and knees. Being farthest from the hatchway this part of the floor was in almost pitch darkness; it was slippery with scales and offal, and the stench in such a confined space was almost unbearable. Added to this, the difficulty of using a heavy ship's scrubber in so narrow a space, the discomfort of being wet through from the splashing bucketfuls of water, and the necessity for kneeling in it, made Laurence more than once begin to regret the whole of his undertaking.

It was two in the afternoon before he finished, and then all the water and offal had to be sent on deck and emptied overboard. In this he was aided by the boy, who lowered empty buckets and hoisted the full ones to the deck. This done he went ashore, and with William Clitheroe as guide, sought out a slop shop where for a couple of shillings he bought a straw mattress for his bunk and some other necessaries, a tin mug, and a plate, knife, and fork. These he took to the forecastle and placed in the cupboard, asking no man's leave or license.

On his return to the boat he found that Menzies and the Dane had gone ashore. Impressing William into his service, he did his best, first to clean out and render the forecastle more habitable, and next somewhat to reduce the slovenly disorder on deck. For three hours he labored steadily, coiling ropes, washing down woodwork, and throwing overboard much of the uncleanly raffle of rope ends, seaweed, and fish offal that cumbered the little vessel. Just as his labors approached completion Menzies came on board. He had evidently been drinking, and though he said nothing he spat furiously on the now clean deck and kicked a neat coil of rope into an untidy heap before going below. Laurence, as silent as he, recoiled the rope and sat upon the bulwarks waiting events.

He had not long to wait. Menzies soon came on deck and went aft to his father's cabin, kicking the coil of rope again as he passed. Laurence once more coiled it neatly, carried it aft upon his arm, placed it carefully at the top of the cabin steps, and then, armed with a capstan bar, sat himself upon the companion head. Menzies returned to the deck within a few minutes, and Laurence, the heavy bar swinging in his hands, stood and faced him.

"There's that coil of rope," he said, pointing to it. "Kick it again, will you?"

Menzies looked at the erect and steady figure, at the bar in his hand, at the coil of rope, and then—stepped over it. The first battle of the campaign was won.

The Fairy Belle sailed on the night's tide, and for a month Laurence Averil regretted from morning till night and from night till morning that he had ever accepted Harper's offer. Dispiriting as his reception on board had been, he found it but a premonition of such discomfort and misery as he had never conceived possible. Menzies, it is true, offered him no violence. He had, apparently, taken the man's measure, and concluded to leave well alone; but his surliness, his foul language and filthy habits, were alone enough to sicken any shore-bred man, and the remainder of the crew, who were in abject fear of him, followed his example so far as to shun Laurence entirely. The skipper, a little wizened man given to surreptitious drinking, was entirely under the thumb of his ruffianly son, and his tone towards Laurence varied from whining discourtesy to occasional and equally unpleasant familiarity. When he found his new hand had some idea of navigation he promptly turned his ability to account, almost always leaving Laurence to work out his observations on the broken slate that served him for desk, and sometimes requesting him to take those observations himself.

Not that the battered old quadrant was much used, unless by any chance he was driven off the fishing grounds he knew. Generally the boat was steered by compass and lead alone, and Laurence was greatly surprised to find that the maudlin little fisherman knew the depth and material of nearly all the sea-bottom between Iceland and the Hebrides as intimately as a man knows his own doorstep. After days without an observation of any sort—days of bitter wind and thick drenching squalls that shut out view of empty sky and empty sea alike—days of weary, cruel toil at the nets and gear, wet through and wretched, the old man would finger the deep-sea lead handed to him, smell it and say, "Somewheres aboot three hunder mile nor'-nor'-west o' Wick. Tuesday, is it? Keep her course a couple o' points east; we'll pick up the steamer to-morrow's morrn." And almost invariably he was right.

No such certitude appeared possible to Laurence. When the weather was clear and fine, all he could see was lonely ocean, its line sometimes broken in the distance by the faint cloudlike shape of Rockall, or by an outlier of the Faroes.

Sometimes the ring of sea was empty and desolate; sometimes it showed the distant topsail of another trawler or a faint trail of smoke from a steamer below the sea line. In foul weather even this was denied him, and week after week of angry, wind scourged, following seas, their crests torn into chill spray, beneath grey, cold rainsqualls or grey and lowering skies, made him feel lonely and lost and miserable.

In thick weather, when the clammy North Sea fogs shut out all sight of sea a dozen yards from their bulwarks, when the boat rose and fell on the still, oily swell, the fog bell ringing dismally or the hand fog horn hooting discordantly day and night the very fear of death came to him. In every slow-counted moment of light or darkness he was filled with dread of the sudden looming of a steamer's steel prow in the darkness its crushing of their little boat, and a miserable drowning, unreported, uncared for, far out at sea.

The work, too, was heavy—heart breaking. Tradition of the sea demanded that watch and watch should be kept, but all hands were needed for the lowering and hoisting of the trawl, and between times the boy and himself often had the deck to themselves. Loneliness and heavy labor poor and vilely cooked food, wet and cold and discomfort, and the fear of death over all: a hundred times in that first month he made up his mind to the book-keeper's desk when he returned—if ever he should return.

Yet he took some pleasure in learning the business, and so learned readily. Learned to managed the heavy tackles that held and drew the great trawl net; learned to steer the boat, her trawl down, before the following seas that flung her to and fro before them like a toy, striking the clumsy rudder from side to side and threatening to tear the tiller from his cold-stiffened hands; learned such seamanship as all his summer yachting had never shown him, and in so doing at times almost forgot his wretchedness.

Then there were other consolations. Late as the season was, it was pleasant on deck in fine weather. The trawl, too, with its half-ton of wonders at each successful haul, was a mine of interest. The cod of the northern banks formed perhaps a third of its takings, and flat fish, great halibut and skate, a good half; but the rest was always uncertain, and nearly always, to the eye of a stranger, full of new and strange objects. He got to look for the untying of the bottom of the monstrous bag, slung up to the mast by its heavy blocks and tow ropes, with more and more of interest.

The cruise lasted six weeks, and it was mid October before he again landed at Leith. Changing into clean clothes, he went ashore, had a shave—not without some complacent glances in the mirror at his lean brown face with the sharpened lines beneath the eyes, keener for their days of outlook on shine and storm—and then to Clement Harper's office to demand the book-keeper's stool.

Mr. Harper was engaged, a clerk told him. Whilst waiting would he check over the invoices of fish from the Fairy Belle as delivered by the steamers?

Laurence took them to an unoccupied stool and glanced over them carelessly. He could not check them, the tally of each catch being in the skippers hands, nor did they, in face of his resolution to quit the life, excite any particular interest in him. At the bottom of the last sheet, however, was written the amount of money due to the boat, the shares apportioned to each hand. Opposite his own name was a sum that made him gasp. Regarding the voyage as being in some way only a trial before apprenticeship, he had never considered the possibility of any payment being due to him, and yet here in one line was the short intimation that to "L. Averil, hand," was due the sum of seventeen pounds and some odd shillings and pence! As a book-keeper his salary would be scarcely half as much—and Clement Harper had spoken of this life as being merely preparatory for a better position:

He entered the private office with his resolution somewhat shaken, and the faint taunt underlying his employer's greeting went far to change it altogether.

"And how d'ye like the life, Laurie, lad?" he asked.

"It's ghastly," Laurence said shortly.

"Ah. There's a nice three-legged stool ready for ye any day ye like. Ye'll be staying ashore, nae doubt?"

"I meant to, Mr. Harper," Laurence said slowly. "I tell you straight I meant to till this minute, and now I—I'll try one other voyage, at all events."

"Good lad," Clement Harper said, and nodded approvingly. "Ye've your father's grit some of it, anyway. Now go and draw your money. Ye've had a good cruise. Seventeen pun' eleven's no bad for a short six weeks. Ye'll dine wi' me to-night, and tell me all about it."

And in three days' time Laurence was at sea again.

CHAPTER V.

Menzies's attitude changed noticeably from the very outset of the second voyage. Any attempt at courtesy was impossible from the innate nature of the brute, but attempts at genial familiarity, far more offensive to Laurence than his previous holding aloof, took the place of his former sulky silence. Ready as Laurence would have been to greet any overtures to a more peaceful condition of things on board, he yet doubted the man's sincerity, and was, if possible, more on his guard than before in all his dealings with the skipper's son.

Within the week he found his suspicions justified, and, desperate with the hardness of his life, and with a cold-blooded and skilful attempt at no less than murder, finally decided that force majeure—brute force, and force alone—should in future influence all his dealings with Jock Menzies and his kind. If they were irredeemably brutal and ferocious, he too would adapt himself to their savage life and more savage habits. If he was hated for the education that had set him above them, that education should only serve as an aid to make him worse—far worse—than these brutes that had none.

The fourth day after leaving Leith, Laurence, who had had the early morning watch, came on deck again at eight o'clock. Oscar, the Dane, was at the tiller, Jock Menzies leaning against the bulwarks near him. He relieved the helm, nodding cheerfully in answer to the latter's "Morrn, Averil," and Oscar going forward and descending the forecastle steps, the two men had the deck to themselves.

Laurence had slept soundly and well, the blessed deep-sea sleep that brightens the eye and clears weariness from brain and limbs. The morning, though overcast, was clear and not too cold, and, the breeze being light, the heavy topsail had been hoisted during his watch below.

Big Jock drew his attention to it, almost deprecatingly, Laurence noted thoughtlessly.

"Now, ye're a yachtsman, Averil," he said. "What d'ye think o' the set o' that taups'l?"

"It's rotten bad," Laurence said cheerfully. Menzies's question had anticipated the uninvited remark by a second only. "What fool made fast that downhaul?"

"That'll be Oscar. Gin ye can better it, go an' do it. I'll tak'—tak' th' helm." He moistened his lips and glanced furtively at Laurence as he stretched to the tiller.

Laurence relinquished it and went forward to the mast. The downhaul—the rope that should hold the lower corner of the great topsail close to the mast—hung slack, and the sail bellied out like a flag at its lower edge. Stooping to cast off the rope, he swung by one arm to the downhaul, and before he had attempted to pull with any weight upon it, halliard and sheet had parted, and he was buried beneath a heap of crumpled sail, the heavy spar to which it was attached coming with a crash perpendicularly upon the deck within a couple of feet of his head.

As he shouldered his way from beneath the sail Jock's voice called to him from the stern, and Laurence heard and wondered at the shake in it.

"Wha—what's wrang?" he cried.

"Halliard's parted. Keep you the helm for half an hour," Laurence answered. "I'll go below and get a marline spike and splice it. Sheet's gone too, it seems."

"You clumsy fool," Laurence said, as the two looked inquiringly at his re-appearance. "What sort o' job do you call that—hoisting that topsail? Like a bag."

"Haf you lowered it?" the Dane asked.

"It lowered itself. I took a pull on your slack downhaul, and the halliard parted. Good job for me I wasn't a foot farther forward, or you'd have worked double tides the rest of the voyage."

"I did not belay the downhaul," Oscar said. "Jock, he put taups'l on her. I nefer touch de sail. Is it your move, William?"

Laurence went on deck with black suspicion in his heart. As he expected he found halliard and sheet neatly cut half through. The work had not been clumsily done, as a sailor's knife must have done it. The inner strands of the rope alone showed a clean cut, the exterior ones being ragged. A penknife had been pushed between the strands, worked round, and withdrawn. When done, the rope could scarce have shown an external mark.

So this had been the meaning of Jock Menzies's altered manner. He thought of the crash of that heavy spar on the deck, and grew cold with mingled rage and fear. How long before he might expect another attempt on his life, and what form would it take next? It should at all events find him prepared, he resolved then and there. It was as much as he could do to steady his voice as he called to the brute at the helm. "This spike's full large, Jock. I'll go get a prickler. Shan't be a minute."

The revolver lay at the bottom of his bag. One jerk of the extractor threw the cartridges into his hands, where they seemed strangely light. He pulled out a bullet with his teeth, and—there was no powder behind it.

In that hour gentleness left Laurence Averil. He reloaded the chambers with other cartridges from a hitherto unopened packet, put the revolver in his pocket, and went on deck, resolved that within the hour Menzies should be maimed and broken, or that he himself would be overboard, this wretched burden of so weary a life behind him.

He had not been his father's son if hasty action had followed his resolution. Jock Menzies could wait. Cutting three feet from the treacherous end of the halliard, he spliced it carefully, did as much for the sheet, rehoisted the sail, and went back to the helm, the two rope ends in his hand.

"What d'ye make of that?" he asked.

Menzies eyes were aloft, around the horizon, at the binnacle, looking anywhere but near Laurence's stern face or the accusing rope ends in his hand.

"That—chafed, likely," he almost faltered.

"Chafed?" Laurence held the cut ends six inches from his eyes.

"Eh? Oh, that'll be old rope—or bad," the ruffian lied. The rope was nearly new, and as good Manila as was ever bought.

"It knots well," Laurence said, and tied a hard knot in the end of one piece. "See that?"

The lowered eyes raised themselves to his own curiously, and he lashed out at the hairy face with the knotted end. The rough fibre of the rope cut a deep wound under one eye, tearing off a patch of skin and beard two fingers wide.

Menzies shouted with the agony of the blow, dropped the tiller, and leaped forward—to look into the muzzle of Laurence's pistol. Believing the cartridges harmless, he would have rushed to his death, but the pain in his eye compelled him to cover it with his hand for a moment, and in the darkness Laurence's tense voice filled him with terror.

"I've changed those cartridges," it said. "The ones you spoiled are in the forecastle. Now, you dog—what have you to say before I kill you?"

"Ye—ye'll hang," Menzies said. His throat was husky with fear

"I'd prefer hanging to this life," Laurence said calmly, and at the moment he meant it. "Better be hanged than have to live with such filth as you, you murdering beast. But I'll teach you, you scum! I'll show you who's to be master on this boat. Go to the forecastle and call Oscar and the boy, and come aft with them."

Menzies obeyed, his hand before his eye, reeling as he walked. When the three came aft Laurence handed the tiller to the Dane. "Get you forrard, dog," he said to Menzies. "Stand by the mast. William, call the skipper."

The little man came on deck, a startled expression on his face. He had as usual gone to bed drunk, and was anything but clear-headed on being waked; but his son's bloodstained cheek, together with Laurence's savage white face and the revolver in his hand, sobered him swiftly.

"What's this?" he cried.

"This hound of a son of yours has tried to do for me," Laurence said. "And now I've called you and all hands on deck to see justice done. If he could be replaced I'd kill him, I tell you straight; but we can't get another hand here. Hold up your hands, you ——"

Up went the hands, palms open and towards the little group by the wheel. Laurence levelled his revolver at the left and pulled the trigger. The bullet missed its mark, a white splinter of wood jumping in air from the bitts of the bowsprit. Menzies flinched and his hands fell.

"Up again." The barrel came down until it pointed at the broad breast. The hands rose shakily, the barrel rising after them.

The next shot was better aimed, and grazed a finger before going overboard to ricochet a couple of times upon the waves before disappearing. Menzies broke down and begged for mercy, with tears.

"Up again." A third report, and Big Jock, screaming, fell to his knees. His uplifted left hand showed four fingers and a bloodstained sponge of ragged skin and flesh. The thumb was gone!

CHAPTER VI.

The little tragedy ending with the shot that sheared the thumb from Jock Menzies's left hand maimed Laurence in spirit as cruelly as it had the fisherman in body. His breeding, his gentle upbringing, fell from him like a garment, and henceforward all the service his education did him was to point his taunts, or aid him in selecting biting words wherein to frame curses or threats.

He walked like a sombre devil unchained the cold cruelty of his unhappy life incarnate in him. As he passed forward after the shot he stayed to kick and threaten his weeping, broken antagonist as he was rising to his feet; and for the rest of the voyage all hands on board, the skipper included, feared him as they feared nothing else on earth.

A sullen demon of cruelty possessed him. He spared none; the boy felt the weight of his blows and oaths at as little provocation as Menzies and the Dane. Outwardly calm, his face yet began to show relentless lines about the thin lips and nostrils, and at the slightest delay in the execution of an order—he gave more orders now than the skipper himself, and they were far more swiftly obeyed—heavy punishment of kicks and blows visited the offender, accompanied by such curses and vile mockery as frightened all the crew, accustomed though they were from their childhood to the foulest of language.

These, living in dread of him they yet admired him, as rough men of the lower orders always will. William in particular almost adored him, and even though his shoulders still showed marks of recent bruises from Laurence's heavy hand, spoke of him with pride to boys on other trawlers at meetings in the lonely seas, or to members of the crew on board the weekly steamers that took their fish to port.

"Ah! ye dinnae ken oor Averil," he would say, as the dinghy tossed and sank by the steamer's iron sides. "Him that lickit Big Jock. He's a de'il, mon. Look ye—five days syne." He would show black bruises on his puny arms, pride in his voice at living on the same boat with "that de'il."

As for Laurence himself, something seemed to have snapped within his mind, cutting him adrift from his past, depriving him of the power of thinking of the future. He was as a man stunned. The need of self-preservation, seldom so acutely defined in a civilized community, had benumbed his senses.

Had he been capable of clear thought or of reasoning, he would inevitably have committed suicide, but his life only presented itself to him as an ugly dreariness that some outside power called on him to sustain, and he obeyed its dictates blindly. He had endeavored to live among these brutes amicably, respecting their rights and taking little trouble to assert his own, and the result had been his attempted murder.

In his new stupid habit of mind it seemed to him now necessary to disregard all their claims to humanity and to treat them like the treacherous animals they appeared to be. He bore Jock Menzies no special malice. He was no worse than the rest. All the crew only formed just a part of his hated life as did cold gales, head seas, or frostbite. Over the forces of the almost Arctic winter he had no control: in that alone they seemed to him to differ from the living beings with which he associated them.

He began to drink, too. Not heavily at first, but the raw and fiery spirits sold to the trawlers by Dutch copers grip the brain at early acquaintance. He was rarely drunk, the spirits only fanning his dull resentment against life into moody hatred against some single member of the crew. In one of his bouts he took the skipper by the neck—the two were drinking together—and shook him like a rat, beating his head against the wall of his own cabin.

The man had meant no offence. Encouraged by beholding his feared and secretly admired hand sitting at his own table, he had ventured upon some foul familiarity, and surprise at the reception of his remark, put forward as a feeler to more genial intercourse, almost overcame his abject terror.

And yet there was some grim method in Laurence's madness. For all that he chastized the men with scorpions as against the whips Jock Menzies had wielded, he drove them to steady labor, and the shares paid to each hand in port rose above, more often than fell below, the receipts of his first voyage.

He never spared himself, and watch and watch were kept justly as they had never before been on the Fairy Belle. If he seized on any member of the crew avoiding his share of the work, swift punishment of buffets and tongue-lashings surely ensued; but he as readily thrashed Oscar the Dane for refraining from waking him to take his trick at the helm, as he had, two nights before, kicked Menzies and Clitheroe for delay in coming on deck for their own.

Not that the justice was aught but unconscious. His mind held nought but hatred—hatred of all things: of his lonely hard life, of the boat, the work, the crew, and the leaden-hued sea and gloomy sky that ringed them round—and his rude justice was as devoid of reason as the cruelty with which he enforced it.

No man dared lift hand or voice against it or against him. Big Jock was broken; he passed him by on deck in silence, obeyed his commands as silently, cringed when directly spoken to, and always addressed him as "Mr. Averil," and "Sir," courtesies unheard of on a trawler since first men went to sea.

The day before the voyage came to a close he called father and son into the little cabin aft and warned them with threats against any attempt at [illegible]

"You, Jock Menzies," he said "I've shot your thumb off, and serve you d——d well right. We'll be ashore to-morrow, and if either of you tries any law nonsense on me, I'll kill you. I mean it. I hate this life; I'd as soon be hanged as here, afloat with you; but if I stay ashore I shall only starve. If you split, you'll maybe lock me up for six months, and when I come out I'll kill you. Both of you mind."

"Now you get forrard and tell Oscar and the boy the same, and see you get them to keep their mouths shut; for if the tale gets out, no matter who tells it, I'll kill you just the same. Get!"

And when the Menzies got ashore not even their womenfolk knew more than that Big Jock had crushed his thumb in the trawl winch.

To his own surprise, Laurence found no pleasure at returning to civilized surroundings. Clement Harper's decently appointed house was irksome to him. The dainty napery and glass of his well-furnished table, so delightful on his first return, gave him now no approach to any feeling of comfort. The dreary forecastle assorted better with his frame of mind, and on his third return to Leith he curtly announced to his host that he had taken rooms nearer the Fish Quay. He could look after his work there better, he said. In the day he did work savagely and furiously, but his nights were spent amongst the fishermen and sailors in the taverns of the waterside. He rarely appeared at the office, and never again at Harper's house, his resentment at his hard fate being in no small degree directed against the man he considered responsible for it.

Clement Harper shook his head at his protége's altered manner and appearance. "It'd ha' killed most," he said; "it's made a man o' him, but not altogether a good man from the Sunday School point o' view, I'm thinking. He's a reckless deevil—I hope the lad'll not threw himself away."

Indeed Laurence was falling low. Hating himself for it, as he hated all his surroundings, he lived when ashore in the same squalid vice as his fellows. As he had at first foreseen, his education and knowledge of the better things of life only made him chief amongst men who had known only the worst. "Better be head stoker in hell than grill," he said once, when Harper had ventured to remonstrate with him; and the roughest fishermen in the fleet, the vilest-tongued viragos of the waterside, held him in dread. The future held nothing for him. Dreary though this life might be—squalid, wretched, and cruel—it was yet better, he thought, to bear this savage striving for existence, this wild life of fighting, swearing, and drinking, than to make any attempt to labor back to decency. He thought no more of Harper's offer of a place in the business in the future. What right had he, foul-tongued, foul-lived blackguard that he was, to work with men of smooth hands and tongues? The past was dead. His very speech took on [illegible] inflection and accent and [illegible] Averil, [illegible] was lost—merged in Laurie Averil, brute and drunken fisherman.

CHAPTER VII.

In the April following upon Laurence's embarkment on his life of purgatory, Harper by way of experiment purchased a steam trawler and offered him the position of leading hand aboard her. Laurence carelessly accepted, moved more by an idle interest in the steam-driven machinery than by any desire of promotion or increased pay. To his surprise, William Clitheroe begged to be allowed to accompany him, and on being refused returned to the request again and again.

"You young fool," Laurence said. "What d'you want to come for? You'll only rate as boy if you do, and if you stay on the Fairy Belle you'll get a shift upwards—they'll likely take another boy now."

"Ah don't care," the boy said. "Tak' me, Averil. Jock Menzies'll half kill us all over again when ye're gone. I know the way ye like your grub cooked—an'—an' all. Tak' me wi' ye."

"All right," Laurence assented. "You can come if you like. I'll speak to Harper about it"; and the upshot was that the boy made the transfer as well.

Preceded by a shocking reputation, Laurence from the first found strained relations with every hand on board. The fireman, a Geordie from Sutherland, took advantage of their first meeting to vaunt the prowess of Durham and the colliery districts against that of the Lowlands, only withdrawing his contentions after a fight, lasting fifteen minutes, in which he lost two teeth and ended by being knocked down the engine-room hatch. Laurence, nursing a dislocated finger joint, explained in language unfit for repetition that he held no brief for the Lowlanders, but that he should then or in future be delighted to fight any swine from south or north of the Tweed upon the slightest provocation; in consequence finding himself shunned henceforward by the crew of the Bute as religiously as he had been aboard the Fairy Belle.

WIFE TOO ILL TO WORK

IN BED MOST OF TIME

Her Health Restored by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Indianapolis, Indiana. — "My health was so poor and my constitution so run down that I could not work. I was thin, pale and weak, weighed but 100 pounds and was in bed most of the time. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and five months later I weighed 133 pounds. I do all the housework and washing for eleven and I can truthfully say Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been a godsend to me for I would have been in my grave today but for it. I would tell all women suffering as I was to try your valuable remedy."—Mrs. Wm. TWO WAYS TO ACQUIRE AN ESTATE

1—By saving, stinting, sacrificing; fighting the world at every turn, battling the blows of business competition; running the risk of fire, theft, embezzlement and misfortune; skimping your family, and yourself maybe, and standing only one chance in twenty of reaching Old Age without being dependent upon others for support.

2—By securing a Life Insurance Policy—A Policy which guarantees to pay your Beneficiary at your death, either a definite lump sum or an income every month as long as she lives—an income that is fixed, certain, regular, inalienable, unassailable, untaxable, and which cannot be lost, sold, dissipated, squandered or mortgaged.

Which is the EASIER and MORE SENSIBLE Way to Acquire an Estate?

TWO WAYS TO BEQUEATH AN ESTATE

1—By Testamentary Document: Requires an Executor. Must go through legal red tape at court. Requires court costs. May require mouths or years to settle. This kind of Will can be broken or set aside. Property is subject to attachment for debts of the deceased.

2—By Life Insurance (when the Beneficiary is named): Requires no executor or administrator—you are your own executor, your own administrator. No need of court proceedings—no expense of court costs. Does not require time to settle. This is a Will direct which no lawyer can break nor court set aside. Policy is not subject to attachment for debts of the deceased.

LADIES PRESENT GIFTS TO MRS. REV. W. T. WICKETT

Wife of Retiring Pastor Honored by Former Fellow Workers at Fraserville and Bailleboro.

At the monthly meeting of the Ladies Aid Society of the Fraserville Methodist Church, which was held at the home of Mrs. L. Hughes, a very tangible gift was presented to Mrs. (Rev.) W. T. Wickett, accompanied by the following address:—

Dear Mrs. Wickett:—

The members of our Ladies Aid Society, knowing that you are soon to be removed from our midst to another field of labor, desire to express to you our regrets at having to part with you.

For the four years you have been with us, you ever have been our sympathetic and efficient president, and we all realize how much we will miss you, not only in our society, but in every department of our church work, you have endeared yourself to us in so many ways.

Your untiring, self-sacrificing efforts for the best interests of our Aid, your wise counsel, your kindly Christian charity, and sincere sympathy, in all we tried to do, has bound you to us with cords of love that cannot easily be severed, and we feel that we cannot express in words alone, as we would wish our esteem for you, and our appreciation of all you have done for us, therefore we ask you to accept this purse and the gold therein contained, as a small tangible token of our appreciation and effection with our kindliest wishes for yourself and Mr. Wickett on your new field of labor, and it is our sincere prayer that God's choicest blessing may be yours, and that you both may be spared for many years to labor in the Master's vineyard.

And although our ways and work in the future be apart, we trust we shall still be joined in heart, and hope and pray that we will all meet in "that land that is fairer than day" where partings come no more.

Signed on behalf of Fraserville Ladies Aid Society—

MRS. L. HUGHES.
MRS. R. LEWIS.
MRS. R. WATERMAN.
MRS. J. S. LATIMER.

AT Bailieboro, Too.

At the monthly meeting of the W.M.S. of the Bailieboro Methodist Church, which was held at the home of Mrs. Albert Dawsons, South Monaghan, on June 28, Mrs. (Rev.) W. L. Wickett was presented with a sum of money accompanied with the following address:

Dear Mrs. Wickett:—

Time in its relentless flight, has brought the members of Bailieboro W.M.S. to realize that the happy associations of the past four years must, by the decree of Conference, be severed, though intensely we regret the parting.

During the time we have been conscious of your prayers and sympathy for the success of all departments of church work.

Your happy smile has brought cheer to each and all of us, whenever we were privileged to have the pleasure of your presence with us.

As you are not removing far from us, we trust that you will meet with us i nthe coming years as opportunity offers, and we assure you that our best wishes are going with you, and our prayers also, that God in His goodness will abundantly bless you in your new field of labor.

Kindly accept this small token as a slight expression of the affection and esteem in which you are held by the members of this society.

Signed on behalf of the society—

MRS. J. W. DAWSON.
MRS. WILFORD DAWSON.
MRS. IRA DAWSON.

SACRED HEART SOCIAL

The annual social and supper on the spacious grounds of Sacred Heart Church is always regarded as the function in the South End second in importance not even to the Fair itself and last night that fact was again demonstrated. Hundreds from all parts of the city flocked into the grounds. They came in rigs from the country, on foot, in street cars, in autos and by jitney. The arirvals began early in the evening and the stream was steady up till 9 o'clock. Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.L.A., was among the prominent guests present and his Lordship Bishop O'Brien, with nearly every Catholic clergyman in the city and surrounding district was in attendance.

Four rows of tables, ladened with every delicacy that culinary ingenuity ever devised, were set in the open air and the places at these were filled from five o'clock until the gathering broke up. The 57th Regiment Band furnished the music and the grounds were beautifully illuminated, the scene growing more striking as the darkness increased. There were seats for those who grew tired of walking. There were amusements to suit every taste, from a baseball assault on a wooden effigy of the Kaiser, to the lottery booth, the auction sale, and the invariable fish pond. Monster balloons were sent skyward at intervals and presented a picturesque spectacle as they sailed away in the clouds. All of the booths were brightly lighted and decorated with the flags of the Allies.

The drawings for the prizes were among the most interesting and exciting features of the evening's entertainment.

KILLING WILD OATS

Successful Method of Veteran Farmer is Described

The weed problem is one of the most serious confronting Canadian farmers. Some weeds are troublesome in every province, while others cause most loss where grain farming is exclusively practised. Wild oats are a terrible pest in the Prairie Provinces and must be dealt with earnestly in order to keep them under control. Various methods are advocated for their eradication, but one of the very best is the fallow and fall rye method practised and recommended by one of the oldest and most successful farmers of the Northwest.

The infested field should be ploughed deeply (seven or eight inches if possible), as soon as spring seeding is over, and each day's ploughing harrowed as ploughed. As each crop of oats appears it should be cultivated or disked up to the 10th or 12th of August when the field should be given a final preparation and seeded about Aug. 15th, at the rate of one and one-quarter bushels of fall rye and packed or harrowed after seeding. The oats that germinate with the rye will be winter-killed, and those coming up in the spring will not ripen before the rye is ready to harvest. The better the soil is cultivated and prepared to receive the rye crop the greater will be the number of oats germinated and winter-killed. If necessary this treatment can be repeated. Fall rye is a sure crop, the grain brings a good price, and it is the one crop which will ripen ahead of the wild oats.

BRITISH CHURCH UNION

Public Worship in Common, was Baptist Divine's Idea

A striking suggestion of what might be a "Variety Church" was made by the Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, of London, as President to the annual assembly of the Baptist Union at Bloomsbury Central Church. "My ideal for public worship in a village," said the president, "would be that all should gather in the ancient sanctuary which is the heritage of all; that there should be an Anglican service in the morning, a Methodist service in the afternoon, and a Baptist or Congregational service in the evening. If only it could be achieved, think what an influence it would have on the village and on the worship. In a town my ideal would be that on the morning of the Lord's Day we should go to our denominational sanctuary, and in the evening the people of all the churches should join as neighbors in prayers and praise in the nearest church, so that it would be no longer possible for two Christian families to live next door to each other and never worship to[illegible]"

GERMAN BEER DUELS

Hun Who Drank 100 Mugs a Day Was Honored

The beer-drinking capacity of the Germans is proverbial. To quote Henry de Halsalle:

"The German beer-drinker drinks hoggishly; he drinks not to slake his thirst, but afterwards to boast of his capacity in swallowing gallons of liquor." M. Halsalle relates how the Munich newspapers, not long ago, recorded with appreciation the death of an old man of eighty who had often been known to drink 100 mugs of beer (about ninety pints) in one day.

In the same town there is a beer-shop which became famous some time ago through a noted beer-drinker attending there regularly at noon. Crowds of persons would assemble to watch his performance. Having placed twelve mugs of beer on a table in front of him as the clock of an adjacent church began to strike twelve, the beer swiller would gulp down the contents of a mug at each stroke of the clock. Hearty cheers greeted him; to consume twelve mugs of beer while the clock strikes twelve is something to be proud of—in Germany.

Throughout Germany the students at the Universities hold what they call "beer duels." At these popular functions two of their number are accused of imaginary crimes, are tried, and the verdict is brought in that both the accused are guilty, and that they must suffer the extreme penalty of the law. This means that they have to swallow a large quantity of beer in a small, prescribed time. The loser has to pay for all the beer drunk during the proceedings.

The "culprits" stand opposite one another, having the requisite number of mugs of beer placed on the table before them. The signal given, the contestants grab for the mugs, which they empty one after another in quick succession. Mug after mug disappears as if they were poured down a sink. Cheering and shouting encourage the combatants. Seldom do they finish all their mugs; but one student is sure to come out ahead of the other. The contest decided, the victor is borne in triumph to the "throne"—a chair placed on a beer-table at the end of the hall, where he is crowned with a wreath of laurel and addressed as a patron saint.

Fire Caused By Snow

A snowstorm has been known before now to start a fire. A farmer living in a rural part of Belgium placed a quantity of quicklime near a shed on his farm, and left it there all night. In the course of the night snow fell on to the lime, and the heat thus developed became so great that it set the shed on fire, completely destroying it and its contents.

How to Work Corn Land

Cultivating corn level, not ridging or hilling soil round the stalks, saves moisture and adds to the yield. Ridging exposed a greater surface from which soil moisture can evaporate, and at the same time corn roots are cut off by the cultivator.

CANADA'S FIRE LOSSES

Canada continues her enormous fire losses, notwithstanding the efforts of many interests to reduce this drain upon her resources. During the one month of March, 1916, approximately $1,406,500 worth of created resources was consumed. The usual causes, namely, overheated and defective stoves, furnaces, pipes and chimneys, defective wiring, dropped cigars and cigarettes, and children with matches, were responsible for a large share of the loss. Stoves and furnaces should be carefully examined for defects. Chimneys and stove pipes should be thoroughly cleaned. Stove-pipes found corroded and dangerous should be at once replaced. Too much care cannot be taken to guard against fire. It destroys both life and property. In 1915 141 persons lost their lives in Canada by fire. Ordinary care only is required to prevent this loss, and it is hard to realise that Canadians are so blind to their own interests as not to appreciate this condition and give more attention to fire prevention.

Oiling the Automobile

In automobile motors with two-compartment crank cases and three-bearing crank-shafts it happens sometimes that the centre bearing leaks and one compartment will be flooded with oil while the other will be below level. A good way to test for a leaky centre bearing is to first drain all the oil from both compartments. Then place the same quantity of oil in each side slightly above the ordinary level. Adjust the pump to feed the same amount to each reservoir. The motor then is operated for a day or two. Place a pint cup under each drain-cock and then open the cocks. Note the difference in the quantity of overflow oil from each side and then a fair idea of the amount of leakage may be gained.

Slow With New Cars

Never speed a new car. All motors are given workouts on the blocks at the factories, but the car in your hands should be kept within a speed of 20 miles an hour or less during the first few weeks you have it. The moving parts are more or less tight when the car is new, and they should not be thrown into violent operation until they have had time to "set" with one another and become well lubricated. It is for this reason that racing cars usually show better speed their second year out.

Length of Finish

The new car is perhaps the best finished ever offered the public and for that reason, methods of keeping it in condition should be looked into as never before. Two seasons is not too long to expect a car to retain its good finish, providing reasonable care, as outlined above, is exercised. On the other hand, carelessness will make it look like an old machine in a month or two. It is doubtful if the running gear can be so well preserved, for it gets all the abuse of the road, but to paint over this part is a small matter.

Living Proof.

A New Plan Devised.

Reorganization of the methods of tabulating Canadian agricultural census is being effected at the present time. Heretofore the Dominion Government made an annual census, while each of the provinces has its own system of compilation. The methods of gathering the figures differed widely, and the results were often at variance. The outcome has been confusing and has made Canadian statistics of doubtful veracity. This has frequently resulted in harmful confusion on the part of foreign countries trading with Canada, with consequences hardly beneficial to Canadian producers. Mr. R. H. Coats, the Dominion statistician, has been working for some time on a plan by which the Dominion and the Provinces will co-operate and coordinate in the collection of agricultural statistics. The Dominion will collect certain figures and the province other figures, and these will be exchanged. A conference recently held in Ottawa with the statisticians of the Quebec and Ontario Governments reached an agreement subject to the approval of their Governments. Mr. Coats will leave shortly for the West to consult with the Western provincial authorities in order to ensure their agreement with the plan.

ORANGE CORNERS

A pleasant time was spent on Thursday evening, June 28th when the children of S.S. No. 10 and their teacher (Miss Johnston) held a school-closing concert. Harry Jackson was chairman, and after a very enjoyable programme, lunch was served. The Ladies' Guild of St. John's Church desire to thank Miss Johnston and the children for the sum of $10.50 which was collected during the evening and given to the guild for Red Cross Work. The children of our school deserve great credit, as this is the third concert given during the past year in aid of the Red Cross.

SAVINGS OF THE COUNTRY NOT TO BE CONSCRIPTED

Finance Minister White Makes Important Statement in House Yesterday.

Ottawa, July 10.—Before the orders of the day were called in the Commons yesterday, Sir Thomas White rose to make a statement on a matter of public importance.

"It has been officially drawn to the attention of the Government," he said, "that use of the expression 'conscription of wealth' in the debate in Parliament and by public and other bodies outside of Parliament, and by the press in its news reports, has caused a certain uneasiness among those whose savings constitute a vital factor in the business and industrial life of the Dominion and are so essential to the credit and prosperity upon which our efforts for the further prosecution of the war largely depends. I desire to say on behalf of the Government that there need exist no apprehension on the part of the public that any action of a detrimental character at any time will be taken with respect to the savings of he Canadian public.

"On the contrary, it will be the policy of the Government in the future as in the past to encourage in every way possible to exercise the thrift and economy resulting in national savings which have enabled Canada to maintain her credit and improve her economic position during the war. Any taxation to which it may be necessary for the Government to resort from time to time will be in accordance with legitimate and established forms of taxation sanctioned by the tradition and experience of British self-governing communities. This statement, therefore, must not be understood as precluding legislation providing for income taxation upon those whose incomes are such as to make it just and equitable that they should contribute a share of the war expendiures of he Domnion."

Three persons were burned to death and four others seriously injured by fire in the plant of the Inter-state Sanitation Company at Cincinnati.

KEEP THE TAIL LIGHT BURNING

Another Autoist Pays Fine for Failing To Do So.

Five dollars and costs was the fine imposed on another well-known citizen at the police court this morning for not having the tail light of his auto going. The police have received a great many complaints regarding the wilful violation of the bylaw by auto drivers. This applies particularly to those passing street cars which are discharging passengers.

A special watch is being placed to catch a few of the regular offenders, and the police magistrate has promised heavy fines to back up the efforts of the police.

A new censorship plan has been adopted by the Government. In effect t provdes for the strictest possible scrutiny of all outgoing cable messages.

CITY MILK SUPPLY SHOWS MUCH HIGHER STANDARD

Sanitary Inspector Stapleton Reports Improvement as Marked by Tests During June---Board of Health Routine.

The Peterborough Board of Health held its regular monthly meeting last evening when all the members were present except Mayor Duffus who is at Barriefield. Acting Mayor George Duncan presided.

City Treasurer Adams presented a statement showing that the cost of maintaining the Isolation Hospital since the first of the year was $1,655.60. There are monies outstanding and due for hospital treatment amounting to $67.50. This is a very small sum in comparison to other years and is due to the Superintendent collecting the fees at the hospital when it is offered.

Milk Tests Show Improvement.

Sanitary Inspector Stapleton presented a statement of the milk tested during June and it showed much improvement over May. Only one milk vendor was below the standard on one test and he was above the requirement on a second test being made. The Board decided to hold off the publishing of the tests for another period in the hope that the milk of some of the dealers will show a higher standard.

New Sewers Recommended.

The members were unanimous in their decision to recommend to the council the building of sewers on the following streets:

Gilchrist street from London to McDonnel streets.

Romaine street from Park to the boundary.

Monaghan Road from Romaine street to DeLaval street.

This latter sewer will give accommodation to the Henry Hope Co. plant.

Dogs Again Discussed.

The members of the Board were of the opinion that the police should not shoot dogs at the police station, but that all the destruction of them should take place at the incinerator where pens have been provided for that purpose. The expense of removing the bodies of animals to the incinerator will only be paid for when animal is found dead on the street and is removed on the order of the Sanitary Inspector.

This Practise Must Stop.

Sanitary Inspector Stapleton reported to the Board that a number of people claimed the right to clean their own outhouses and were burying the contents in their lots. The Board issued instructions that this practise must stop and offenders will find themselves in the Police Court and will be heavily fined.

A case was reported to the Board of a man who made an agreement with the scavanger and later on issued threats to the scavangar if he went on the premises. The Sanitary Inspector was instructed to take Police Court proceedings in all such cases.

Co-operate With Canadian Railways

In order to facilitate train movements and release passenger train crews for other work, the railways of the United States are making drastic reductions compared to which those in Canada early this year appear mild. Thus, for instance, the Pennsylvania Railroad merely on its lines east of Pittsburg has eliminated not less than 102 trains, or more than double the number taken off the whole of the Canadian railways. This will cut down the pasenger movement by an amount equivalent to 2,268,000 train miles per annum or over 6,500 train miles every week day. A number of parlor cars, restaurant cars and observation cars are being discontinued. The Boston and Maine has taken off no less than 255 trains, or more than five times the number taken off in Canada, saving approximately 41,000 train miles per week. Strenuous efforts are also being made to increase the carload and to impress on merchants the importance of rapid unloading so that the freight equipment shall be kept busy to its utmost capacity, and terminals should be kept clear. The American railroads realize that speed in freight movement is one of the greatest aids they can give to help win the war and according to all reports are achieving remarkable results. It is up to Canadians to see that Canada is not left behind in this patriotic race.

Reports that the United States Food Administration will fix an arbitrary price of less that $2 a bushel to the grower for the 1917 American wheat crop drew from Herbert Hoover a denial, adding that "we will not stand for speculative buying."

BRIDGES IN GOOD SHAPE.

County Council Committee Finish Inspection Tour.

The county roads and bridges committee returned yesterday afternoon after inspecting the country bridges. There was no material change in the situation over that found a year ago, and when the recommendations of the committee are completed the different structures will be in first-class shape. This morning Warden Brown and the Committee were down to Wellsbach bridge and agreed on the changes necessary.

This afternoon the members will pay a visit to the House of Refuge.

NEW CANADIAN NORTHERN ROCKIES

If you do not know about the wonderful mountain scenery, including Jasper and Mount Robson Parks, traversed by the transcontinental line of the Canadian Northern Railway between Edmonton and Vancouver get a copy of our handsome descriptive booklet, to be had for the asking from Thos. Mark, city agent.

The losses of Norwegian ships by U-boats during the six months ending June 29th, was about 4,490,000 tons.

AS IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

MARY, Mary, quite contrary,
How does your garden grow?
With silver bells and cockleshells
All standing in a row.

(By W-ll-m Sh-k-sp-r.)
Soothe ye, fair maid, whose mind doth seem to be Contrariwise and who hath been yclept
Mary and is ofttimes bespoken as Marie,
And who betimes the while at boarding school thou wert
Didst write thyself Mayrye,
I fain would ask
How doth thy little plot of ground wherein
Rosemary, sage and marjoram and thyme
Shouldst sprout and bud and bloom and bear—
How doth it grow?
What? Odsblood!
Nay! Not with silvery bells whose mellow tune
Doth even so outclink the clinkless cockleshells!

(By Edg-r All-n P-e.)
Look at Mary in her patch—
Garden patch—
Dressed her growing crop to match—
What a match!—
The potatoes making eyes as she swiftly, softly flies
As an angel cleaves the azure o'er the heights of paradise,
While the corn pricks up its ears as fair Mary's steps it hears,
And the turnips turn to watch her as with gentle grace she nears
Till she stops above the beets,
And my heart all madly beats—
Oh, it beats, beats, beats, beats, beats, beats, beats, beats!

(By A. C. Sw-nb-rn.)
So I prithee, fair maid, in thy garden
With thy hoes and thy hose and thy hose
(Should I not mention those, beg your pardon?),
Can you tell me today how it grows?
With its serrated bells made of silver,
With its cockleshells all in a row,
With its—
Bilver, dilver, filver, gilver,
Hilver, jilver, kilver, milver,
Nilver, pilver, wilver, vilver—
Ah, there's no rhyme for that—let it go!

(By W-lt Wh-tm-n.)
I salute you, Mary, in the garden,
With your hoe and rake and trowel,
And the smudge on your cheeks and your eyes
Looking scanningly over the back fence to see
Who is watching! I salute the corn and onions
And beets and radishes and all these things!
I am one with the tomato and the lettuce,
And my heart is attuned to the soft vibration of the peas.
(Traubel, be sure to put this in your memoirs.)
I salute thee, contrary one!
Contrariness, thy name is woman, just as stubbornness is the synonym for man,
For we are all puffs of breath and heart-beats of infinity,
And even now I feel a sympathy and a pang
In unison with my unknown brother,
Who stubs his toe on Jupiter
Or gets his feet wet on the Milky way.

Is your garden doing any good this summer?

A Holy Chinese City.

One of the least-known cities of China is Urga, where sand, squalor, and holy men are the predominating features. Urga lies at the edge of a desert in North China, and its people are most un-Chinese in appearance. It is said that every third man met there is a lama. The chief lama in Urga is as great a personage in the north as the Dalai Lama half a continent away. Thousands upon thousands of lesser lamas adore him and tens of thousands of the populace in their turn adore the lesser lamas. There is also a college for the study of religion in Urga, so that men in all stages of holiness are present in great numbers. There are frequent festivals, and the populace is used to the religious atmosphere. The pilgrims from the country round are chiefly impressed.

In certain districts a homesteader may secure an adjoining quarter-section as pre-emption. Price $3.00 per acre. WETTEST PLACE ON EARTH

Town with Average Rainfall of 600 Inches a Year

"It is a remarkable fact that in India, one of the most arid countries in the world, there is one spot that has the record rainfall of the whole earth," said Dr. William Roberts, British agricultural expert in India. "This place is Cherapunji, in Assam. It is in the path of the monsoon and in a valley and there is almost constant rainfall. The average rainfall is 600 inches a year, or 50 feet, which is nearly a foot a week. This seems almost beyond comprehension when it is considered that the rainfall of the United States, for instance, ranges from 16 inches to 35 inches. In some places there have been as high as 65 inches of water in a year, but this is the exception. During the rainy season in Cherapunji the waterfall is heaviest, but there is rain throughout the year. Notwithstanding this terrific moisture the inhabitants of the district raise vegetables and grain. They do this by building terraces which carry the water off."

DRY LURE FOR TROUT

Hints to Beginners—Practice Quick Retrieving and Strike

For learning a prompt strike when using the dry lure it is suggested that the novice frequently practise his arm and wrist in the endeavor promptly to retrieve his line. This should be done even when no trout has shown itself or any offer has been made at the feathers. Let the angler who desires to train his arm for a prompt recovery of the line imagine that a trout is making an attack on the fly.

At such times of practice let him instantly and with decision and vigor snap back the tip of the rod to the perpendicular. Whenever an opportunity seems to serve let him follow this practice. There are places in every stream where the angler meets with no encouragement and pushes onward. Before he presses on to new water the angler can give a little attention to his strike. And he should do this whenever a floating leaf or twig near his fly attracts his attention. If he earnestly trains his arm to respond quickly to his mind he will be somewhat prepared for an actual attempt to hit the rising fish.

Must Know How to Buy

Buying is one of the important parts of farm management. A great many farm failures are due to poor judgment in buying, particularly those cases where commodities are bought on credit.

In buying new stock, get something just a little better than the average of the neighborhood, something you can take a pride in and show to your neighbors and friends.

When a farmer goes about stating that farming does not pay he advertises his own failure, not the unprofitableness of farming as a whole.

PIPE DREAM

I like the ballplayers;
Their life is a cinch;
Besides this, they never
Feel poverty's pinch.

They romp o'er the diamond
The whole live-long day;
They never have worries
And draw big pay.

I'm gointa sit down now
And write to Ty Cobb
To come out and take my place
And give me his job.

The Apathetics (with apologies to W. O. McGeehan) have one of the finest first basemen in the game in our friend, Stuffey McInnes. Stuffy seems to have decided that this is going to be his best year, and he's playing accordingly.

The Tigers are crawling (Tigers crawl, don't they?), and before you know it they're going to be a big surprise in the American League camp. Hughie Jennings and his outfit got a very bad start this season and have been bucking the tide constantly. They are making a fine fight for top position, despite odds which have been against them. One of these days they'll get there, too.

Consider the second sack and its guardians. Your eye will first light upon one Herzog of a certain team commonly known as the Giants. You need go no further, for Herzog is as good a second baseman as there is—that's all.

And while we're in the eulogising frame of mind there's old Doctor Peckinpaugh, who also belongs to the Who's Who of the diamond. His playing is such that wherever he is scheduled to appear he draws a large and enthusiastic audience.

Grouchy Gus says: "If foul balls that fly into the spectators' stand suddenly became hand grenades in the course of their flight, there wouldn't be so many hands out trying to grab them and keep them."

In contemplating the Boston Braves this year one has a hard time repressing bitter tears over the evil days that have befallen that erstwhile formidable clan. Think of them through all the years since 1913, triumphant, invincible, and look at them to-day: 'way down in the cellar, with almost all chances for the pennant gone to smithereens. The team seems to have suffered from a gas attack. Kelly and Fitzpatrick, outfielders, aren't rated very high; Magee has seen better days; Maranville has lost his batting eye, and so the tale of woe goes. Worst of all, the formidable Gowdy has been taken away by a higher duty, that of patriotism, and is fitting himself in throwing hand-grenades in the trenches. To cut short the harrowing tale, there's simply nothing doing with the Braves this year.

A man who was known the world over as the "human fish," was Carlisle D. Graham, who made several daring descents of Niagara Falls. Graham first attracted attention in 1886 when he announced on July 11 he would go through the Whirlpool Rapids. Speculation was rife as to whether the feat could be accomplished without ending in the death of the man who undertook it. On the date set for the daring deed, the banks of the Niagara were lined with interested spectators. Graham, who was a cooper, successfully carried out his plan, and repeated the stunt three years later. A week later he went over the Horseshoe Falls in a barrel. On September 9, 1901, he swam the Whirlpool Rapids at the same time that Maude Willard was suffocated in trying to navigate the upper rapids in Graham's barrel. His last feat was accomplished on September 1, 1902, when he again swam the rapids. After gaining a world-wide reputation through his five daring descents of America's most treacherous waterway, Graham died from the effects of a cold contracted while sitting in a draft.

PUGILISTIC ANNALS

1859.—Charlie Lynch, American featherweight champion, defeated Sam Finlighty, the English champion, in forty rounds, at Kentish Marshes, England. In a previous battle the Englishman won on a foul after twenty-five rounds of fighting. In 1882 Lynch was defeated in 54 rounds by George Holden, an Englishman, who thus became the world's first featherweight champion under London Prize ring rules.

1866.—"Brooklyn" Jimmy Carroll, middleweight boxer, was born at Staten Island, N.Y. Carroll might have become champion of his division had not the close friendship existing between Jack Dempsey and himself prevented a match between the pair.

1885. — Tommy Warren, first Queensberry featherweight champion defeated Andy Hanley in Chicago.

1916 Ted Lewis, the British welter weight, defeated Kid Graves, of Cleveland, in a ten-round bout at Milwaukee.

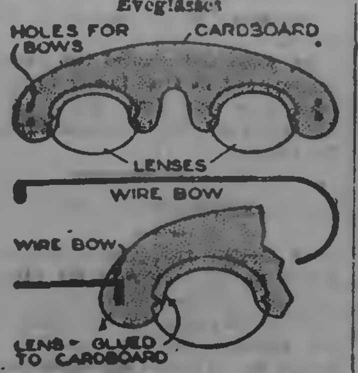
Improvised Frame for Broken Eyeglasses



In an emergency, when a pair of glasses was broken, and it was found difficult to get along without them, a pair of old lenses, broken at the fastenings only, was fitted into a frame made of cardboard. The frame was made of the proper size so that the lenses were centered over the eyes, and the lenses were glued to it. Bows were made of wire and fastened in holes at the ends of the cardboard. This improvised frame gave reasonable satisfaction, in spite of its peculiar appearance.—Popular Mechanics

PROTECT THE FARMERS.

U. S. Will Not Fix Price of 1917 Wheat Crop.

Washington, July 11.—Reports that the food administration will fix an arbitrary price of less than $2 a bushel to the grower for the 1917 American wheat crop drew from Herbert Hoover this denial:

"It is not the intention of the food administration to fix the price for wheat, nor is it expected that it will have any such powers. If the food bill passes congress, however, we certainly will not stand for speculative buying."

The farmer will be protected, it was further asserted by Mr. Hoover, against centralized buying by the allies.

HALL—FRY.

A very pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mr. John Fry in the Township of South Monaghan, Bailieboro, on Wednesday, June 27, 1917, when his youngest daughter, Dollie May, was united in the bonds of matrimony to Mr. James Hall of South Monaghan (treasurer of the township).

At high noon the bride, leaning on the arm of her father, entered the artistically decorated drawing room to the strains of a popular wedding march, and as the bridal couple, unattended, stood under a beautiful arch of evergreens, decked with snow-balls, the ceremony was performed by Rev. W. T. Wickett of Fraserville, in the presence of a number of immediate realtives and friends.

The bride looked charming, garbed in a very pretty dress of pussy willow silk, and carried on her arm a large bouquet of white carnations, and wore a lovely wreath of orange blossoms.

While congratulations were being extended the register was signed by Mr. Stanly Fry, a brother of the bride, and Miss Francis Hall, sister of the groom.

After all had done ample justice to a sumptuous wedding breakfast, the happy couple left amid showers of good wishes on a motor trip, the bride wearing a beautiful suit of navy blue taffetta, with hat to match. The presents were numerous and costly attesting to the popularity of the bride, the groom's gift being a pearl necklace.

On their return Mr. and Mrs. Hall will reside on the Hall homestead in the Township of South Monaghan.

Mr. Martn McFadden, who has been on a trip to Trenton and points east, has returned home.

GEORGE STREET W.M.A. AT HOME

PLEASANT HOUR SPENT AT RESIDENCE OF MRS. JAS. KENDRY.

A very successful At Home was held by the W.M.S. of George Street Church at the home of Mrs. James Kendry yesterday afternoon from 3 until 6 p.m. The grounds looked beautiful with their foliage and flowers. The house also was beautifully with flowers everywhere.

The musical part of the programme was supplied by Mrs. Foster, violin, and Mrs. Fenwick, piano, and was very much enjoyed by the large crowd present.

Mrs. Renvick also sang in good voice two selections and Miss M. Mather gave a piano solo.

Rev. A. J. Thomas gave a short talk on the work of the W.M.S., which was very interesting.

The social committee served refreshments during the afternoon.

At their June meeting Miss Might, delegate to the Branch Convention gave a good report of the proceedings.

WORKMEN FELL FROM LADDER

HURRON HAS LEG BROKEN AT QUAKER OATS PLANT.

Last night at six o'clock when the day shift were leaving their work at the Quaker Oats Co. plant, A. Hurron, an employee of the Leonard Construction Co., slipped when coming down the ladder and sustained a compound fracture of the right leg.

The injured man was picked up and at first it was thought that he had received very serious injuries as his face and head appeared to be very badly cut and was bleeding freely. When medical aid was summoned the man was removed to the Nichols Hospital where an examination showed that the most serious injury was to the right leg.

It is thought that Hurron in his hurry to get down the ladder on the old building lost his footing and fell.

Hurron has only been in the city for a short time having come here from Lindsay but his home is in Balsover.

CHANCES FOR VETERANS

Places are neded for several men returned from service—two for men not really capable of doing hard work but rightly willing to be useful. Married men, too. What is there open? 'Phone or advise the secretary of the Sodiers' Aid Commission at the Patriotic Fund office. Better speak now.

A good place is open for a woman, young or middle aged, who can do plain cooking. A good comfortable home is offered, and good wages. The office knows the little family, and, if the office were feminine, would take the place itself. Pretty good chance for some soldier's connection that would like to be useful. Speak to the office if the opportunity strikes you as a likely one for you.

TIE UP THE DOG.

More Violators of the Bylaw Were Fined This Morning.

Keeping dogs is becoming a really expensive luxury in Peterborough, unless the family pet is kept within the bounds required by the city bylaw. At the police court this morning $18.40 was collected in fines from persons who had allowed their dogs to stray on the streets of the city. There are a large number of other citizens who still think that the police are not going to be strict in this matter. To these a warning is issued that the department is taking out a large number of summonses for violators, so they need not be surprised if an appearance before Police Magistrate Dumble is necessary.

"LOG CABIN CAMP LIFE."

The log cabin camps that the Grand Trunk operate in Algonquin Park have become one of the popular features in this Government reserve. To put camps of this kind deep in the heart of the wilderness, and touch the wild life of the forest and lake with a most acceptable bit of civilization in the form of grate fires, hot and cold running water, bath tubs and inside toilet arrangements, is decidedly a feat worthy to be spoken of when summer resorts are mentioned. MOST DANGEROUS HOUR

Celebrated Scientist's Thesis on "Rush Hour" for Microbes

A celebrated scientist, who has made a lifelong study of different forms of bacteria, recently made the interesting announcement that there are more microbes in the air at 9 o'clock in the morning and at 9 o'clock at night than during any other periods of the day. He says that he has also discovered that the percentage of microbes in the atmosphere is less at 3 o'clock in the morning and at 3 o'clock in the afternoon than at any other times. He has also noted that at or about 6 o'clock every morning and evening there were indications of the approach of the microbe "rush" hour. From that time on until 9 o'clock the atmosphere became more and more crowded with germs of all kinds, some bad, some good; and then, immediately after 9 o'clock the tide began to ebb; until it was always lowest round about 3 o'clock.

UNTOLD MINERAL WEALTH

Northwestern British Columbia Amazed One British Nobleman

The Marquis of Queensbury highly praised the resources of northwest British Columbia. Speaking of a tour, while in Winnipeg in 1917, he said: "The people of Canada need have no fear regarding the ability of the country to pay their war debt. The mineral wealth of the northwestern British Columbia mainland and islands is sufficient to pay the war debt of your splendid dominion and that of Great Britain as well, and still leave ample or generations yet unborn. It is simply marvelous, in fact, I do not hesitate to say that it is the greatest mineral region in the world. There is everything in that region I speak of in the way of minerals that the world requires. It reminds me of much of that section of the Ural Mountains, from which the grand dukes of Russia have taken their fabulous stores of wealth, and it would not surpri me if it is of the same formation a connected by a dip below the sea."

HUN HEADQUARTERS OCCUPIED

RUSSIANS CAPTURE ENEMY HEADQUARTERS IN GALICIA

Kalusz Was Taken After Bloody Battle and is Now Occupied by Victorious Troops---Successful Advance Reported From All Parts of Front.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Petrograd, July 12.—The Russians have captured Kalucz, the headquarters of the enemy in Galicia, according to a semi-official announcement made today. According to the information received at the Ministry of War Office Russian troops are continuing their successful advance and have taken a large number of prisoners.

A later official announcement says that Kalucz in Galicia has been occupied by the Russians. This was coupled with the statement that the occupation was effected after a sanguinary battle.

The Capture of Halicz.

In the capture of Halicz the Russian revolutionary army, so discredited during the last few months, has reached in a single move the objective fought for so stubbornly, but without success by General Brusiloff's triumphant forces of last summer in a long and arduous campaign. This feat means the definite penetration of the Austro-German lines on a broad front, and not merely a local penetration, which was accomplished by the first Russian victory west of Tarnopol.

The activity of the Russian armies has now spread from Tarnopol to the Carpathians, and they are steadily pushing forward on a continuous front more than 100 miles long. Gen. Brusiloff, apparently benefiting from last year's experience in his attempts on Halicz from the north, from which side last summer's campaign proved it almost impregnable, planned the southern drive along the road to Dolina so brilliantly executed by General Korniloff. This appeared to be the line of least resistance, and Halicz was easily taken from the rear.

Lemberg Open to Attack.

The strategic results of the occupation of Halicz are obvious. Lemberg is now open to attack from Halicz. It is also likely that the Austrian line, which has long been based upon the Gnila Lipa River, will be forced to retire, and as the Russian movement develops in the direction of Lemberg it is sure to have an effect upon the situation in the Kovel-Vladimir-Volynsky region.

MR. WHITE GIVEN $21,000 PURSE

NATIVE OF THIS CITY HONORED BY MONTREAL BUSINESS MEN.

Mr. R. S. White, who was born in Peterborough, a son of the late Thomas White, who at one time owned The Review, and later The Montreal Gazette, resigned his post as collector of customs of the Port of Montreal, after twenty-one years' service. He was presented with $21,000 and an illuminated address by importers, manufacturers, merchants and representatives of railway and steamship companies in Montreal, in appreciation and acknowledgment of his administration of the customs service here and courtesies during his tenure of office. The presentation was made and addresses delivered before a large representative gathering in the board of trade. Mr. White, in reply, while expressing his thanks, also dealt extensively with the customs and suggested some important reforms.

Mr. White is now associate editor of the Montreal Gazette.

COMPANY WILL ACCEDE TO THE MEN'S DEMANDS

Believed That Street Car Strike in Toronto Is Near An End.

MAYOR CALLS A MEETING.

Toronto Citizens Accept Situation Without Complaint And Walk.

Toronto, July 12.—Word was received in Toronto from Ottawa late last night that the street railway strike would be settled today by the company conceding to the men their demanded increase in wages.

Late last night Mayor Church announced that he had arranged for a mass meeting of the street railway employes for 8 o'clock tonight, at which there would be present representatives from the Ottawa, provincial and civic governments. At this meeting an earnest effort to find a basis of arbitration for the settlement of the strike will be made, and the mayor has hopes that the matter will be satisfactorily adjusted, thus bringing an end to the diffioulties under which the public is suffering.

No developments made public in Toronto yesterday indicated that the paralysis of the city's transportation system which became effective at 5 o'clock yesterday morning, following the strike declaration of the Toronto Railwaymen's Union, would be relieved today.

Despite the intervention of the provincial cabinet administrators, no settlement was effected yesterday. That early arbitration of the differences between the union's members and th corporation is possible, however, is indicated in the announcement that a proposition(the character of which has not been revealed) which was suggested at one of the private conferences held by the Ontario Cabinet and corporation and union representatives, yesterday afternoon will be submitted to the mass meeting of the employes at 8 o'clock tonight in the Star Theatre.

Basis for the belief that a proposal will be offered to the men is found in a flat statement to this effect by Assistant City Solicitor I. S. Fairty before the Ontario Railway Board, which caused that body to postpone until 9.30 tomorrow morning, hearing the application presented by the city, asking the board to seize and operate the street car system. There was also foundation for this supposition in the optimistic opinion expressed by G. Howard Ferguson, minister of lands, forests and mines, who said:

"The Ontario Government in the interests of the people and all concenred is using its best efforts to try and bring the parties together. The members are not without hope that something will be done."

ANOTHER GERMAN RAID IS DRIVEN BACK BY BRITISH

BRITISH LOST 1800 ALL TOLD

QNLY TWO BATTALIONS TO DEFEND NIEUPORT LAST TUESDAY.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

London, July 12.—The total British casualties resulting from the German success near Nieuport, in Belgium, Tuesday, were about 1800 including prisoners. These figures were given by Major General Maurice who made the statement in his weekly talk to the Associated Press that the position was defended by only two battalions of British. The German claim of 1,250 prisoners he considered probably accurate.

Canadians Must Economize in Food

Food Controller Hanna Issues Another Appeal for Saving.

Ottawa, July 12.—Hon. W. J. Hanna, the food controller, in a statement just issued, says that the consumption of wheat, beef and bacon in the Dominion must be reduced by at least one-third to meet the needs of the allied armies and people. Full economy in the use of foodstuffs is urged by the controller, who in his statement says:

"The consumption of wheat, beef and bacon in the Dominion must be reduced by at least one-third to meet the needs of the allied armies and people. Every man, woman and child in Canada is under a direct war obligation to assist in that reduction. The consumption of flour in England and France is being reduced to between three and four pounds per person per week. Canada and the United States must reduce their normal consumption of wheat by 160,000,000 bushels this year to meet the added requirements for export. Russia has been enduring four meatless days a week. Households in England are under voluntary obligation to limit their consumption of meat to two and a half pounds per person per week.

"The allies look to Canada to relieve their food shortage. Both the producer and the consumer must assist to give that relief, the producer by producing and conserving to the utmost of his capacity and the consumer by substituting perishable and conserving storable foods for export. By such joint action the soldiers of Canada, ,the empire and the allies will be strengthened in the struggle for victory.

Usual Accounts of Enemy Repulsed Comes From Both British and French Fronts---French Mine Sweeper Sunk With Loss of Eleven Lives.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, July 12.—A raid attempted by the enemy last night south of Dombbaertzyde was successfully driven off, says to-day's official communication. There is nothing farther to report.

FOE EASILY REPULSED

Paris, July 12.—Artillery fighting was quite spirited in Champagne and on the Aisne front in the Laffaux sector. Enemy attacks in the region of Triangulaire Plateau and south Juvincourt were easily repulsed. On both banks of the Meuse in the sector of Hill 309 and north of Hardaumont the Germans, after a violent bombardment, made a number of attacks, none of which were successful. There is nothing to report from the remainder of the front.

MINE SWEEPER LOST

Paris, July 12.—The French mine sweeper, Jupiter, struck a mine in the English Channel Tuesday and sank with the loss of eleven lives.

TRUE PATRIOT GIVES UP FEE

SIR HENRY DRAYTON IS ABOVE ALL SUSPICION OF GRAFT.

Ottawa, July 12. — Sir Henry Drayton has given further striking instance of his public spirit by returning to the Government a cheque for $15,000, which was sent to him as remuneration for his services in connection with his months of hard work as a member of the Royal Commission on the railway transportation problem in Canada. Sir Henry Drayton, in returning the cheque, intimated that he had been glad to give his services free to the country in a task of such national importance and magnitude, and would rather not accept any remuneration, especially at a time of so much national stress.

NO PLEBISCITE

Paris, July 12.—Premier Ribot, speaking before the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Senate, presided over by ex-Premer Clemenceau, declared with reference to Alsace-Lorraine:—

"We have an imprescriptible right over Alsace-Lorraine, which has been torn from us by force. We cannot admit a plebiscite. That is the opinion of the entire Government, in which M. Albert Thomas fully agrees."

M. Thomas, member of the War Council and Minister of Munitions, has just returned from a visit to Petrograd.

Fines under the Ontario temperance act in Hamilton to date (since Sept. 16, 1916) total $44,600.

Ther are few cities on this continent that show a similar development. The figures are:

Clearings for the week ending July 12, 1917	$736,288
Same week last month	650,049
Same week, 1916	531,166
Same week, 1915	442,328

New York State continues to mantain its place as daily leader in army recruiting.

CAPTAIN IS DROWNED IN HARBOR AT DUBLIN.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

London, July 12. — Capt. M. A. Robertson, brother of Sir William Robertson, Chief of Staff, has been drowned in Howth harbor, Dublin.

GOVERNMENT TO FIX ALL PRICES

NO EXCESSIVE WAR PROFITS ALLOWED IN THE U. S.

Washington, July 12. — In an open address teeming with sensational utterances, President Wilson has served notice on mine operators, manufacturers and shipping interests that the government intended to fix prices of their products during the war period and that the public must be served on the same basis as the government agencies. Those who sought to avoid the rulings of the government, he said, would be held guilty of an act favorable to the cause of the enemy. The price fixed, he said, must, of course, be a just one.

Solicitor-General Meighen introduced a drastic amendment to the military service bill, effectively putting the closure on anti-conscription talk once the measure becomes law.

PRISON TERM FOR THOSE WHO RESIST CONSCRIPTION LAW

Amendment Provides Punishment for Any Who Make Trouble---Coalition Government is Still Likely.

Ottawa, July 12.—W. F. Maclean of South York, during the conscription debate in the House of Commons Wednesday, earnestly exhorted the government to assume responsibility for enforcing the law. Federal enforcement of federal law, he said, had made the United States a harmonious nation. He also pleaded for the formation of a national or union government to properly enforce conscription.

Solicitor-General Meighen responded to the appeal by proposing a drastic amendment to the bill, which makes it a penitentiary offence for any one to influence any person or persons to resist the law, and forbids any judicial interference by the courts or judges with the due execution of the law.

Coalition Likely.

Nothing more was said in the House about the formation of a union government, which Mr. Maclean in the course of his speech said might come to pass within a few weeks. It is pretty well understood, however, that the conscription Liberals of Ontario and the west are forming a distinct parliamentary party or group for the purpose of negotiating with the government for a coalition.

Mr. Meighen's amendment is likely to provoke a fresh controversy, and will probably occupy the attention of the house all day tomorrow. The vote on the third reading is not anticipated before the first of the week.

In a reply to a question, Mr. Meighen said that "A.R." men would not be exempt.

ORANGE ORDER A UNIT IN FAVOR OF CONSCRIPTION

Brethren at Toronto Favor Closure to Assure Early Adoption of Measure---Will Never Submit to French Domination.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Toronto, July 12. — Toronto Orangemen of 72 lodges with several visiting lodges held a very successful parade today in which 6,000 walked. The street car strike did not affect the procession except to afford it clear streets.

At Exhibition Park later resolutions were passed setting forth the determination of the Order never to permit French domination in Canadian national affairs, urging immediate passage, by closure, if necessary, of the Conscription Bill, and calling on all loyal subjects to demand in an unmistakable manner the detection and punishment of obstructionist tactics which would delay or prevent complete participation in the fight for human liberty and to make it once and for all clear that Canada is a British, English speaking country and intends to remain so.

W. F. O'Connor, Cost of Living Commissioner of the Labor Department, says that the largely increased excess stocks of beef, mutton, lamb, bacon and ham, which he declares unjustifiable and due to speculation, must be discharged by sale.

BERLIN ADMITS RUSS ADVANCE

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

ENTENTE AIMS MAY BE REVISED

The Orangemen of the District are all in Port Hope today joining in the celebration of the Glorious Twelfth.

From early morning all kinds and conditions of automobiles could be seen or heard making their way for the Gravel Road to start the initial stage of the journey to the Lake Ontario town. Some of the cars were loaded to capacity and many predictions were heard as to the possibility of an S.O.S. call from some out of order machine on the "Way between." However none have been reported up to the hour of going to press.

The number of cars thus employed is hard to estimate as every member of a lodge that had a friendly auto owner, put that friendship to the test and enlisted the services of the car to bring a load to Port Hope.

The Grand Trunk Railway took an immense crowd down on the train that leaves shortly after 8 a.m. and another contingent departed on the train that goes down about 9.30 and a few did not leave until the noon train. It is estimated that nearly 1000 have gone from this district. How they will all get home remains to be told.

The departure of the fife and drum bands drew a large crowd of spectators to the headquarters on George street early this morning.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, JULY 12, 1917

PARTIAL DISABILITY.

The partial disablement pension is founded on an entirely erroneous assumption, namely, that finding employment is purely a matter of arithmetic. In other words, if a man is 80 per cent. unfit, his chances in life are diminished by just that much. If a man who is 80 per cent. unfit seeks employment, he will get very little, because there are mighty few people who would employ a man who was 80 per cent. unfit. His salary is cut down accordingly and he is, therefore, in a far worse condition than if he were totally unfit. Strange to say, the scale stops when it comes down to the man who is 20 per cent. unfit. That is to say, a man who suffers partial deafness or the loss of an index finger, is considered 20 per per cent. unfit; but the man who is 19 per cent. unfit gets nothing. I suppose many people will hardly believe that, but it is so. In other words, if a man has an injury like a scar across his face, which would make him look pretty tough and probably result in his rejection if he sought employment, gets nothing under the partial disablement plan.—From Capt. Burnham's speech in Parliament on the Pension question.

THE RED CROSS WORKERS.

THE CANADIAN prisoners in Germany are fortunate in the fact that they have the sympathetic support of the patriotic members of the Red Cross. The Canadians in the trenches are supposed to have the support of the Dominion Parliament. While the members of the Red Cross act and accomplish things, members of Parliament waste precious hours in incessant talk. The women of the country are doing more effective war work than are the elected representatives of the people.

And yet there are still those who argue that women have no executive ability and are not to be trusted with the franchise.

CONSCRIPTION OF WEALTH.

THE EXAMINER is doing its utmost to shift the interest of the public from the Conscription Bill now before Parliament to the other question of the conscription of wealth. It seems to take it for granted that the Government will do nothing in the latter regard, and our contemporary would cunningly poison the minds of the people by insinuating that the poor man, who has nothing but his life to give, is to be deprived of his all, while the wealthy classes will escape. No more dangerous doctrine could possibly be promulgated under the present circumstances, no argument could be used so calculated to foment the discord now unfortunately prevalent in the country.

The Government that had the fortitude to bring in the bill now before Parliament can be depended upon to lay hold of the other horn of the dilemma. The conscription of wealth will be something that will meet with popular favor. Those who oppose it are a minority in the community; those who favor it are in a vast majority. The conscription of manhood was a more difficult question, a matter that has caused unrest in the nation and which threatens to drive one province into open revolt.

Sir Thomas White has said that a levy will be made on the wealth of the country as soon as the Conscription Bill is disposed of and the necessity for such a step arises. That should be sufficient to silence the insinuation of our contemporary. Sir Thomas White has said that the savings of the country will not be confiscated, another quieting assurance. His department has been handled with a skill that has elicited admiring comments from the financial experts throughout the Empire and in the United States. He has raised Canada from a borowing nation to one that is able to extend financial aid to England, and the money that he has raised has been taken from those best able to stand the strain. The wealth of the country has been already conscripted, and further legislation along these lines will simply be an extension of the principle which the Government has recognized from the start of the war.

Conscription does not imply confiscation. Sir Thomas White has made that plain. The great British traditions and customs are to be followed in this matter. A tax on the earnings of wealth will answer all requirements, and this tax has already been imposed and increased from time to time with the growing expenditure. It can be increased still further as the necessity arises.

When Sir Thomas White brought down his budget last winter provision was made for a heavier tax on the profits of the industries of the country, even in the face of the claim set up by the manufacturers that they were already paying all they were able to stand. Sir Thomas at that time foreshadowed the possibility of an income tax, one of the recognized methods of conscripting wealth. He said that such a tax is the most expensive of all to collect and that the revenue from such a source would be inconsequential in a country with the resources of Canada, if the same income tax was adopted as that which prevailed in England or in the United States at that time. Sir Thomas added, however, that if it transpired that such a tax was desirable, he would not hesitate to impose it. Recently he has stated that such a tax will be levied. That should suffice.

In the meantime, the soldiers in the trenches are calling for men to help them, not for money. Any newspaper that makes the conscription of wealth the paramount issue now is simply obsessed with a mercenary spirit and is reducing patriotism to a cold question of dollars and cents. The man who will not enlist on the plea that the wages are too low is likely to find some other excuse even if the soldiers' pay was raised to meet the slackers' demand.

GREECE IN THE WAR.

GREECE WILL SOON be in the thick of the fray with an army of 400,000 men—and there are no better fighters in the world—an army, too, that will be well equipped with the artillery that is so essential a part of the outfit of any participants in the conflict. This should be another factor in bringing the war to a successful conclusion, another circumstance that will tend to prove further to the German people that there must be something wrong with a cause that excites the active opposition of the civilized world.

A NATION OF UNFITS.

ONE STARTLING FACT that has been brought out since the war began is the number of physically unfit men there are among the Canadians. Many a man who imagined himself in the pink of condition has had his dream shattered after the doctor at the recruiting station had finished his examination.

There is no physical test so severe as that of the military authorities. Many a man who has passed the requirements of the life insurance companies has been turned down when he offered his services to his country. One was found to have defective heart action, another had lung trouble, was in the incipient stages of tuberculosis, while a third had some other form of ailment, some natural defect, perhaps, of which he had never dreamed. Like the young man in the story, all these go away sorrowing.

Men have passed the physical examination and got into the service in Canada, only to be rejected by the medical experts after they had arrived in England. In short, the number of physically imperfect men in this country is vastly greater than was ever imagined before the war started. This is not the fault of the medical profession and it does not show that the efficiency of Canadian doctors is below the standard. The men themselves are to blame for not submitting themselves to examination long before they did.

In some cities in the United States all the residents are required to submit to a physical examination once a year. In this way only can the health of the community be preserved and diseases checked at he outset. All such examinations are conducted at the expense of the State, so that none can plead poverty as an excuse for failing to obey the order.

It has been said that compulsory military training will provide for regular medical inspection and will answer the same purpose as the plan adopted by some American cities. Compulsory military training, however, would not be complete in this regard. It would not take into account the physical status of the women of the country, and the health of the mothers of the human race is really more essential than that of the male members of the species.

FROM THE AMERICAN VIEWPOINT

(Chicago News.)

Premier Borden's victory in the Canadian Parliament, where his conscription bill was approved the other day by a vote of 118 to 55, is another striking illustration of the loyalty inspired by progressivism and liberalism in colonial government.

Mr. Balfour, in his felicitous address on Independence Day at an American celebration in London, after admitting that Great Britain formerly was guilty of Bourbon blunders in colonial policy, declared that today it realised fully that an Anglo-Saxon empire was posiable only on the basis of entire equality and complete self-goverament for all its possessions that are fit for such a status. The large non-partisan vote in the Dominion Parliament, which surprised even the Government itself, was an eloquent commentary on Mr. Balfour's reflections on the lessons of history.

The acceptance of the conscription policy by Canada is as much a victory for common sense and sound administration in war time as it is for the sentiment of loyalty to the Empire. Conscription, as Mr. Borden and his supporters explained, does not mean any material addition to the forces of Canada in the field. All that is expected is the maintenance of the present forces at full strength by the prompt replacement of inevitable wastage. Even this might have been undertaken by the Government under the voluntary policy had not experience shown that industry, commerce and civil administration generally suffer severely and needlessly under that policy. After three years of war the proper adjustment and apportionment of available man power cannot safely be left to chance. Setting aside the important consideration of justice, which demands the adoption of conscription, that course is still seen to be imperative to national life and national welfare.

The wisdom of Mr. Borden's bill appealed even to former adherents of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Liberal leader, who opposed conscription unless it should be preceded by a specific referendum. Sir Wilfrid declined to enter a coalition cabinet because Mr. Borden refused a referendum. The Premier assumed entire responsibility for the bill, and the event has abundantly justified his action. Canada has cheerfully accepted conscription for the sake of effective defence. Australia may follow, according to late reports.

The free nations of the world are fighting tyranny as free and efficient nations should fight.

Wit and Wisdom

One Way.

A tourist while "doing" California noticed a long shanty which displayed the following sign: "Teeth yanked out without a twinge." As he happened to be suffering from tootache, he entered the shanty and asked the dentist:"

"Do you extract teeth without giving pain?"

"Waal, I reckon so, stranger."

"All right; pull this one out"—pointing to the offending molar.

The "dentist" whistled, and in walked his assistant, armed with a club.

"Now, pard," quoth the "dentist," "stun him!"

He Caught It.

Pat was walking along the road, when hearing a whir, he looked back, and saw Larry flying fast and furious on a bicycle.

"Hi! Wait a minute!" shouted Pat. "I want to spake to you."

"I can't; I'm in a hurry. I want to catch the post," cried Larry, flying by.

Suddenly the bicycle swerved and crashed into a telegraph pole on the roadside, and Larry and the bike lay in a helpless tangle. As Pat came on, Larry was extricating himself from the wire puzzle.

"Begorra!" said Pat, with a grin "I see you caught the post."

"Any conundrums this morning," asked the blond stenographer at breakfast.

"Yes," replied the thin boarder. "Why is a woman like wine?"

"Because she's sparkling," suggested the ribbon counter clerk.

"No."

"Because she's full of spirits," was the guess of the bank clerk.

"Nix."

"Well, because she's so intoxicating," ventured the typewriter with powder on her nose.

"All wrong. Because she doesn't age rapidly."

Pat's Method.

An Irishman out of work applied to the boss of a repair shop in Detroit. When the Celt had stated his qualifications for a "job" the superintendent began quizzing him a bit. Starting quite at random, he asked:

"Do you know anything about carpentry?"

"Sure."

"Do you know how to make a Venetian blind?"

"Sure, I'd poke me chisel in his eye."

A Whirl of Pleasure.

Amusements were few and far between in the western town, consequently Tommy was overjoyed when a traveling circus came along. His father, however, demurred against so much dissipation, not on account of morals but expense.

"Five cents to see a circus," he said scornfully. "And here it was only last week that you went to see the eclipse of the moon. Do you want life to be one perpetual round of gayety?"

Bad Enough.

One day a laborer was brought before a bailie in a town in Scotland charged with being drunk and incapable the previous night.

"What hev ye got to say for yersel'?" queried the bailie.

"I was nae mair drunk that ye was, bailie," said the prisoner.

"Aye, weel," retorted the worthy magistrate, "ye maun hae been gey bad—10s 6d or seven days."

Author of "J'Accuse"

Will Continue to Fight

Government of Germany

THE anonymous but celebrated author of "J'Accuse!" who is living in Switzerland, has just been interviewed by Georges Batault, a French newspaperman.

The author of "J'Accuse!" who, though a German, is preparing another indictment of Germany in the form of a bulky volume, which has for a title "The Crime," will, in this latest work, be pitiless in his criticism of all the attempts the Germans have made to wash themselves of the crime of having brought on the war.

Up to the present a large number of copies of "J'Accuse!" has entered Germany, despite the Government's rigorous prohibition. Various subterfuges have been employed to smuggle the book across the border, and consequently the work has been widely read. Using the celebrated words of Bismarck, the anonymous author, with a cruel and ironical smile, said to his interviewer:

"I will follow the reptiles of the Government to their last retreat. I will render justice to all lies more or less hostile and more or less calumnious with which they have wanted to hide the truth.

"The question of the responsibility for war originates in the Capital. It dominates all others. It is known in Germany, and that is why they are trying to cloud it. Nothing can be done until the truth is clear and until it remains clear.

"The German Government is entirely responsible for the war. It must carry its responsibility like a cross, and expiation will be long. At the present time, even those who are demanding peace at any price repeat that Germany was attacked, that she is waging a war of defence. That is false. Germany, led by unworthy chiefs, premeditated the war. Germany attacked after having deliberately calculated its blow. There is no truth beyond that. No argument will ever make doubtful this primordial truth.

"I will fight to the end with all my forces. My anonymous state has been criticized, but I will remain anonymous because I do not fight with equal arms. I do not see the necessity of giving the German Government a means of rendering me inoffensive and thus hurt the cause which is mine. They wanted to know my name. For them to have known my identity would have given them a way to discredit me with personal attacks. Already they have accused me of standing in various doubtful strata of society in order to do me harm.

"All that is in vain. One can remain anonymous and suffer morally. And I have suffered more than one readily believes. But I will stay anonymous! I am the author of 'J'Accuse!' and 'The Crime'! I have only one name and only one ideal: The Truth, which has need neither of a label nor a social state, since it is immortal."

The author said that the only hope for the future of Germany is in the ideas defined by the Socialist minority, which are similar to those set forth in "J'Accuse!"

"If," said the author, "the majority of the Socialists are firm supporters of the policy of Bethmann-Hollweg it is because the latter, in regard to the origins of the war, is in a position similar to theirs: their minds and their assertions come from the same lies, the same propagation, which, alas, also know no law.

THE SALVING OF A DERELICT

By MAURICE DRAKE

[illegible] nor showed regrets or annoyance. The advantages possessed by steam over sail were soon manifest to him, and he threw himself with growing interest in the study of the northern fishing grounds. Demanding and readily obtaining a new set of charts from Harper after the Bute's first voyage he began to work as he had never thought he could care to do.

Day and night, with but the shortest allowance of sleep, he was on the Bute's decks, forecastle, or bridge, committing to a fortunately excellent memory the set of tides and ocean currents, or from the fallowed deep-sea lead or the refuse at the bottom of the trawl-bag gaining information as to the depth and materials, sand or rock, gravel, shingle or silt, of the great level sea-bottom that lies between Iceland, the Faröes, and the fjords of Norway.

All through the soft northern summer he labored with almost mechanical method and care, and when, in the following September, Harper, well satisfied with the results of his experiment, purchased two more nearly new steam trawlers, Laurence was appointed to the post of skipper of one of them.

His promotion made little alteration to his way of life. As master he was no less a brute than he had been as man. When ashore he still drank and fought, still lived in the same unlovely vice and squalor to which he had fallen after his second voyage. At sea, it is true, he now seldom drank—even heavily chastize and maltreated the men beneath him who did—but he was known to every man of the fleet as a hard driver and a callous, selfish brute.

As a consequence his voyages were almost always successful, and within six months of his promotion his bank balance showed nearly three hundred pounds to his credit, in place of the limited means at his disposal when he arrived at Leith. Equally inevitably the only men content to serve under him were the hardest and most reckless mauvais sujets in Harper's employed, men who feared, as they themselves said, "nor man, nor devil—only our—Laurie."

Their fear was mixed with admiration, and later, after experience of a careless but just directness of purpose that underlay his brutality, with some small measure of good will. Clitheroe, especially, now lately promoted to deck hand, worshipped him almost as a dog might its master, and with his clumsy fingers took upon himself the care of Laurence's limited wardrobe.

Ashore the men drank with their skipper, were proud to be allowed to accompany him in the narrow wynds of the harbor side, and spoke in awed pride of his foul and brutal language and his sullen readiness in quarrel; but at sea, Laurence's command was absolute, and the discipline on board the Westray was a proverb in the fleet. Did promotion or accident remove a man of his crew, a dozen of the ablest fishermen and most reckless ne'er-do-weels in Leith were ready to fight for the privilege of taking his place, not all the reports of the skipper's hardness proving a deterrent in view of the good pay drawn by his crew.

Harper, speaking but little, yet held Laurence's ability to handle men in high esteem. "I'll bide my time," he said once, when some more than usually disgraceful report of his protégé reached him. "The lad's lost his polish, has forgotten he e'er was a gentleman, maybe. I'm no so sure he's the worse for a while. Better sow wild oats in rank soil—they'll ripen and be reaped the sooner. If he'd kept his polish in the fleet, he'd maybe have sloughed some of it ashore afterwards. A deevil? Oh ay, he's that—a' that. A dour, hard case is Laurence; but he can drive men, and he can catch fish, and that's what I pay him to do. When he comes ashore here in the office there'll be busy times, I'm thinking."

Early in the following spring he broached the subject to Laurence himself. Directed by one of the Westray's crew, he sought him in the public house in which he lodged.

Laurence was sitting in the sanded bar, drinking and exchanging coarse chaff with the landlord's daughter, a red-haired brazen hoyden of nineteen. The pair looked round angrily as he entered, the girl sitting on the edge of the table at which Laurence was seated, her head back, her bare arms impudently akimbo.

"I want t' speak to ye, Laurence," Harper said disregarding his companion's attitude.

"Speak on," Laurence replied. "We've no secrets here."

The girl leered approval, and Harper spoke shortly, with rising temper. "I have. I want to talk business—my business, I'll trouble ye to remember."

Laurence turned his head to the girl. "Get out," he said.

"Ah'll not. Laurie dear, 'tis a public room. Ah! let go of my arm, you—you deevil, Averil."

Laurence slammed the door behind her. "What d'ye want?" he asked.

But Clement's eyes had followed the little scuffle, and his tone was cold. Hearsay was one thing—this evident familiarity and companionship another.

"Who'd that?" he asked sternly.

"Mary Anstruther. You needn't be so sour about it. She's no worse than the rest of us, an'—an' that's my business. I'll trouble you to remember. Speak of your own."

"You're a fool and a young blackguard," Harper said angrily. "I'll be short wi' ye. McLeod'll have the Westray next June, and ye'll begin at the office. I'm pleased wi' your work, but I can't stand your play, an' so we'll make a change. You'll cut all these blackguard friends of yours, put [illegible] in a decent [illegible] o' the town, and see if ye've forgotten ye once were a gentleman. I'll have no harbor-loafing drunkards in my office—and I'll leave your father's son afloat no longer. Ye've learned more than I wanted, Laurie, my man."

"My father was a thief and a hypocrite," Laurence said. "I'm a blackguard, but I'm no hypocrite. See you here, Clement Harper, I don't want to come ashore. Look at my hands." He held them up, powerful, knotted, and gnarled. "That's what the life's done for me—all through me. I've lost touch with shore folk, and I don't want the shore life. Leave me on the Westray. Ye'll get no better skipper."

"Your hands'll come soft again—and so'll the rest of you," Harper replied. "I've no more to say. I want ye in the office, and there ye'll be next June. I want ye, man. The business needs another driver there, and ye've learned drivin' among other things, they tell me. Come back to decency, lad. You, an educated man, to want to stop in this pig of a life! Come back to decent work, decent food, the society of the class ye belong to. If it's the sea, wait a year or two and then get a wee bit yacht, or spend your holidays afloat on a liner among people of the same grade, with the same ideals and aspirations as yourself."

Laurence flushed under the tan of his skin and laughed angrily. "Ideals and aspirations," he sneered. "My ideals and aspirations are the same as those of the folk I sail with now. What more can you give me, Clement Harper? Our ideals are, briefly, whisky; and our aspirations are to catch fish, make short voyages, and return to this"—his guernseyed arm swept round the low room, indicating all its grime and slovenliness—"and enjoy the society of Mary Anstruthers. Never fear, man, I'm in sympathy with my kind. We all have the same intent—to take all we're able, and keep it as long as we can. Could you find such unanimity in any drawing-room?"

"I'll waste no more words on ye," Harper said, nettled. "Ye leave the Westray next June, I give ye notice, and if ye care to tak' the place I've offered ye in the office, it'll be at your disposal for a month—in which time ye can look about ye and see if ye can do better." He rose, walked out, and slammed the door behind him.

Laurence laughed, a laugh that sounded like a curse, so brutally malignant was it, and then sat his empty pipe between his teeth, thinking over this change in his fortunes. He had long since almost forgotten the original arrangement Harper had sketched out for him. Indeed, when it occurred to him to reflect upon it, it had been with a feeling of marked distaste at again mingling in the society he had known in his youth.

Utterly discarding his early training, he had assumed the life, clothing, and manners of the fisherfolk too thoroughly for that. He knew, too, that there was no more able skipper than himself in the whole of Harper's employ, and he had often sulkily reflected, with his usual savage ill-feeling towards all men, that Harper had, as he put it, "done himself none so ill" in offering him the position he now held. In this frame of mind his employer's new offer, as evidently made from motives of friendship as it was distasteful, came both as a surprise and an annoyance.

He swore softly to himself, and then, remembering the bank-book in his bedroom upstairs, laughed savagely again. He would, indeed, return to his own class of society. His three hundred odd pounds should give him a six weeks' carnival of vice in London—perhaps even permitting of a run over to Paris or to Monte Carlo. And then, when the money was gone he would come back to Harper and tell him how he had spent it—show him what likelihood there was of his reclamation, and demand a situation on a trawler again as skipper or hand—he cared little which. If he were penniless, and still resolute in refusing Harper's offer of preferment, it was hardly to be expected that he would be cast altogether adrift. And if he were, what matter? True, with Harper's ill-will it was doubtful if he could obtain another place in Leith but Leith was not the only fishing port in the British Isles, and his knowledge of the trawling grounds would always be a valuable asset in his favor.

He called aloud, and Mary Anstruther came into the room, her chin erect, half defiant and all sloven.

"I've got the sack," Laurence announced.

"Serve ye right. Ye hurt my arms just now. What's he sacked ye for?"

"You—as much as anything. He's offered me a shop in the office if I cut all your lot."

The girl flushed red beneath her fair skin—the exquisite skin that so often goes with red hair in folk of Scandinavian descent. Her manner softened. "Will—will ye tak' it Laurie?" she asked.

"Not I. Curse the office. I'm going to London and Paris and maybe Monte Carlo, and have the devil and all of a time spending my savings. I'll take you, Mary, my dear. No, I won't, though. I'll take nobody. If I want to play the fool I reckon I can find folk to help me there without paying rail fares for 'em—carrying coals to Newcastle. You can stay here. I'm coming back when the brass is gone—and I can kiss you all I want to then."

Mary's eyes drooped—and then looked up again.

"I—I'll come wi' ye, Laurie, gin ye like," she said.

"Wouldn't be bothered w'th you, my dear." His gaze looked through the girl. "Begad! I'm beginning to look forward to it. Well-dressed dinners and pretty, well-dressed fools of women to share 'em." He smacked his lips. "They used to do you well at the Trocadero, and Verrey's, and the 'Cri.' I don't suppose they've forgotten much—not half as much as I have, anyway. Oh, and the Royale and the Madeleine—and dear dirty Père Vablette's again! Jubilee! It will be an orgie. Clement Harper's a pal, after all.

"And the Côte du Midi; Cannes—Nice. I wonder if I can hit a pigeon these days. And perhaps, if only I can find a number or two at the tables get a stroke of luck?"

"But that's out of the question. No half hopes of luck and whimpering when they don't come off. Just a definite three hundred quids' worth of joyous spree, and then back to this cursed hole—and you, and your sort, Mary, my dear. If I've stood it once, I can again. Won't you be delighted to see me back on a trawler once more, you red-headed light o' Leith?"

The girl regarded him curiously between half-closed eyelids. "I dinnae ken the half ye're talking about, Laurence Averil," she said. "What's yon places ye're speakin' of?"

"Restaurants and cafés, my peach." He tried to put an arm around her waist, but she repulsed him. "Places where I'm going to dine softly and hear music, and smell flowers and sweet scents again. Places where clever rogues and lucky fools do [illegible] sort—have been consorting these last eighteen months whilst I've been living this cursed life, and where they'll still consort after I'm broke and back here again. Next June—oh! and the parks and the chestnut trees in the Tuileries Gardens! It'll be the fag end of the Riviera season, but no matter for that. I shan't be jaded for one. Give us a kiss, red Mary—Mary o' Scots—or whatever your name is."

She spun on her heel and struck him full on the mouth with all her strength. "Go!" she cried and choked. "Go. I pray Heaven I'll never see your wicked, lying face again." She burst into hysterical tears and ran from the room.

CHAPTER VIII.

His crazy resolution once formed, nothing could deter Laurence from putting it into effect. He would have gone at once, but reflecting that if he remained on the Westray until forced by Harper to leave her, he would possess a cognent argument for his re-employment on his return, he decided to stay till June. Besides, the London season would only then be commencing.

He gave himself over to anticipations of a royal carnival of unlicence, and his work and surroundings at sea at once naturally re-asserted the effect they had upon him at first acquaintance. Coming pleasures in view, his last two voyages were, if possible, more distasteful than his first, and added to his hatred of his environment came a new fear—the dread that some accident of the unruly seas should come between him and his contemplated folly.

Such an accident, terrible in its swift tragedy of young Clitheroe's death, occurred towards the latter end of May, but the horror and shock of it, whilst subduing the spirits of the other men of the crew, had no effect on him beyond a redoubled eagerness to quit, if only for a short ease and forgetfulness, the risks and toil of the fishing fleet.

The Westray was returning from the shallow waters to the westward of Reykjavik in the fourth week of the voyage. In the ordinary course of things the trawler would have made an earlier return to port, but Laurence had encountered one of Harper's carrier steamers a week before and had transferred the contents of his full hold to hers. As he argued to himself, the longer the voyage the more money to spend, and the men under him were only too glad to echo the seaman's saw of "More days, more dollars." Laurence, being on the extreme northward of the ground he knew, argued rightly that if he could send home a full cargo from Iceland he could amass another on his way homewards, thus drawing double pay for the single voyage.

It was a lovely morning, bright and clear, with pure northern sunlight and a gentle breeze that brought from the land some chill hint of opening springtime. Iceland lay low on the port beam, the bare towering bastions of Portland—the first view the traveller obtains of the island—shouldering themselves like a separate islet high above the sands to east and westward. Laurence had given orders for the trawl to be raised, and had gone aft to stand by the taffrail to watch it come aboard. A deck hand stood amidships, his hand on the starting lever of the steam winch, and Clitheroe stood facing him, his back to Laurence, taking the slack of the tow rope into his hands as the winch unwound it to coil on the deck at his side.

Suddenly the winding ceased, the little steamer checking and dragging heavily at the tow and yawing awkwardly from side to side.

Laurence swore. "Curse this foul rocky bottom. 'Vast heaving, you. Reverse the winch. Davy, keep her a couple o' points south."

"Ay, ay," came from the little bridge, and the wheel spun in the helmsman's hands as the stumpy bows swung away to the right.

The reversing lever of the winch came over smartly, the revolving iron cylinder rewinding Clitheroe's neat coils of rope and throwing them again on the deck in an untidy tangle that dragged towards the bulwarks and overside.

"[illegible]," Laurence shouted. "Heave again. She should come now."

Again the lever grated and the clacking winch resumed its work. A frightened shout from the deck hand made Laurence turn his head, and, unable to help, he saw the whole of the ghastly business from first to last.

Just as the tow rope straightened Clitheroe stepped backward into the last of its coils. That rope, tightening with a jerk, gripped his ankle like a vice, and, pulling it from under him, threw him face down across the hissing, chattering winch. Flinging out his arms to save his head, the now tight rope caught and held his left hand firmly on the revolving drum, jerking the tied body tense as a harp-string from wrist to heel in a swifter and more awful rack than ever mediæval torturer devised.

It was all over in a moment. The wretched lad never screamed. A little "Ah!" of surprise—an "Ah" that ended in a groan—and Averil's shout of "Reverse winch. Engines hard astern," set him free and dropped his limp body in a long tumbled heap on the deck.

Laurence ran forward. "Stop engines," he called, and stooped over the white drawn face lying with its cheek on the deck plates.

The little steamer, her engines silenced, rose and fell on the easy sea, the shadows of bulwarks and gear rising and falling on her sunlit decks as she moved. Everything was very silent—so silent that the hissing of steam from her steam valve and the sound of the engineer's feet on his iron gratings in the engine room below sounded loudly in the ears of the men on deck. The man at the wheel, holding it with one hand, gazed silently down over his shoulder at the little group by the winch. The winch driver looked curiously from the prostrate body on the deck to Averil's anxious face, never speaking. And, more silent, more still than them all, young Clitheroe lay at their feet.

Laurence knelt and called in his ear, "Clitheroe—William. Are you hurt, man?"

The eyes were opened, and in them was bright pain.

"Ay, a bit, Averil." His speech was slow and deliberate. "I—I'll be a' richt in a minute. Put me by the bulwarks there an' get t' trawl up. Ye can tend me then."

He never groaned nor complained whilst Laurence and the deck hand, clumsily for all their care, carried him to the steamer's side and laid him down. The ship's boy was set to his work of coiling away the tow, and the winch began again to clack and grate as the great trawl swung slowly inboard.

Cutting the tie of the bag, Laurence walked round the pile of fish and went to the wounded lad's side.

"Where are you hurt?" he asked.

"I'm done, Averil," the boy answered low, his brow beaded with pain and his breath broken with gasps. "Nay, ye neednae touch me—I'm past helping. See there." He glanced downwards at a red trickle that pooled and ran from his waist, mixing with the moisture on the wet deck. "That——winch tore me right open. I'll go hame nae mair."

Laurence stared, stunned, only curious and surprised, for all the horror of it. The boy had never spoken a word to complain.

Clitheroe saw the wonder in his eyes. "Oh ay, it's so," he gasped. "See ye here, Averil, put in yonder, and bury me ashore. I've been at sea a' my life—leave me rest under green grass. Besides, I fear they——fish. I've catched 'em a' my life—dinnae let them get me." He jerked his pain-twisted lips into some semblance of a smile, then swore aloud at his agony, using oaths he had often heard from Laurence's own mouth.

"There's my brither—on the Bonaventure, he is. I stole his 'bacca pouch last time ashore. Gie't back to him, will ye? Nay, I've nae ither folks. Averil, say me one thing. Ye're a man, ye are, by ——." He broke out again into poor blasphemies, made pitiful by the wild eyes and tortured brow. "Tell me, did I die like a man? I never squeaked, did I?—not when that —— winch tore me. Did I?"

His voice failed, and for all the measureless sadness of it, all Laurence could feel was dull astonishment that so torn a shape could hold any desires, ambitions, whatever. Yet this broken heap could die like a Spartan, could endure agony in silence, all in the same spirit in which the boy had aped his own reckless manners, copied his oaths and dress—had even announced, amid the laughter of the other men, that he would never shave; he'd grow "a beard like oor Averil's."

He looked over his shoulder at the men behind him. They were sorting the catch, flinging the smaller, dragging the larger fish into separate heaps, as they worked kicking offal behind them with their sea-boots. Though they made acknowledment of the situation by working in unusual silence, never a one of them so much as looked at him or the figure lying at his feet, and when he himself looked down again the boy was dead.

Two of the men carried the body aft and laid it upon his cabin table, placing some old sail canvas under it to keep those red stains from the wood. They went forward about their work again, and Laurence sat by the table, his eyes hot and dry, and some half-formed emotion—was it regret?—mingling with the brute-nature now ingrained in him.

So low had he fallen that he readily made the tiny effort it required to still it, and then, to steady his nerves, took a bottle of brandy from the cupboard at his elbow and drank a couple of glasses, noting in some grim spirit of callousness that the still burden on the table yet left space for the tumbler beside its head. He would allow himself no feeling but annoyance at the loss of a hand just as he was starting across the fishing grounds with empty holds.

And the boy's preposterous demand to be buried ashore—he refused to entertain the idea for a moment, merely resolving to throw the body overboard, decently weighted, so as to lose no time in getting back to his work.

With the motion of the vessel an end of the dead boy's handkerchief slid softly from around his neck upon the table. Laurence snatched at his tumbler, and so doing, noted that the brightly colored fabric was exactly like one of his own. For the moment he thought Clitheroe was wearing a stolen article until he found his own in his pocket. The boy must have bought it, highly priced as it was—Laurence's one trait that remained to him of olden days was a fondness for soft and expensive underclothing for personal wear—must have bought it in imitation of his skipper's. A hundred memories of the manner in which Clitheroe had adored him had copied the way in which he dressed, even to the angle at which his cap was worn; had sworn his pet oaths; had spat and idled, and walked with a little careless swagger—in all following, as best he could, Laurence's worst examples. He pictured the slight figure in its blue guernsey and sea-boots—nearly always worn by himself, though seldom by the other men when ashore—leaning against the street corners or walking down the narrow wynds of Leith. And his death—silent endurance of torture—dying as he conceived Laurence himself would die. His last words had been to demand whether he had died like a man—this stunted boy of scarce eighteen.

Laurence drank again—raw spirit this time—and looked at the dread thin face, still lined with the pain of death. Something like admiration rose in him. The boy had died like a man, and, since he had demanded it, buried ashore he should be.

He went on deck and hailed the bridge. "Change your course to nor'-east," he said. "When Portland's abeam again, give me a call."

"Ay, ay. Nor'-east it is," came the answer, and the little steamer's bows were sweeping to the left as Laurence descended again into his cabin to consult the chart.

Covering so large an area of sea, its scale was small, and it was moreover, marked and scrawled all over with his own notes and observations. Placing it on his knees, he ran his finger along the coastline to the eastward, searching among the names of villages, headlands, and bays for some inlet that should give him harbor room. The nearest—Seithisfiord—was on the eastern coast, two days' steaming; so, resolving to anchor offshore, to convey the body ashore in the dinghy, and then to leave it to the care of the inhabitants of the nearest village or farm, his finger ranged back along the chart to the nearest point on the coastline.

Just to the eastward of Portland, a broad, shallow stream of glacier water, the Kirthaflfot, ran over wide beaches to the sea, and close to it two hamlets bore the names of Asaa and Langholt.

Some half-lost train of memory stirred in his brain. Asaa and Langholt—Langholt and Asaa—where had he heard those names before? Langholt and Asaa—what was the other word that had occurred in conjunction with them?—a word that surely must link up the chain of memory. Asaa?—Langholt? Puzzled, his finger ran down the coastline, and there in fine letters beneath "C. Portland," was its native name, "Dyrholaey!"

Of course; Asaa, and Langholt-by-Dyrholaey! That was it. The names of the villages where lay the valueless lands with which his father had swindled the old sea captain. Laurence swore more oaths softly, undeterred by the presence of his silent companion stretched upon the cabin table.

He poured himself another glass of spirits and drank, frowning as he pored over the chart. Dyrholaey—he tried idly to guess at its meaning. Door-hole-isle, likely enough he thought, having many times seen the great ocean-worn archway in the headland.

Strange that fate should send him here, just as he was about to leave for a while the hated labors to which his father's sin had bound him. Door-hole Isle—just as the ocean had worn the great arch in the volcanic cliffs, so had usage of the sea torn and rent that structure of breeding and education that once he had thought part of himself. And now, hardened and defiled rather than cleansed and purified by the fire through which he had passed, he was going lower yet, to ostentatiously fling away his savings in debauchery more attractive than the vice of the seaports.

Why should fate serve him so? What harm had he done that he himself should be debarred from the best in life—that best he had tasted in youth? More keenly than deprivation of good to himself came the remembrance of the last words of the dead now lying so still before him. Oaths and blasphemy—his own teaching. Such a death was worse than the perishing of the beasts of the field. Devoid of religion, and with no belief in a future existence, some fragment of his early training yet gave him a momentary distaste of himself, almost a half-felt shame at the memory of his own vile words from those lips, now stiffening in death.

He drank again, until the spirits flushed his face and puffed his hot eyelids. Dyrholaey—ay, Doorhole Island. Portland—the land of the portal. The same name in two tongues. And he himself was going to stoop—yes, stoop—to a portal that should take him, a wild brute of the lonely sea wastes, into a land of milk and honey, a realm of pleasant music, smells and tastes, of soft voices, and well-bred, delicate, sweet sin.

And what after? To come back to sea—and perhaps some day to be winch-trapped even as this poor devil had been, or to fall overside and drown, weighted down by heavy sea clothing, as many a better man had done before him. Memory and imagination supplied a hundred details of that last passing, suggested its occurrence in a score of different ways, and the terror of a lonely death at sea struck cold to his very inmost soul.

Strange that his work on this boy should end here, of all places; that the dead whose soul he had damned—if damning were aught but the fiction he believed—would be laid out of sight under the lava blocks and starving land through which his father before him had struck down another such harmless victim. Father and son, alike in their work; sea captain and trawler's deck hand, victims both, broken by their ignorance of aught but the poor simple ways of life at sea.

He drank again, and looked at the drawn, set face upon the table.

What did it matter, after all? Who were they, that these dead should so mutely accuse him? He had no hand in the killing of the body—only the soul. His father, too, had never laid hands on his victim—only robbed him with cunning and greed. He laughed softly but brutally, and tried to think of the Northern Boulevards in June sunlight; but somehow the thoughts refused to flow easily as heretofore.

It was not his fault—or his father's. "Clumsy —— fools," he said aloud, with an oath; and then, "By G—d! I'm getting morbid—or tight. I'll give the whelp his burial ashore, and then hey for southern sunlight!"

He sewed Clitheroe's dead body in a blanket that but half a dozen hours before had wrapped it in a lighter rest than this that knew no waking. This done, he went on deck, and through his glasses examined the now approaching coast. The quantity he had drunk had made him somewhat stupid, and he answered the helmsman's hail of "Portland's abeam" with a dull, "What say?"

"Portland's abeam," the man repeated, waving his hand towards it.

Laurence rocked on his heels with the motion of the boat. "Do you think I haven't eyes, you —— clown?" he said. "Mind your wheel—keep t' your own business."

"Ye told me to give ye a hail," the man responded sulkily, and turned his back upon him.

Laurence drunkenly reflected. So he had, of course. But that was if he was below. Couldn't the fool see he was on deck? Conscious that he was betraying his condition, he turned his attention again to the land.

His glass showed dark grey shingle beaches broken in one place by a band of green shot with silver. That must be the stream with the difficult name—Kir—Kirthaflfot. That was it. And Langholt should be near its mouth. Closer examination revealed a couple of wooden gable ends under grass-grown roofs, on which a sheep was feeding. A wooden groyne lay down the beach, some boats hauled up beside it, and another was being pushed into the water by two or three men. In the clear air their thick clothing and ear-flapped caps were distinctly visible by the glass's aid. Laurence gauged the distance with his eye.

"Run up some sort of a flag half mast," he called to the bridge. "We'll anchor about five miles further along—just by that bit of a river. I'm going to take him ashore." He jerked his thumb towards the cabin; the man at the wheel growled a surly assent, and Laurence went below again to the company of the shrouded bundle on his table.

CHAPTER IX.

A strange voice through his skylight half an hour later roused him from dull reverie. He ascended the narrow stairway to find two of his men striving against the obstacles to conversation with a snuff-smeared Icelander who had climbed to the deck from the boat he had seen launched from Langholt beach, which now was towing alongside.

All three men turned to him as he approached.

"What does he want?" he asked.

The men were unable to tell him. "Either he wants to buy tobacco or sell it," they said. "We cannae make out what he says."

Laurence tried him in Danish, a few words of which he had picked up in Thorshavn, and found he desired to buy. The farms were cut off from civilization throughout the winter, and the Westray was the first spring visitor. He took the man to the skylight and pointed down at the blanket-wrapped bundle on the table. Would the native boat take the body ashore and attend to its internment?" he asked.

The man's answer was difficult to understand, but as far as Laurence could comprehend, it would be necessary for the skipper or a member of the crew to accompany the corpse ashore for the purpose of proving identity or making a deposition as to the manner of death. One constantly repeated word—sysselman—he guessed at last to mean some sort of head man of the parish or district. Apparently the body could not be buried without this official's permission.

"We'll have to anchor, after all," he said, and gave the required orders. [illegible] him on deck. Parcel him up with a spare line and lower into that boat."

The body was slung overside, much as any other inanimate bundle might be—Laurence, with as much tobacco as the crew could spare, following it; and the boat pulled away from the anchoring trawler across the intervening water to the shore.

Two of the men carried their burden up the stony beach and into a low-ceiled room in the nearer house. Laurence, following, found a fat, sheep-faced woman standing by it, her homely face alive with regret.

"Ah! I sorry—sorry," she said brokenly.

"You speak English?" Laurence inquired, in surprise.

"Yess; little—ver' little. I was in Hotel Reykjavik—long ago—before I was marry."

"Is your husband sysselman?"

"Sysselman. Oh no—no. He live fir—fifteen mile—there," she pointed inland with a fat forfinger.

"At Asaa?"

"Yess, Asaa. You know Asaa?"

Laurence shook his head, fuming with annoyance. Here it was already late afternoon, and this precious official had to be brought before he could proceed farther. He considered whether he should get put aboard, up anchor, and away. They would have to bury the lad then, at their own charges and without further trouble to himself.

Seeing the woman bring out a clean sheet to lay over the body, he decided to stay. After all, it was but a day. If these homely strangers could so care for the sacred dead they had never known, it would be hardly meet that a member of his own crew should be left to their care like so much worthless carrion.

"When will the sysselman be here?" he asked.

"We send to-night. He come tomorrow. Cannot more queek as that."

"Very well," Laurence said. "I will sleep on board and come ashore in the morning. Can the body stay here?"

"Yess. Oah yess. But not here in room. Outside. You come."

She led him into a nearly empty shed adjoining the house. Some few dry fish lay in one corner, fenced off from the depredations of the ponies by sheets of corrugated iron. Laurence helping her, two of the sheets were laid on the dirty floor, and the body, brought in by its former bearers, was laid upon them.

Though the place cried aloud of starving poverty, the woman, after exchanging a few words with her companions, asked him to join them at their afternoon meal. Their gentle manners and simplicity almost angered him. The effect of his morning's potations was dying out of him, leaving him depressed and sulky, and their quiet contentment moved him to dull rage. He refused curtly—said he was going for a walk; and when he perceived from the sympathy in their faces that they imagined him grieving for a comrade, he could have struck them.

He turned from them and started to walk inland across the poor, sparsely covered land; then, looking back over his shoulder, pointed out a high rock that broke the horizon two or three miles away, and demanded its name. He would walk there and back—walk the last of the liquor out of him.

"Ookthleed," he thought the woman answered. He repeated the word interrogatively: "Ookthleed?"

"Ja, ja. Yess," they answered, in chorus. "Ookthleed."

A sudden memory prompted him. He retraced his steps, searching in his pockets until he found a lead pencil. "Write it down," he told the woman; and, as he expected, she wrote it "[illegible]"

HASTINGS

(Special Correspondence.)

Hastings, July 12.—Another much respected resident of this village passed away on Wednesday, July 4, in the person of Mr. Peter McQuade at the age of 51 years and 5 months, after a brief illness. The funeral was held from his late residence on Friday afternoon, and thence to the Trent Valley Cemetery for internment much sympathy is extended to the bereaved ones.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Skinkle, of Warkworth, were in town on Monday.

SOMETHING NEW

THE BELL CAR

To those who require a heavier and more expensive car than the Ford, I take pleasure in announcing that I have taken the agency for the new "Bell" car, in addition to the popular Ford line.

Come and look over the "Bell" at $1185 f.o.b. Barrie, Ontario. It will give you a full-sized, full powered five-passenger car with every new improvement and refinement in design, upholstering and finish. It is sturdily built, runs with the smoothness of the most expensive cars and is the most up-to-date car of its size on the market.

I am now in a position to supply the "Bell" and to give cutsomers the regular Duffus Garage Service, so well known throughout the country.

SEVEN FIREMEN OBJECT TO WORK AS STREET LABORERS

Refuse to Help Flush George Street Twice a Week---Council Insists That Department do as Requested.

At the last meeting of the City Council Ald. Worth introduced a resolution, which passed, asking that Ald. Dobbin arrange to have the Fire Department flush George street once or twice a week.

Last evening the chairman of the fire, water and light committee read a letter from Fire Chief Howard stating that he had called the men of the department together and placed the matter of flushing the streets before them. Seven of them refused to do it, but were willing to furnish one of their number to handle the hydrant for other employes of the works department.

The letter caused quite a lot of unfavorable comment, as the aldermen thought that the Council had used the men very fairly on the recent increase in their wages, and to refuse to flush a few blocks of city streets was something that the aldermen could not fathom.

Ald. Smith was quite strong in his remarks. He had favored the firemen in their request for an increase in wages, and now they refused to return the compliment. In future he would oppose any increase or other requests.

Ald. Stratton was of the same opinion. He thought that the firemen should assist in every way to make the city attractive. It was not going to hurt them to use the hose for a few hours twice a week. He moved that the chairman of the fire, water and light committee see that the men turn out and flush George street from Brock street to King street twice a week.

Ald. Dobbin did not believe there was any use going to the men further. Their refusal was there.

Ald. Langford—"Only seven men refused. The others may do it for you."

Ald. McIntyre gave it as his opinion that the men were quite within their rights in refusing to flush the streets. It was not their work. They had made an offer to assist by sending a hydrant man. He did not believe in the action.

Acting Mayor Duncan thought the firemen should welcome the chance for a little exercise with the hose. It was better than driving the horses up and down the streets every day. He was at a loss to understand the action of the men.

Ald. Smith would insist that the men do as requested. There were plenty of men to be got at the salary paid by the local department.

Ald. Stratton moved, seconded by Acting Mayor Duncan that George street, from Brock to King street, be flushed twice a week under the supervision of the chairman of the board of works and that the necessary assistance be secured from the fire department by the chairman of the fire, water and light committee.

The motion carried, Ald. Dobbin and McIntyre dissenting.

Ald. Weir named Tuesday and Friday as the days that the street would be cleaned. It was understood that the work will be done at such a time as will be most convenient to the firemen and when the street is free from traffic.

PEOPLING THE CLAY BELT

Model Homes Built in New North Country For Railway Employes

The action of the Canadian Northern Railway in building one hundred houses at a number of divisional points on the Montreal-Port Arthur section of its transcontinental line, provides homes—modern, comfortable and of pleasing design, for the employes of the road and their families. The conditions of occupancy are so easy that it will be a comparatively simple matter for the C.N.R. employes to virtually own outright the towns of Brent, Capreol, Folevet, Horne Payne and Jellicoe.

With the exception of electric lighting, which may be a later development, the houses in New Ontario are equipped quite as completely as homes of similar size in long established towns and villages in Old Ontario. They contain a large living room—from which a winding staircase leads to the upper floor—a kitchen, a pantry, and a bedroom, on the ground floor. Above, there are other two bedrooms, a bathroom, and a sewing room, all of fair size. One of the hardships in winter has been eliminated by the provision of a roofed-over coal and wood bin outside the house, but against the kitchen, with a sliding door arranged in the wall so that the household supply can be replenished without the usual cold out-of-door journey. Beaver board supplies the interior finish, and shiplap may be added outside.

As a general rule the plan has been followed of placing each house at the side of a good sized lot, to facilitate the planting of the remainder to garden truck for table needs. It is understood that the Ontario Government will later throw open to settlement a township contiguous to the town of Foleyet and another to Horne Payne, in the great clay belt. It is confidently expected that the building of these homes will mark the beginning of a new era in the New North. First there should follow the stores to cater to the needs of the town dwellers, and then settlers to take up the adjacent land, because of the inducement of a good market and the advantages of adequate shipping facilities.

STURGEON FISHERIES

A Declining Industry That Must be Revived

In the 80's when Canada's sturgeon fisheries were first being exploited commercially, the flesh of the sturgeon sold for four or five cents per pound, and the prepared eggs, or caviare, for ten cents per pound. The fishery was prosecuted very energetically, and, in 1897, when the record output was attained, caviare had advanced in price to 25 cents per pound. Later, as a result of continued over fishing, the fishery became virtually depleted, and sturgeon flesh and roe are the most valuable products of Canadian waters.

The sturgeon has been accused of predatory habits, but has been acquitted of this charge by the foremost Canadian scientists. Every portion of the fish can be utilized for the manufacture of some valuable commodity; there is absolutely no waste. To permit such fisheries to become extinct, unless detrimental to others of more value, is commercial waste and inefficiency.—Conservation

LIFE OF A DROVER

Driving Cattle One Thousand Miles no Sinecure

To take a mob of a thousand fat steers over a thousand miles of all sorts of country, and bring them into market in prime condition, is a business involving a great deal of responsibility and care, for, although cattle are generally traveled at the owner's risk, of course the drover's reputation depends upon the order in which his cattle reach the end of the journey. A good drover is always in requisition, and the wages of a head man in charge of a mob are generally about $20 a week. It is a dog's life, too, a drover's. From daylight to dark he is on horseback, exposed to all kinds of weather, crawling along behind his cattle at the slowest possible rate that is consistent with moving at all. If he averages between four and five miles a day on a long journey it is quite as fast as his cattle ought to travel. Every day the man in charge rides ahead of the mob to pick a place for them to camp at night. Water, of course, is a sine qua non, and he must have reliable information as to the state of the road for a hundred miles ahead of him, or he will get his cattle into a terrible fix. Every night the cattle have to be rounded up, and watched on the camp the whole night long. A drover never gets more than four hours' sleep at a stretch, and he is lucky if he can get that for the first month his cattle are on the road.—Farmer's Advocate.

RIDERS OF THE PLAINS

Relentlessness of Mounted Police Shown by Cold Figures

It has often been asked, How does it happen that the Royal Northwest Mounted Police are so successful in maintaining order over so great a stretch of territory? We have the answer in the report of the operations of the force for one year. Here is that answer: In thirty-two cases of capital crime committed in the prairie provinces, during twelve months, the principals in thirty-one instances were overtaken. The principal in the thirty-second instance will not be permitted to rest until he also is brought in, if he is to be found anywhere between the international boundary and the Arctic Circle. It is fundamental with the Mounted Police service of Canada, that no culprit shall be allowed to escape. The fugitive is pursued relentlessly, whether in the crowded city or among the desolations that bend from the height of land to the North Pole.

Care of the Forest

The forests form one of the largest of the natural resources of Canada and one that has contributed largely not only to the general prosperity of the country but to the public revenues. Moreover there are extensive areas that will be productive only if they are used for growing forests. With these facts in mind it seems self-evident that it is the duty of every citizen to take an interest in the forests.—Canadian Forestry Journal.

SOUTH WARD SEWER TO BE COMPLETED BY CONTRACT

Board of Works Unable to Continue Work on Account of Labor Conditions---Workmen Ask 35 Cents an Hour.

The City Council decided last night to build the sewers authorized in the South Ward by contract providing that suitable tenders can be secured for the work. Tenders will be received up to six o'clock on Monday, July 23rd.

This was the outcome of a very lengthy discussion at the Board of Works last night. Twice the motion to proceed with the work by day labor, and with Martin Neary as foreman was voted down and as a last resort the motion to do the work by tender was put through.

When the subject of proceeding with the work on the Prince street sewer came up Ald. Dobbin was opposed to going on with it with labor conditions as they are. It was costing altogether too much money to build sewers or do other city work. Let the city rest for a while. The work was not injuring anyone by not being completed.

Ald. Duncan was not anxious to go ahead if the sewer was going to cost such a high rate per foot as the first hundred feet. The new appliances would give the foreman a better chance but labor was a problem.

Chairman Weir stated that Foreman Neary had assured him that he could get the men at 35c per hour. On the other hand Jack Hayes had complained to him about the cost of building the sewer and offered to do the work for less than half the present cost.

Street Commissioner Evans was quite confident that there would be trouble in getting labor to go on with the job. In reply to Ald. Dobbin he stated, "It is almost prohibitive to go ahead with the work." He could not proceed with it if he was doing it for himself.

Ald. Smith was in favor of calling for tenders and let the contractors worry about the labor.

Ald. Saunders was in favor of letting Neary do the work if laborers could be secured.

Martin Neary was sure that he could get the men if they were paid 35c an hour the same as other firms paid.

Ald. Taylor would like to see the sewer gone on with.

Ald. Saunders and Taylor fathered a motion that the work be proceeded with and the men paid 35c per hour.

Ctiy Engineer Parsons was asked for his opinion and stated that unless the work was absolutely necessary he would not favor proceeding with it or any other work where extra labor was required.

Ald. Duncan thought that the Council should go largely on the opinion of the Engineer and the Street Commimssioner.

The motion to continue the work was lost as was the motion of Ald. Smith and Dobbin to advertise for tenders.

Another discussion was indulged in and Acting Mayor Duncan changed his mind when he found that it was the opinion that there would not be any chance of better conditions until after the war. He would not hold up the work that long as a matter of health.

Upon the vote being reconsidered the motion to advertise for tenders was carried and the advertisements will appear on Monday next and the tenders will be received until the following Monday.

RESIDENTS ON VARIOUS STREETS WANT MORE OIL

Ald. Smith Insists Upon a Fair Deal for His Constituents Across the River---Board of Works Routine.

The Board of Works last night dealt with the following matters that had been referred to it for consideration:

W. M. Mallory, who lives at the corner of Wolfe and Park streets, wants a sidewalk to his store. The engineer will make a report on the request.

The Peterborough Utilities Commission reported that they would attend to the work of repairing Smith street.

The city engineer will be asked to make a report on the spur line into the Quaker Oats property in East City. The Peterborough Hydraulic Power Co. stated that they could not alter the location of the track at Douro street and Driscoll Terrace without making a compound curve.

The chairman of the board and the department driver were authorized to dispose of the grey team belonging to the department.

More Oil.

Ald. Langford asked that Union, Division, Antrim and Edinburgh streets be oiled, and the city engineer took note of them and will see what can be done after the other streets ordered oiled have been completed.

Ald. Smith did not want Ashburnham overlooked in favor of the North Ward. The people across the river were just as anxious to have the dust laid.

AVOID WASTE.

Little Economies in Kitchen Pointed Out in Brief Warnings.

The housewife must remember that when trying to save the little things one usually discards there must be system. Have a definite place for bits and look them over constantly.

Beware also these little wastes, as they mount up into many dollars:

Dried fruits left unprotected to grow wormy.

Good sheets used for the ironing table.

Flatirons wiped on the ironing sheet instead of cloth or paper.

Napkins used for dish towels and dish towels for holders.

Soap left to waste in dishwater.

Soup set away covered while hot to sour.

Mops and brooms not hung up and carpet brooms used to scrub with.

Tin dishes or wash boilers set away wet to rust.

Wooden pails and washtubs left dry to fall apart.

Real kitchen preparedness means looking after every little leak.

How to Make Three Useful Articles For Sailors.

The word has gone forth that a warm sailor is better than a cold one. This is no sentimental catch phrase; it is a literal physiological fact. A warm sailor can work and fight with a steadier nerve, with an increased physical efficiency, with a higher courage, for the effect of warmth is to stimulate.

Now, then, what can you, as a woman, do about it? You, a woman with a pair of knitting needles, can keep at least one sailor warm. And remember, the sailor that you keep warm is going to be a better defender of your flag.

Damascene Swords.

A writer in a foreign journal points out that, according to Jean Jacques Perret, the well known French author living in the eighteenth century, Damascene blades were probably hardened in olden times by a powerful blast of cold air issuing from a narrow passage between two walls specially built for the purpose.

"The doctor has just told me," said the friendly neighbor, "that your husband cannot recover."

"Oh!" shrieked the troubled wife.

"Now, my dear, the question is, Shall we break the news to him or let death come as a surprise to him?"

Saint Quentin.

There is much historical interest attached to the little town of Saint Quentin, in Northern France, in whose immediate neighborhood desperate struggles have recently taken place. The Romans called it Augusta Veromanduorum, and during the centuries that the empire held sway over Gaul it was an important strategic point, standing as it did at the meeting-place of five great military roads. As to its name, it is derived from that of Gaius Quintinus, a "preacher of Christianity," who journeyed to Saint Quentin in the third century from Italy and was there martyred.

Centuries afterwards it was thrice ravaged by the Normans, and so constant was the menace from this quarter that towards the close of the ninth century the town was surrounded by a wall.

In 1420 the Burgundians, in the course of their ever-recurring conflict with the kings of France, took possession of the city and remained in possession until 1471. Then in 1557 it was taken by the Spaniards. Saint Quentin remained in Spanish hands until 1559, and in 1560 was assigned at the dowry of Mary Stuart.

During the reign of Louis the Fourteenth Saint Quentin was looked upon as a place of no little importance, and Louis erected elaborate fortifications for its defence. These were, however, demolished between 1810 and 1820, and with this demolition ended the long history of Saint Quentin as a strong place.

To Prevent Rust.

Tools which are kept in a damp cellar can be protected from rust very easily if a pan containing unslaked lime is placed under the bench. The moisture in the cellar is entirely absorbed by the lime.—Popular Science Monthly.

Back From the Honeymoon.

She—Now, my dear, we must face this problem. Shall we settle in the suburbs or the city?

He—You mean live, darling. Don't forget that on my present salary we can't settle anywhere.

CABBAGE BURSTING

Many persons growing their own vegetables have experienced considerable annoyance in having a large number of fine heads of cabbage to burst before the vegetable can be used or marketed. The bursting is caused by rapid growth, and usually occurs after a warm rain which has followed a dry spell. It is surprising how rapidly the heads will split and push out from the center, which is damaging unless the cabbage is used at once. To prevent cabbage from bursting, go to each head, and pull it just enough to break a large number of the small rootlets, but not enough to allow the head to fall or lean very much to one side. This will lessen the amount of moisture and food taken into the plant and the development of the head, and consequently the bursting will cease. In most cases the cabbage will remain perfect and uninjured, and can be sold or used before any damage results.

MAKING TREES BEAR

The Question of Cultivation Around Trees is Important

Hard, impervious soil is the tree's greatest obstacle to maximum thriftiness. Plowing the surface between and around trees helps, but when a tree is eight or ten years of age, or older, its roots go down several feet. The plough cannot break up the hard subsoil, and thus little or no relief is afforded the feeding roots by ploughing. In fact, surface ploughing encourages shallow rooting, which every horticulturist knows is bad for a tree.

To date the only practical remedy that has been found for hard soil is blasting with dynamite. Its use enables the orchardist to deeply stir and break the subsoil.

The blasting, usually an inch and a half soil auger being employed to put down holes to a depth of about three to four feet. One-quarter pound charge of a slow dynamite, five or six feet out from the trunk is generally sufficient for a tree under five years old. For larger trees from two to six charges, planted at different points around the trunk, will be required. The proper point to place the holes for the older trees is out at about the edge of the foliage line.

The effect of blasting is to break up the hard soil, enabling the roots to advance easily into new feeding beds; also to increase the water storage capacity of the subsoil so that the tree may not suffer from lack of moisture during periods of drought.

Canadian Coins

In a report, Dr. James Bonar, deputy master of the Royal Mint, Ottawa, states that worn coin has received from the finance department in one year for re-coinage to the value of $106,424.97 silver, and $34.82 bronze. From a consignment of 13 bags, five bags were chosen at haphazard as delivered, and taken as a fair sample for estimating the age and wear and tear of the several denominations. The results for the two highest denominations showed a mean age of 42 years for the 50-cent piece, and of 39 years for the 25-cent piece, as against 36 and 34 respectively in 1912. The 10-cent pieces show a mean age of 34 years.

Canada's National Anthem

Calixa Lavalle, famous as being the composer of "O Canada," one of Canada's national anthems, was a brilliant but erratic musician, and left a few works for the piano, the most important being his well known etude, "Papillon," this being a showy piece of somewhat glittering character, but withal quite effective.

Protect the Horse

To allow the horse to suffer from the cold for lack of a blanket is either heartless cruelty or senseless neglect. If you are observant and humane you will take notice of the horses upon the streets during the winter and see to it that the blanket is used properly. Protect the horse!

THE BOY SCOUTS ARE ORGANIZED AT LAKEFIELD

A Boy Scout movement is taking place in Lakefield, and at the first meeting on Monday night some fourteen boys were present. This organization is purely undenominational, and aims to improve our boys morally and physically. Several of the citizens are behind the movement in Lakefield, and it promises to be a great success. There has been, and probably is now, a feeling on behalf of the parents that this is a form of militarism. To show how absurd such a notion is we detail below a few of the aims of the Boy Scouts. We hope that all parents on hearing of this movement will give it their hearty support.

Scout craft is a combination of observation, deduction and hardiness, or ability to do. It consists of first aid, life-saving, tracking, signalling, cycling, nature study, seamanship and other instructions. This is accomplished in games and team-play, and a pleasure, not work, for the boy.

The Scout laws given below are worthy of special note:—

1. A Scout law is to trust.

2. A Scout is loyal to the King and to his officers, and to his parents, his country, and to his employer.

3. A Scout's duty is to be useful and to help others.

4. A Scout is a friend to all and a brother to every other Scout no matter to whatever social class the other belongs.

5. A Scout is courteous.

6. A Scout is a friend to animals.

7. A Scout obeys orders of his parents, patrol leader, or Scoutmaster.

8. A Scout smiles and whistles under all circumstances.

9. A Scout is thrifty.

10. A Scout is pure in thought, word and deed.

NEW LINES.

COMFORT BAGS.

What to Put In Them For the Soldier Boys on Duty.

Comfort bags for soldiers are being made by women engaged in war relief work. This is the time to make them in order that they may be ready when needed.

For a comfort bag it is well to use khaki cloth to correspond with the uniform. The most important thing is the contents. Soldiers do not want a lot of useless articles to remember you by, but there are a number of things they do need.

For instance, if you wish to have your soldier write to you place a pocket in the bag filled with stamped envelopes, not loose stamps, as they stick together and are easily lost. Writing paper could be in the form of a pad or sheets could be slipped in each envelope so as to be ready for use when needed.

Of course soldiers need sewing kits, which can be purchased in a five and ten cent store for 10 cents each. The sewing kit may be a folder containing a thimble, needles, many black and white safety pins, buttons and other things of the kind. Of course these folders can be made at home. Safety matches, toothbrushes, washcloths, medicated cotton, bandages to be used for small scratches, darning cotton, darning needles, stomach bands knitted of gray wool, postcards and lead pencils are good things for the comfort bag. Naturally individual needs and tastes will be consulted.

The bag may be 13 by 10 inches. The initials of the owner, his state and the number of his regiment may be outlined on the outside.

Scouts Help the Birds.

Boy scouts of the Philadelphia organisation erected several hundred bird sanctuaries. These have been placed throughout the city and on the grounds of suburban estates.

Applicant must appear in person at Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for District. Entry by proxy may be made on certain conditions. In certain districts a homesteader may secure an adjoining quarter-section as pre-emption. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Reside six months in each of three years after earning homestead patent and cultivate 50 acres extra. May obtain pre-emption patent as soon as homestead patent on certain conditions.

A settler after obtaining homestead patent, if he cannot serve a pre-emption, may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.00.

Holders of entries may count time of employment as farm laborers in Canada during 1917, as residence duties under certain conditions.

When Dominion Lands are advertised or posted for entry, returned soldiers who have served overseas and have been honorably discharged, receive one day priority in applying for entry at local Agent's Office (but not Sub-Agency). Discharge papers must be presented to Agent.

SPORTS OF ALL SORTS

Lines dedicated to Babe Ruth, Red Sox pitcher, who has been indefinitely suspended for hitting an umpire:

You thought that you were funny, Babe,
To soak the umpire so;
It's gointa cost you money, Babe—
I could have told you so.

The next time you get huffy, Babe,
Remember, keep your head;
Just let the ump get guffy, Babe,
But soak yourself instead.

There is considerable speculation among the fans and elsewhere as to why Dell is retained on the pitching staff of the Robins. Personally, Dell is all right, but baseball is baseball, and Dell hasn't pitched a winning game in a year or more. Maybe he is kept on because he is good looking. Who knows?

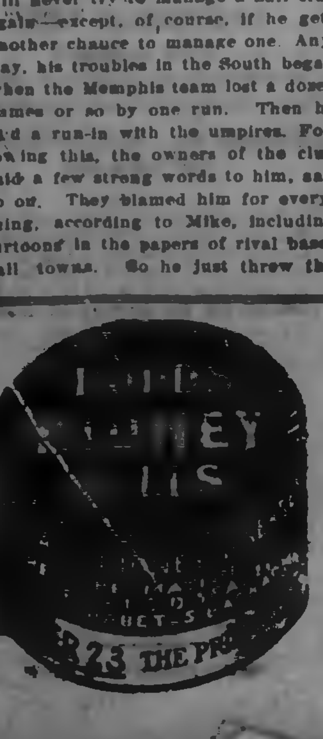
If Uncle Sam ever has to appoint an official fly catcher—you never can tell what this war will bring about—we herewith suggest Amos Strunk, Connie Mack's genial outfielder. When it comes to catching flies, Amos is right there, and his talents ought to be used for the benefit of the nation.

Ty Cobb's batting has reached that point which makes pitchers shiver in their boots every time he faces them. He is getting more chances to be passed than any other player, but Ty just simply won't be passed. He likes a run for his money, so to speak.

Grouchy Gus says: "A camel can go eight days without a drink; but that's nothing. Men in this prohibition paradise are making Mr. Camel look like a perfect drunkard."

There was a young man from Fort Wayne,
Who gave me a terrible payne;
His socks were light pink,
His ties made me blink,
And he carried a very thin cayne.

Mike Donlin, once a Giant mainstay, is still grumbling over what he terms the "bum deal" he got as manager of the Memphis team of the Southern Association. Mike has gone east once more, and swears he will never try to manage a ball club again—except, of course, if he gets another chance to manage one. Anyway, his troubles in the South began when the Memphis team lost a dozen games or so by one run. Then he had a run-in with the umpires. Following this, the owners of the club said a few strong words to him, and so on. They blamed him for everything, according to Mike, including cartoons in the papers of rival baseball towns. So he just threw the whole thing up and beat it for the great white way. Donlin has always been a hard loser, and refuses to be the goat for anybody. So there you are, and Mike out of a job.



Fight fans in New York are still talking with enthusiasm over the bout which was recently staged between Mike O'Dowd of St. Paul and Soldier Bartfield of Brooklyn. The former's victory was well merited and well earned. From the viewpoint of sport, the bout was one of the best fought in a long time. Both men fought hard, and the scrapping was clean and full of action from start to finish. The St. Paul boy used his usual rushing methods and in that manner escaped many a hard swing directed at him by the soldier. O'Dowds short right to the body worked early and often may be said to have won the day for him. The men were very evenly matched, and any little incident may have changed the scale. The St. Paul scrapper had the better of five out of the ten innings, and to him, therefore, went the decision. Two of the other rounds were even and three belonged to Bartfield. More good, clean fighting of this kind will increase the popularity of the boxing game and also that of the men who are engaged in it.

Despite his mix-up with the National League officials and the Baseball Writers' Association of New York, John McGraw continues to be popular with the fans. In the midst of his controversy with these two elements he was loudly cheered when he entered the ball field, and a great many people were seen gathering around him, shaking his hand and slapping his back until it looked as if both arm and back would be lame from these sympathetic greetings.

Canada Shows the Way.

Discussing the duty which devolves upon the Empire to care for its returned soldiers, The London Daily Mail, one of Lord Northcliffe's principal newspapers, says: "We congratulate Canada on the lead she has given in the treatment of her soldiers, and hope the example will be followed in this country without delay. In November last an order was issued by the Canadian Government directing that no person receive Government employment who had not served in the army. What Canada is doing, all the states in the British Empire will do before the war ends."

A Doukhobor Enterprise.

"The Christian Community of Universal Brotherhood, Ltd.," is the name of a million-dollar corporation which has been granted a Dominion charter. It is evidently a new Doukhobor enterprise, for among its incorporators is Peter Verigin, one of the leaders of the Doukhobor community, and its head office is at Verigin, Sask. Its chief object, as set forth in its charter, is "to carry on agricultural pursuits and to manufacture the products of the farm, the mine and the forest."

Great Athlete Killed.

Another great athlete has paid the supreme sacrifice in France in Jack ("Rufus") Ryan, the star Ottawa outside wing of six years ago. Word has been received in Ottawa that this great footballer, hockeyist, and paddler has passed away. Few better outside wings were developed than Ryan, and the "sorrel top" was always a great favorite with everybody. The season that he and Stronach occupied the outside positions Ottawa had the best pair in the game that year.

COLONEL DENISON'S ADVICE.

British Statesmen Now Realize That He Was Right.

More than once men from the British overseas Dominions have given the statesmen at Westminster very sage advice. Just at the present time the people of the Old Land are learning from bitter experience of one Canadian who was more far sighted than they realized. The food condition in the British Isles is very serious just now. How different would have been the situation if British statesmen had had ears to hear the warnings of such sound-headed friends of the Empire as Colonel George T. Denison of Toronto. Few men have had their opinions on public questions so justified by events as Colonel Denison. It must give him ironic amusement to look about him and behold among the host of his disciples so many of those who heaped ridicule on his ideas of twenty years ago. In 1897 he went to England as the delegate of the British Empire League in Canada to impress its views on certain questions, and especially to urge the taking of vigorous steps to provide that the British food supply should be grown within the Empire. Those who have not read Colonel Denison's "The Struggle for Imperial Unity" should get it and read it now. There they will learn how the colonel talked to British statesmen and British audiences on this food question, and in the light of present-day events they will be able to see, as clearly as he saw then, that in the food-producing resources of the Empire, properly developed, lies the main defence of the Empire.

At a meeting of the British Empire League in London on the 5th of July, 1897, he pointed out that for the daily bread of three out of every four of her population Britain was at that moment dependent upon two foreign nations. "Let the method be what it may," he said, "whether great national granaries, a duty on food, a bounty or what not, but let something be done." In a discussion with the famous statistical authority, Sir Robert Giffen, Colonel Denison some days later showed the fallacy of the view that command of the sea would of itself ensure a plentiful supply of foodstuffs. He was in England again in 1899, and in a speech there he said: "Our food should be grown under our own flag, or there should be large stores in England, and a preference which would increase the growth of wheat to the extent of 10,000,000 quarters (80,000,000 bushels) additional in the British Isles would be the best-spent money for defence that could be expended, and a preference to the colonies would soon produce the balance within the Empire." Recently Mr. Lloyd George said that a system of preference could be established without adding to the cost of food.

Crows and Other Birds.

About the only bird that the average farmer notices particularly is the crow, and that is because of the trouble that it gives him at corn-planting time, and for a few weeks; the useful birds are seldom recognised by him or other dwellers in the rural districts.

If the fruit-grower, for instance, would give up sufficient of his time to observe the work done by robins, woodpeckers, and other common birds, in cutting down the number of harmful insects, he would be satisfied to devote a good deal of his time to the protection of useful birds of all sorts.

The great increase in the number of crop-destroying insects of later years and the resulting necessity for increased activity in spraying to protect crops, is largely due to the decrease in the number of insectiverous birds, and who would not prefer having a number of birds protect his trees, to standing out day after day in a rain of poisonous liquid in order to ensure his fruit crop.

To gain an idea of the benefits to be derived from the presence of a large number of birds in our fields it is only necessary to recount the experience of Mr. Nash, of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, who fed a robin 70 cut-worms a day for 15 days, and Mr. Treadwell, of the Boston Society of Natural History, who fed a young robin 68 earth worms in one day. Under the supervision of the United States Biological Survey the crops of 3,500 birds were examined. Thirty grasshoppers and 250 caterpillars were found in the crops of cuckoos. In the crop of a nighthawk 60 grasshoppers and in another 500 mosquitoes. Mr. Furbush, State Ornithologist of Massachusetts, estimates that a single yellow-throated warbler will consume 100,000 aphids or tree lice in a day.

The protection of the useful birds, especially insectiverous ones, is provided for by law, but if an increase in the number of these birds is to be brought about, more than just living up to the law is necessary. The owner of a farm property should go as far as seeing that no other person is allowed to scare the birds on his place; feed should be provided to help carry native birds through the winter, and places should be set apart where the birds may nest without being disturbed.

To return to the crow—even this robber of the cornfield should not be destroyed, although it is necessary to discourage him of augmenting his diet at the expense of the seed grain. The crow is a devourer of harmful birds and insects and as such does more good to agriculture than harm.

MUSICAL RUSSIAN SOLDIERS

Many and Strange Are the Songs They Sing.

Russia is a great country of peasant song. Two days before the declaration of war I learned that besides the songs of love and country life the memory of the people hold many a different character, says a writer returned from Russia. I was staying at some little distance from Petrograd with a Russian friend, Nikolai Georgievitch, who was called to the colors at the first mobilization. We had a long walk through the forest to the station, and as we walked he sang, new songs that I had never heard before, but have since heard almost daily. He left for the front speculating as to whether the war would be over in six weeks or two months, but convinced—even so that he would not see the end of it. He was killed, fighting in Galicia.

The war is nearly three years old now, and many singers are dead, but all through these years the songs I heard that night in the forest, and others like them, have been echoing over Russia. They are of very various character. The recruit reminds himself that his days of freedom are over and that to-morrow he will be his own man no more. A mother mourns over her son who is called to the colors, and he answers her with pride. A peahen who jeers at the soldiers receives a proud rebuke. The Cossack dying in the plain gives his last message to his horse. The soldier dying in hospital dictates a letter to his friend in the village. A girl whose lover has gone to the war wishes for wings, that she might fly after him and cut off the head of the kaiser. Doubtless, forty years ago, when young Russians crossed the mountains to liberate Bulgaria, she wished to cut off the head of the Sultan of Turkey. For the tradition of these songs is living, and not artificially preserved, so that the peasant soldiers change the songs of their fathers to suit the circumstances of their own fighting. In the Turkish war men sang:

> We marched through the Balkan mountains. They seemed to us high;
> But our commander said: "Brothers, that is a matter of no significance."

The soldiers of to-day substitute Carpathian for Balkan, and do not forget that song when they look down upon the plains of Hungary. Then there are songs connected with persons and events secure in the popular memory, like "Peter the Great at Poltava" or "Napoleon and the Fire at Moscow." Then, too, many regiments have their own poets, who, like the skalds of ancient Scandinavia, chronicle the fighting in which they share themselves. The manuscript song book of the Akhtirsky Hussars, for example, a copy of which they were kind enough to send after me from the front, contains many songs by Captain Panaev of that famous regiment, who died in battle January 18, 1915. Simple chronicles [illegible] these, but sung [illegible] written in the

MRS. BILLY SUNDAY

Helpmate of the Most Active Evangelist Alive.

JUST AS FAMOUS AS BILLY.

After Experiences All Over the United States Mrs. Sunday Thinks That Love of Display Is the Greatest Sin of American Women.

"I think the chief vice of American women is their love of display, putting on style to keep up with the other woman, buying clothes and furniture that they oughtn't to afford, entertaining more than they can afford, striving, striving, striving. And there's no real satisfaction in it," says Mrs. Sunday.

Mrs. Sunday was born near Chicago, but grew up in the city itself, where her father was a successful milk and ice cream dealer.

"I was a Christian before I met Mr. Sunday," she explains, "and an enthusiastic member of the young people's society in the church, but I was not what I should now call a spiritual girl. No, indeed, I wasn't anxious for Mr. Sunday to give up his ball playing and go into Christian work. I didn't dare advise him to go against God's will, for when in the spring of 1891 he put it up to the Lord to get his release from the Philadelphia team, with whom he had signed up for three years, I wouldn't have cared if the release hadn't come. I had two babies by that time, and I knew what quitting ball and going into the Y. M. C. A. meant—it meant that he'd be gone every day and every evening, too, and that I'd be at home alone wrestling with the housework and the babies; also it meant less than half the ball salary. However, I kept my mouth shut, and when the Philadelphia management suddenly and unexpectedly released Mr. Sunday in March of that year and he became religious work director of the central branch Y. M. C. A. in Chicago I had not a word to say against the change. I think wives ought to know and understand the details of their husbands' business and be able to give advice when advice is needed, but I think a woman [illegible] be mighty careful about urging her husband to do anything against the Lord's will. A good [illegible] by their extravagance force their husbands to make money their chief goal and interest in life. It's a mistake. A wife ought to be a helpmate and an inspiration to a man, not a goad to make money for her to spend."

MRS. WILLIAM SUNDAY

"Ma" Sunday is of that type of womanhood that backs its men folk to the end, be that end bitter or sweet, works like a horse when needed, cheers, admires, advises, defends. The idea of having any interests on earth separate from her husband's has never entered her head.

Nobody can imagine what her whirlwind husband would do without her. They are rarely separated for an hour. She has not only stood back of him in every campaign, but shoulder to shoulder beside him. Nobody in all his vast audiences is ever more appreciative of his telling points than the plain, pleasant faced woman with the snappy brown eyes who always sits behind him on the platform. And when he has hurled his last imaginary ball out over his audience, shrilled his final denunciation and from very exhaustion stopped with an abrupt "Good night!" that is curiously reminiscent (to unregenerate sinners who just will patronize vaudeville) of Harry Lauder's "Gude nicht"—then he turns wearily to her and mutters hoarsely, "Let's beat it, ma!" And they beat it.

Two Different Causes.

"Oh, dear," sighed the pretty heiress, "I'm so awfully miserable!"

"Why are you miserable?" queried the maid, who was both homely and penniless.

"I'm afraid some one will marry me for my money," answered the pretty heiress.

"And I," rejoined the poor girl, "am miserable because I'm afraid no one will marry me because I haven't any money."—Chicago News.

Created Tommy Atkins.

There is no officer in the British service who knows "Mr. Atkins" more completely than Sir George Younghusband. For forty years he might be described as having been almost continuously in action, as he began in Afghan, a few years after joining his regiment in 1878, and is at present engaged in Mesopotamia. Sir George Younghusband, then, knows Private Mulvaney even better than Mr. Kipling himself, and yet he has deliberately recorded his opinion that neither Private Mulvaney, nor his two companions, nor, indeed, any other member of the family of "Mr. Atkins," ever made use of any of the expressions Mr. Kipling puts into their mouths, until Mr. Kipling put them there.

This tribute to Mr. Kipling's genius Sir George does not give on his own authority alone. He declares that he has put the question to innumerable other British officers, and that he has never once met a British officer who heard these expressions previous to Mr. Kipling's appearance. In short, Sir George insists, Mr. Kipling made the British soldier as he was known before the Great War, as completely as anybody ever made anything in this world. Was it not Charles Dickens who made Christmas?

The Growth of the Earth.

In the early days of its history the earth grew rapidly by the addition of meteoric matter. It is still growing in the same manner, though scarcely to an appreciable extent, for the mass of meteoric matter added yearly is reckoned to be only twenty thousand tons. In the course of ages the larger planets have swept up practically all the fragments of the original disruption, and the only available source of supply of meteoric matter seems to be that brought by comets.

Story-tellers in Tokio.

It is estimated that there are six hundred professional story-tellers in Tokio, who wander from house to house and relate tales for the pay of one shilling an hour. The story-teller learns a new set of stories when he finds that the old ones are too well known.

Clerks Must Be Civil.

A recent pronunciamento of the Bavarian Ministry of the Interior, though couched in polite and fatherly language, contains a threat to all food storekeepers that unless they treat their customers civilly, they will be debarred from conducting their business in the future. Countless complaints about the arrogance of the storekeepers, who are variously described as having become the "lords of creation," "autocrats," and "dictators" are responsible for the order.

The Ministry's proclamation reminds all who sell food of any kind that, because of the war and the state of affairs it has brought with it, they have become in a way public servants. They are no longer purely private individuals but members of the communal economic machine.

That being the case, continues the order, each storekeeper must subordinate his own interests to those of the state. He is not allowed to ridicule his patrons, ignore their wants, nor be impolite to them.

"Accordingly," concludes the proclamation, "it becomes the duty of the communal organization to remove the merchant, butcher, baker, etc., who fails in his duty to his patrons, to refuse to apportion any further goods to him. On occasion he may even be debarred from trading under the regulation of the Bundesrat which covers undesirable and irresponsible persons in business."

German Officers Hungry.

A despatch from Geneva, Switzerland, says that Swiss officers on leave who have just returned there after nine months' service on the Swiss-Alsace frontier, say that even the German officers in Alsace and Lorraine are suffering from hunger, and when they arrive at the Swiss outpost villages are now glad to obtain a good meal, paying any price.

Until a few months ago the German officers, unlike the men on the frontier who are always hungry, pretended they had plenty of food, but their pale faces belied the statement. Now they admit that decent food is lacking and their Swiss officer comrades, though neutral, are doing their best for the Germans, although the Swiss military authorities prohibit any intercourse.

If this is the case with officers the condition of the German soldiers may be imagined on the frontier where the kindly Swiss are sharing their rations. One German deserter said:

"My whole company would desert and enter Switzerland, but we are told by our officers that we would be returned to Germany and then shot."

Menus For Two and Three Year Olds In Summer.

BEST INTERVALS FOR MEALS.

Expert Points About Regularity, Combinations of Foods and Balance of Growth Builders For the Small Members of Your Family.

After the first year a child should in most cases have three regular meals a day. Two very light lunches, one in the morning and one in the afternoon, may be permitted in certain cases. The hours would be breakfast at 6 a. m., lunch at 10 a. m., dinner at 12 m., lunch at 3 p. m. and supper at 6 p. m. Some children never need the light lunch between meals, and it should be abandoned if not required. When used the single small glass of milk or milk and a bit of cracker is all that the child requires. The hours for meals should be scrupulously observed, as it is of prime importance that the food be given at regular intervals and that the hours of rest between the taking of food be sufficiently long to give the stomach an opportunity to recuperate after its last period of work. Proper habits at the table are not merely a matter of courtesy. Food should be properly chewed, because it can only be properly digested in the normal length of time under such conditions.

Milk.—Remember that during this period milk is the chief article of a child's diet, and for this reason the mother should know her dairyman and be sure that she buys the best and cleanest milk available.

Cereals.—Cereals form another large portion of the diet. They must be very thoroughly cooked, the fireless cooker being the easiest and best means of preparing them satisfactorily. Oatmeal, the heaviest of the cereals, should not be used in large quantities. Farina, cornmeal and rice may all vary the diet. The dry cereals are often appetizing, but their food value is small except for the milk or cream which is used with them.

Meats.—Meat should be very sparingly used. A small scraped beef patty, using a tablespoonful of meat, a bit of mutton stew or white meat of chicken, if very finely divided may be used. Never should more than one feeding of meat a day be given, and eggs are to be substituted for meat with very little children.

Fruits.—Thoroughly stewed or chopped fruits are permissible. Baked apples, apple sauce, stewed prunes or dates may be given. Orange and lemon juice are both invaluable. Orange juice is used to advantage each morning. Bananas are prohibited.

Vegetables.—Spinach, lettuce, string beans, peas and carrots, if given in finely mashed or strained fashion, may be used; also macaroni and cauliflower. Be careful not to overcook cauliflower, as it may be made pasty and indigestible.

Breads.—Breads should never be fresh. Zwieback and toast are the forms in which they should be used. Crackers may be given in moderate quantities if they are plain kinds.

Desserts.—Junket, custard, chocolate blancmange and simple gelatin if homemade may be used as desserts at this age.

Remember quantities should be small, variety is very desirable and that the child's taste should be catered to to a certain degree. Children must be taught to eat the different kinds of food, and this is often difficult, but may frequently be accomplished if a special favorite is withheld until the one which is distasteful has been eaten.

AN UNUSUAL JULY SAYS WEATHER MAN

Cool, damp weather unlike the usual July conditions, still continues. The warmest day up to the present time, only showed 82 degrees in the shade. This was on June 13th, June had rain in 14 days, and July is following in much the same line. "The twelfth" last year was a "hot one," the thermometer going to 93 degrees.—W.P.

VESSEL SUNK ON WAY TO FRANCE

U. S. STEAMER HAD FOOD AND ORE CARGO WORTH THREE MILLION.

New York, July 12.The American steamship Kansan, carrying a crew of fifty men, has been sunk, presumably off the French coast, according to a cablegram received here by the France and Canada Steamship Co., which chartered the vessel. The fate of those on board is not known.

The vessel was valued at $3,000,000. She carried a cargo of flour and other foodstuffs, together with 4,000 tons of steel, which, valued in all at $2,000,000, was consigned to the French government.

The cablegram received here came from the company's agents in Paris. It did not say whether the ship was torpedoed or where the sinking, on July 9th, took place. The vessel was due at a French port on July 8. She left New York on June 28 commanded by Capt. E. A. Forsythe.

NO HOPE FOR PEACE UNTIL THE KAISER IS DETHRONED

Revolutionary Sentiment is Growing Daily in Germany---England it is Felt Will Not Talk Peace While Emperor Remains in Power---People Slowly Coming to Senses.

(By Stewart Lyon)

Canadian Headquarters in France, July 13.—The demand of the people of Prussia for the democratic franchise which will enable them to take an effective share in the Government of their country and the sympathetic movement of the South Germans come as no surprise to the officers of our intelligence department.

Letters recently found in captured positions and in the possession of prisoners have shown them that revolutionary sentiment is becoming daily more widespread. Discontent is not confined to the rank and file. A person attached in some capacity to the staff of a Prussian reserve division recently wrote: "There will probably be no peace till the same thing happens as happened in Russia. Otherwise England will not treat with our Emperor and we are no longer in a position to make her do so."

Calling Out Boys.

One of the most potent causes of dissentent seems to be calling to the colors of lads who will be eighteen years of age some time during the present year. Under normal conditions they would not be required to serve until they had reached twenty but ample evidence is now available to show that these lads have been called out and that only sickly and undeveloped cases have been exempted.

A Girl Protests.

A girl of Breslau writing toward the end of June says: "The 1899 class is being called up here now. Isn't it a perfect mockery to call up such children? We talked about other countires calling up lads of nineteen and what is Germany doing? Hardly have they left school than they are called to fight for the Fatherland. On Friday, June 15, a lot of 1899 class left here, Ernest Bolich's brother too. He is, Good Heavens, seventeen and a half years old and is becoming a soldier. Isn't the German state making itself ridiculous. It used to be said of another nation—Russia—that it allowed itself to be enslaved. Can German people say now that it is a free people? No, we are treated worse than slaves."

Millions Think the Same.

As this girl of Breslau writes millions of men and women in Germany think. Their discontent is destroying the fighting spirit of many men at the front. When lads of eighteen or less begin to come into line older men wonder what will happen when that mode of reinforcing German field armies is no longer available.

These extracts and opinions are but a few from a mass obtained. They help to an understanding of what is transpiring in Germany behind the fog of war.

PORT HOPE MADE HOLIDAY ON "GLORIOUS TWELFTH"

Lake Town Filled With Orangemen Yesterday Prominent Among Them Being Brethen From This City and District.

Peterborough's delegation of Orangemen who took part in the celebration at Port Hope yesterday returned to the city early last evening after having spent a most enjoyable day at the Lake Ontario town. While the weather here was rainy, down to the south the weather man was most considerate as the temperature could not have been better for the walk which was participated in by nearly every lodge between Belleville and Whitby, and from Lindsay, Omemee, Millbrook, Lakefield and Peterborough to the north.

A Procession of Autos.

There were more autos in the town than ever before in its history. Every road leading into the towns was black with cars bringing contingents from all the towns and villages where railway facilities were not as handy as might be for such an important occasion. Even from Peterborough and Lindsay a greater part of the members went down in cars arranged for weeks in advance. The Grand Trunk Railway carried about 500 from here and they also took as many from the other stopping places on the line. The Canadian Pacific and the C.N.R. also brought in quite a large number from places along their lines.

The anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne in 1917 will certainly be remembered by the residents of Port Hope. The huge crowd were out for a real good time and the orderly and sociable nature of every individual made things pleasant for everyone.

The walk of the visiting lodges accompanied by the different fife and drum bands was watched by hundreds of visitors as well as by the residents of the town. All the factories had given their employees a holiday and the glorious 12th was made a delightful civic event.

The Peterborough lodges arrived home in good time. Shortly after supper the long line of autos started to make an appearance at the end of Charlotte street and for about an hour the line continued passing, occupied by ladies, gentlemen and the junior members all wearing some token of their enjoyable visit to Port Hope.

On the Return Trip.

Several of the cars indulged in the pleasure of having a puncture on the road much to the consternation of the occupants who were enjoying "who will get their first" competition. One well known city man undertook to take a short cut with the intention of outdistancing his friends and was unfortunate in running on a cow that was lying in the roadway. The car was slightly damaged and the race lost. He is a sure believer in "slow but sure."

Upon the return of all the lodges to the local hall the fife and drum bands amused the night crowd with a few of their choicest selections.

Chief Justice Mathers of Winnipeg has ruled that a widow is not next of kin to her husband.

TO STOP TAKING LIQUOR ORDERS

DOMINION GOVERNMENT TO BRING DOWN TEMPERANCE LEGISLATION.

The Dominion Government is shortly to introduce a bill dealing with the solicitation of liquor orders in the prohibition provinces of the Dominion, according to a statement made by Mr. J. D. Flavelle, Chairman of the Ontario License Commission, who returned from Ottawa yesterday after a conference with the Ottawa Government.

Legal advice has has been secured from prominent lawyers, he added, showing that the board has power to adopt and enforce regulations which would give the board control over liquor advertising in newspapers within the province.

BILL MAY PASS FINALLY TODAY

AMENDMENT TO PUNISH LAW'S OPPONENTS CARRIED EASILY.

Ottawa, July 13. — The house spent another day in committee of the whole on the conscription bill and pased the Meighen amendment providing for the drastic enforcement of the law by the government with much less trouble than had been anticipated. Mr. Meighen himself retired, and the amendment was put through the house by the Minister of Justice with some assistance from the Prime Minister.

The "Glorious Twelfth" was apparently not forgotten, and Hon. Frank Oliver appealed to Parliament to preserve the liberties won at the battle of the Boyne, which he declared to be in jeopardy.

Judge Doherty and Mr. Lemieux also crossed swords when the latter sought to start a discussion on Sir Edward Carson and Home Rule.

Generally speaking, however, the best of good humor prevailed, and the bill should get out of committee to-day.

As soon as the house went into committee, Solicitor-General Meighen announced that clause three, providing for the order in which men shall be called out, would stand over for future consideration, and moved the adoption of clause four, which provides how the local tribunals shall be constituted.

Laurier Fears "Farce"

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said he had voted against the conscription bill and had little sympathy with its purpose, but he would not like to see it become a farce. The clause under consideration provided that the local tribunals should consist of two members, one a county court judge, or his appointee, and the other to be appointed by a board of selection, to be named by parliament. The government proposed to appoint a board of twenty-two members, four from Ontario, four from Quebec, and two from each of the other provnces, and it had been suggested that the government members in the house and senate name the other half. But this board would have no power to sit after parliament was prorogued or dissolved.

Mr. Meighen: "We can give it power."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier: "But how will you fill vacancies on the board? Suppose members die or resign, and parliament is not in session. Why not let the judges constitute or appoint all the local tribunals."

ONE THOUSAND MEN WANTED TO MAN BIG MYSTERY PLANT

Westinghouse People to Make Munitions by Secret Process.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PITTSBURG, July 13.—The Westinghouse people here are looking for one thousand men willing to sign an agreement to enter a new plant to be built for the manufacture of war munitions by a secret process, and remain imprisoned for ten months, all communication with the outside world to be cut off. There is an intimation that the proposed plant will turn out in large quantities one of Edison's latest inventions.

Only men of undoubted skill and loyalty will be accepted. Double pay and bonuses and every possible sort of entertainment and recreation will be given them in return for their voluntary isolation.

IS NOT SUITED TO MAKE PEACE

BUT GERMAN CHANCELLOR IS NOT WITHOUT SUPPORTERS.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Copenhagen, July 13.—The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger says the Austrian government has communicated to Berlin its belief that Bethmann-Hollweg's retirement would be a fatal mistake. On the other hand, the Catholic Centre party of the Reichstag believes Von Bethmann-Hollweg unsuited to conduct peace negotiations.

Very Rev. Dean C. B. Murray, of Brockville, has been made a Domestic Prelate of the Roman Curia, giving him the title of Monsignor.

KAISER ISSUES DECREE IN FAVOR OF EQUAL FRANCHISE

Ministry Ordered to Prepare Bill to This Effect and New Franchise is to be in Force in Time for Next Election---Why the Chancellor Resigned Office.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Berlin, Wednesday, via London, Friday.—Emperor William has directed the following decree to the President of the State Ministry: "Upon the report of my State Ministry, made to me in obedience to my decree of April 7th, I herewith decide to order a supplement to the same, that a draft of a bill dealing with the alteration of the electoral law for the House of Deputies, which is to be submitted to the Diet of the monarchy for decision, is to be drawn up on the basis of equal franchise, but it is to be submitted in any case early enough so that the next elections may take place according to the new franchise. I charge you to make all necessary arrangements for this purpose."

People Want the Truth.

The retirement of the German Chancellor at the suggestion of the Crown Prince is an event of the greatest significance. The German people will now demand the truth about the war, and it can no longer be kept from them that defeat is inevitable.

A telegram from Berlin says that it was the intervention of the Crown Prince that caused the Chancellor to tender his resignation.

Government to Quit, Too.

A rumor has reached Holland that the entire German government will resign with Imperial Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Main Committee of the Reichstag having refused to vote a war credit unless the government declares its policy regarding peace and reform, which the government has declined to do. An imperial proclamation is considered imminent.

A Hindrance to Peace.

The Vossische Zeitung and the Lokal Anzeiger, both of Berlin, agree that the Chancellor resigned owing to a letter from the Centre or Clerical party, declaring that the conclusion of peace would be rendered more difficult if he retained his office.

TWO SOLDIERS ARE HOME AGAIN

PTES. CALDER AND HOGG, OF OLD 93RD, HAVE DONE THEIR BIT.

Privates David S. Calder, of Warsaw, and Peter B. Hogg, of Ashburnham, two returned soldiers, arrived in the city last night from the Convalescent Home at Kingston, and were met at the station by Acting-Mayor Duncan, Ald. Dobbin, City Clerk S. R. Armstrong and a number of their friends and relatives. Both men were taken by auto to their destination.

Private Calder, whose mother lives in Warsaw, was taken to the home of his brother, Mr. Alex. Calder, 260 Concession Street, and will go out to his home this morning. Private Calder enlisted with the 93rd Battalion, and after being wounded in France was later on taken sick and invalided home.

Private Hogg was a member of the 93rd Battalion and was later transferred to the 52nd. He was wounded in France and invalided home. He was taken to his home on Roger Street.

HOW MANY MORE FROM CANADA

THE SOLDIERS FROM THIS COUNTRY POPULAR IN ENGLAND.

Cobourg, July 13.—A soldier writes from England:

"I often think of the poor fellows who went over with the first contingent, you might say, unarmed, green to all the German tricks, whereas now we are getting it down pat. I am certainly getting things pat into my head, which I will never forget. There is an Englishman's camp here, nearly all returned soldiers. Well, they are eager to see more Canadians coming. Some of them said to me: 'Are you a Canadian?' and wanted to know all about Canada, and how many more soldiers there were to come."

FISHING REPORTED GOOD AT SOUTH BEACH

A number of tourists who have been spending a few days at Young's Point and South Beach report that they had ideal fishing. The lunge are biting well, and several good catches delighted the returning fishermen.

AIRSHIPS ARE STILL ACTIVE

TWO GERMAN AVIATORS COME TO GRIEF IN CANADIAN LINES.

(By Stewart Lyon)

Canadian Headquarters in France, July 13.—There has been a marked increase again in aerial activity along the Canadian front. Enemy aviators have been coming over more frequently. One especially daring German swooped down on our posts in Avion and engaged its occupants with his machine gun. Two enemy planes were brought down within the lines yesterday.

One of the occupants of these machines was killed and the other severely wounded. They doubtless were the too enterprising enemy who had been using a machine gun on our men.

LIFE IN HUN PRISON CAMPS AS TOLD BY CORPORAL EDWARDS

American Paper, Circulated Here, Gives in Detail His Description---The Bill of Fare the Red Cross Seeks to Supplement.

It is a singular coincidence that an American weekly publication that has an extensive circulation in Peterborough prints in its current issue Corporal Edwards' account of the fourteen months which he spent as a prisoner in Germany. The coincidence arises from the fact that tomorrow is Tag Day to raise money for the relief of the very condition that Corporal Edwards describes so vividly. It will be recalled that Corporal Edwards spoke in the city a few weeks ago under the auspices of the Red Cross, and his address made a profound impression upon his hearers and incited the members of the society to renewed efforts on behalf of the unfortunates in captivity in Germany.

Corporal Edwards' account, as it appears in the American paper, taking up, as it does, several pages of space, gives a more detailed description of life in the prison camps than it was possible to crowd into a short address. The bill-of-fare he sets forth as follows:

"In the morning we each received three-quarters of a pint of acorn coffee, so called, horrible-tasting stuff; and a loaf of black-bread—half potatoes and half rye—weighing 250 grams, or a little more than half a pound, between five men. This allowed a piece about three by three or four inches to each man for the day's ration. The coffee consisted of acorns and four pounds of burned barley boiled in 100 gallons of water. There was no sugar or milk. My curiosity led me later to get this and other recipes from the fat French cook.

"For dinner we had shadow soup. The recipe in my diary reads: 'For 800 men, 200 gallons of water, one small bag of potatoes and a packet of herbs.' Meat soup was 200 gallons of water, ten pounds of meat, one small bag of potatoes and ten pounds of vegetables. This was the most nutritious of the lot. Unfortunately for us, the small portion of meat and most of the potatoes were given to the French, both because the cook and all his assistants were Frenchmen and because the authorities willed it so. For supper we were served with the water the soup was boiled in.

"Once in two months a ration of sausage was dished out. For breakfast once a week there was one pint of acorn coffee without sugar or milk and one and a half square inches of Limburger cheese. To quote from the diary: 'Before serving, open all windows and doors. Then send for the Russians to take it away.'

"The Germans discriminated against the British prisoners. When there was any disagreeable duty to perform the cry went out for 'der Englander.' The much-sought-for cookhouse jobs all went to the French, who waxed fat in consequence. No Britisher was ever allowed near the cookhouse."

It is to supplement his allowance of food, upon which it is impossible for any man to exist, that the Red Cross Society is asking for contributions tomorrow.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, JULY 13, 1917

TAG DAY TOMORROW.

The members of the local branch of the Red Cross, that organization which beyond all question stands in the forefront in patriotic war work, will hold a tag day tomorrow for a double purpose. The primary object is to raise money to take care of the prisoners of war in Germany, the local branch having pledged itself to provide for forty-two of those unfortunate enough to be in captivity. Our faithful Allies, the French, are in need of funds to help care for their own prisoners who suffer in common with the British, and any money raised tomorrow by the sale of tags will be divided between the two nationalities.

The amount aimed at is between $1200 and $1500. In a city of the size and wealth of Peterborough, this should be an easy task. All that is necessary is for the people to realize that the demand for such contributions is urgent. The prisoners are in actual want for food and clothing. There are 25,000 residents in this city, and all are prosperous as they have never been before. If the price of food is high, there is plenty for all, and money to buy it in the hands of every one. How vastly different is the situation here from that among the helpless prisoners in Germany, many of whom have died from sheer lack of sufficient sustenance to maintain life.

If every person in Peterborough would contribute even five cents to the cause tomorrow, the total would foot up to $1250, and there is not a man, woman or child in the city unable to donate that amount, and that, too, without the slightest sacrifice.

There are about 5,000 families in Peterborough. If each family contributed 25 cents, the same amount could be realized, and where is the family unequal to such a donation? The $1200 aimed at should at least be trebled, if all would give according to their means.

The public can rest assured that all money contributed will be wisely expended. The ladies interested in the work receive nothing for their services. There are no salaries to pay, and the expense of sending parcels to Germany has been reduced to the lowest possible point.

It has been established to the satisfaction of the public that the prisoners in Germany receive the parcels sent them. These parcels are all between them and starvation. The money you give to the Red Cross tomorrow may save a Peterborough soldier from a lingering death more painful than the end which comes to the man who dies from the shell wound in the trenches. A soldier who spent fourteen months in a German prison and finally escaped, recently told his story to a Peterborough audience, and his description of the harrowing conditions there should arouse the sympathy of every man, woman and child in the city.

Let the response to the appeal for funds be generous tomorrow. The soldiers risked their lives for you. What are you willing to do in return?

THE UNSKILLED SURGEON.

THE MEMBERS of the American Medical Association, at their annual convention, held recently in New York, devoted considerable time to discussing the question of unnecessary and unskilful operations. The result was the appointment of a committee of ten to study the problem and report next year on the way to solve it.

It was stated at the conveltnon that there are some men operating who are not qualified in any way for the work. The three essentials of safe surgery are honesty; good judgment and scientific training, and in these qualifications many of the so-called experts are sadly lacking. It was stated that once seemingly impossible and unapproachable problems are now open to successful solution by the skilful and conscientious surgeon. Therein lies the danger to the public; skilful surgeons may be conscientious, but conscientious surgeons may not be skilful. The law of the knife is an ignis fatuus to many would-be surgeons. It all looks so easy and simple on paper. Self-styled surgeons have been made too quickly in this country, and when time and experience have turned out a few good ones from this number it has been at a stupendous cost of health and life to the public.

The demand for the best surgery is still to be made by both physicians and laity. The future surgical specialist will not have a narrow medical education, professing or knowing nothing outside his special field, but he will be a doctor of broad surgical and medical knowledge.

In Canada, any doctor can open a drug store, but no druggist can practise medicine unless he is duly licensed to follow that profession. The doctors are constantly applying to the legislators for more enactments to prop up the monopoly which they now enjoy.

SHIFTING THE RESPONSIBILITY.

THE ARGUMENT of The Examiner that the Nationalistic teachings in Quebec are responsible for the failure of recruiting in that province does not hold together. It cannot hope in this way to clear Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his Quebec following of all responsibility. The Liberal leader has a clear majority of ten in his own province, and as such should have the influence required to offset the teachings of Bourassa and the other men of that ilk. But Sir Wilfrid Laurier has never effectively raised his voice in protest against such teachings. If he addressed a so-called recruiting meeting, he turned it into a gathering for campaign purposes and devoted his time to a criticism of the Government's handling of the war, a line of talk that could have only one result—the discouragement of enlistments. While Sir Robert Borden for the past six years has done his utmost to heal the breach between the two races, Sir Wilfrid Laurier has appeared to devote al his energies to make it wider than ever. Perhaps it is hardly fair to censure The Examiner for making political capital out of the war, seeing that it has been led astray by the pernicious example of the leader to whom it owes allegiance.

EDITOR'S MAIL

Editor Review: The members of the Fire Department are quite right in refusing to flush the city streets. They are not appointed to do this work, and like all the rest of us are intent upon doing as little as possible. The firemen are not only in the fashion but have the example of all civic employes to guide them.

Wit and Wisdom

The Dispute.

One of our best known astronomers was talking about the difficulties and intricacies that astronomy presents to the popular mind.

"For instance," he said, smiling, "there is the story of the meteorite that fell on an Essex farm a year ago. It was a valuable meteroite, and the landlord claimed it at once.

"'All minerals and metals on the land belong to me,' he said. 'That's in the lease.'

"But the tenant demurred. 'This meteroite,' he said, 'wasn't on the farm, you must remember, when the lease was drawn up.'

"This was certainly a poser; but the landlord was equal to the occasion, for he promptly retorted: 'Well, then, I claim it as flying game.'

"But the tenant was ready for him. 'It's got neither wings nor feathers,' he said. 'Therefore, as ground game, it is mine.'

"How long they would have continued their argument I cannot say, for at that moment a revenue officer came up and proceeded to take possession of the meteroite. 'Because,' said he, 'it is an article introduced into this country without payment of duty'."

No Treating.

"Going to have a donkey show this year?" asked the lounger of the London cockney.

"No blooming fear! 'Taint no good in these times, since the no treating act come in."

"Why, how's that? The no treating law doesn't affect donkeys, does it?"

"No, but it's kind of put a damper on everything like. It's spoilt the show, and the supper afterwards, and also the chairman's speech."

"Spoilt his speech?"

"Yus. It's like this, y'see. Our ol' chairman's always given the same speech every year for nigh on ten years, an' a very clever speech it was. An' now he won't be able to use it; an' 'e's gettin' old like an' can't work up another."

"Oh, really! And what was the speech?"

"Well, 'e uster git up an' say: 'Boys, it's bin a fine show, and I'm glad to see yer. Now order in whatever yer wants and 'ave 'em all wiv me!'"

His Solution.

Two women travelling in the same passenger coach could not agree about the window, and finally appealed to the brakeman.

"If that window remains open I shall catch my death of cold," objected one, to which the other promptly replied: "If it is closed, I shall smother to death."

The brakeman scratched his head in perplexity, until an old gentleman sitting near by proposed:

"Open the window until one freezes to death, and then close it until the other smothers to death, and then the rest of us can finish our journey in peace."

It All Depends.

"Is Mrs. Tracey in?" the caller asked.

The hired girl looked over with suspicion.

"Are you an agent for the rough-dry laundry?"

"No, indeed."

"You ain't introducing any foolish labor-saving patents for the kitchen, are you?"

"No."

"The reason I ask," the girl explained, "is that a lady I let in yesterday turned out to be selling electric wringers and I heard her tell Mrs. Tracey that half the society women of the Oranges had bought her machinery and let their help go. But if you're just a plain caller you can come in."

Practical Aunt.

"How's the young man, my dear? Show any signs of being a good provider?"

"Well, auntie, he's got a collection of silver golf cups to start housekeeping with."

The Huffy Colonel.

"May we have the pleasure of your company this evening, colonel?"

"Company, madam? I command a regiment."

How It Started.

"Who is that man who just spoke to you?"

"I don't know."

"But he spoke as though he knew you?"

"Perhaps he does. I may have met him somewhere, but I don't recall his name."

"That's very queer. Men don't usually speak to other men unless they know them. Perhaps he's someone you're ashamed to let me know you know."

"I tell you the man is a stranger to me. He may be a minister of the gospel for all I know."

"That isn't very likely. The few ministers you've ever met you could remember easily enough. It's more likely he's a gambler or a barkeeper."

"Great Scott, woman!"

"Oh, there's no use losing your temper. I'm just a poor fool of a woman, not supposed to know anything or have any sense at all, but just the same I'm thoroughly convinced that you're hiding something from me."

WHAT FREEDOM OF SPEECH MEANS

Solicitor-General Meighen has proposed a drastic amendment to the Concription Bill, which makes it a penitentiary offence for any one to influence any person or persons to resist the law, and forbids any judicial interference by the courts or judges with the due execution of the law.

They have such a law in the United States, where freedom of speech is supposed to prevail to the limit.

Anarchists of the aggressive type who are opposed to all law and government, as well as seditious and disloyal persons who have ignorantly or wilfully adopted an anarchistic attitude toward American law and the American Government at this critical time, have received a useful object lesson in the sentences which Judge Mayer of the Federal Court in New York has imposed on Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman.

These agitators had been tried and convicted by a jury of "conspiracy to obstruct the operation of the selective draft law." They conducted their own defence melodramatically, having deliberately discharged a capable lawyer who had been retained to protect heir legal rights. There was no question as to the facts, however, and the defendants did not pretend that they had acted in haste or in innocence. In these circumstances the court saw no reason for exercising leniency, and sentenced each of the defendants to the maximum penalty prescribed by the law — two years' imprisonment and a fine of $10,000.

There is no occasion for any sentimental sympathy for these convicted anarchists. The one issue they raised, the right of free speech, was false and insincere. That issue was not involved. It is within the bounds of law for a citizen to question the wisdom of the selective draft act and to urge its repeal, though agitation of this kind, especially when supported by members of congress, may be injurious and mischievous and may cause the patriotism of the agitator to be impugned in the forum of public opinion. The people should see to it that members of congress who pursue such a course are retired at the end of their present term and their places filled by men who will truly represent public opinion in relation to the war.

Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman went far beyond their constitutional rights. They urged resistanse to the selective draft law, seeking to make the law ineffective. In so doing they committed criminal acts as truly as if they had urged others to commit murder or robbery. They richly deserve the punishment which they have received. It is well that their trial was held promptly and that the sentences were pronounced and executed speedily. This is no time to trifle with offences such as theirs.

TORONTO STREET CAR MEN ACCEPT COMPANY'S OFFER

Strike Ended at Noon Today---Men Get Six Cents Instead of the Increase of 10 Cents Per Hour Asked for, Subject to Ruling of Conciliation Board.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, July 13. — The street car service has been resumed and is fully normal. The first cars appeared down town at 11:50 this morning and within twenty minutes cars on all the principal routes had crossed Yonge street. Men are working for the company, not, as suggested at midnight, might be the case, for the Ontario Railway Board, and conciliation will be attempted under the provisions of the Lemieux Act. The system was tied up for nearly twenty-four hours, the strike having started at 5 o'clock Wednesday morning.

Toronto, July 13.—After a fifty-five hour tie-up of Toronto's transportation system the strike of the street railway men has come to an end, and the wheels of the cars began to turn in operation for passengers at noon today. This was decided by the mass meeting of the men in the Star Theatre at 1.15 this morning, when they agreed to acept the offer of the railway company, which provided for an all-round increase of six cents per hour, retroactive from June 16, and subject to the decision of a conciliation board.

Should the conciliation board refuse to award the increase made by the company the men will again go on strike and submit the matter to an arbitration board, but there is little probability that this will occur and the leaders of the men are confident that a substantial increase on the figure temporarily accepted will be granted them.

Somewhat Surprising.

The result of the ballot was in doubt up to the last minute and came as somewhat of a surprise on account of the strong and determined opposition to anything less than an increase to 40 cents per hour by a large section of the men. But when the figures were announced, showing 1,038 to 551 in favor of the offer, there was a feeling of relief and satisfaction among the leaders and other public men who had been striving earnestly for the last two days to bring about a settlement. When the offer was first made the meeting emphatically and unhesitatingly rejected it, but after almost five hours of solid argument and a lucid statement of the situation and its effect, the feeling of the men took a dramatic turn, which ended in a complete overthrow of the opposition.

Men Who Made Peace.

Besides the representatives of the men, Mayor Church, Controller Cameron, Hon. T. W. McGarry, Hon. W. D. McPherson and Hon. G. Howard Ferguson laid the facts before the meeting and placed the onus for a continuance of the strike and inconvenience to the public squarely and solely upon the men's shoulders. Everything, they said, had been done in the matter and they had obtained the best offer that possibly could be obtained at present from the company.

CANADA'S WHITE ESKIMOS

Strange, Fierce Habits of Humorous Northern Dwellers Described

After passing [illegible] years in the Arctic regions, George H. Wilkins, an Australian who was a member of the Stefansson Expedition, arrived in England with a choice selection of stories about the so-called "Blonde Eskimos" with whom he lived a considerable time. "The Blonde Eskimos," he said, "are quite untouched by Western civilization, and their habits and customs are essentially primitive. They are not a long-lived race, and fifty years is perhaps the normal span. Human life is very little valued amongst them, and what civilized people class as murder is regarded as a more or less harmless eccentricity."

Visiting a camp where he had made friends with an Eskimo a few months before and not finding him, Mr. Wilkins inquired after his health. He was told that the man was dead, and the manner of his death was this. One day the Eskimo came across a member of the tribe fashioning a knife out of the native copper which is found in this region. He chaffed him, it appears, on his want of skill. "You don't know the first thing about making a knife," he said, in effect. The artificer said nothing until he had finished his work, when, remarking "I think it is a pretty good knife," he plunged it into the breast of the critic. The Eskimos have a keen sense of humor, and this incident was much appreciated.

There is a ceremony of marriage among these Eskimos, but apparently the number of a man's wives is limited only by his capacity to support them. The regular price for a wife is a rifle or 12 months' hard labor in the service of the prospective bride's family. It is only rarely that a rifle can be obtained from the Indians to the south, and the price paid for it, in skins, practically represents a year's activity in hunting. Some of the more opulent Eskimos possess three wives. One is chosen for her personal attractions, another for her prowess as a hunter and fisher, while the third does the housework.

By MAURICE DRAKE

[illegible] set the memory loose. "Haukadal!" he asked. They pointed to more bare lands to the left. "Sveinsdal?" To the right this time. Those very worthless lands his father had bought from Clement Harper three years before.

Laurence laughed, a short, mirthless laugh that stopped the woman's inquiries, rendered more incoherent through surprise. He would walk to this Uthlid rock, and sit there and [illegible] his hate to him—his hate of all the world. That would be a truly well-conceived artistic whole: that he, stupefied and wild-eyed with the dying effects of drink, should sit awaiting the burial of this boy who had learned naught but evil from him, amid the lands his suave thief of a father had used to ruin one of the least of all his victims. And as a contrast what could be more suitable than the future two months. In a week—a fortnight at most—he would be luxuriously speeding south to riot and revel and befoul himself yet more. Totally disregarding the onlookers, he turned again inland and set off quickly, staggering a little as he walked.

All round him the land was bare and rugged. Great barren rocks of lava broke the poor heather and grass in all directions. Here and there between the lava patches were tiny naked fields, and snow lay in every sheltered hollow. As the afternoon lengthened the wind grew cold, and he pulled his rough pilot coat closer around him, tying his kerchief more tightly round his neck.

Poor and jejune land; arid, useless lava, cold wind sweeping across the waste; wasted lives and broken, purposeless deaths—how well his father's means had matched his work.

"Must have had an artistic sense of completeness, too," Laurence said aloud, his teeth inclined to chatter with cold and misery, for all his attempt to sneer.

Uthlid rock proved to be a mass of volcanic tufa, perhaps forty feet high. On one side the lava had pressed upwards to half its height, as a wave dashes upwards against a wall, and there had cooled hard. On the opposite side the ground was clear for some small space where the boulder had parted the lava stream. Snow lay deep upon the higher side, but the strengthening sun had melted it in the hollow, and one or two tiny flowers already showed between the sparse grass blades.

Being sheltered from the wind by the boulder, and visited by the low sun the hollow showed promise of warmth. Laurence jumped down into it, sought a sunlit corner, and lighting a pipe sat and smoked, his knees beneath his chin, stupidly watching the western sky.

He tried to remember the details of the inquiry into his father's affairs, but nothing beyond the memory of the old sea captain's wretched face came to supplement the farm names that had set this train of thought in motion. Such a scared, unhappy face. As though it were now before him, he could see the plaintive working of the brow over the grey eyes with the pale, senile arc in them; the old man's stubby fingers—still the sailor's short, broad hand for all its latewon whiteness—plucking nervously at his beard or moustache, touching his lips, always fidgeting around the querulous mouth.

And then arose a memory of his own father's face. The square brows and jaw, the set of the firm, cleanshaven lips, made sharp contrast to the aged and harassed face of the man he had ruined. Just as the one had been frightened, moved by fleeting changes of emotion, troubled and unstable as the waters on which it had looked out for a lifetime, so had the other been strong and hard, and guarded in expression, as though [illegible] of these wild rocky lands now about him. An eddy of the cold wind found its way down into the hollow, and he shivered as it blew across his shoulders, chilling him through and through. It was as though some icy whisper of fate had come to remind him of his misery.

Never mind. A month hence he would be softly lapped about with luxury—drinking of sweet forbidden waters—eating prohibited fruit. Just a month or six weeks by the waters of Lethe—in Armida's garden. And the memory of this pitiless waste, this cold loneliness, should help sweeten his sojourn there. He would take with him some souvenir of these bitter hours—a little piece of the lava, or a flower. No, a flower would look like sickly sentiment. He would take a hard, cold-hearted pebble, and keep it by him. All through the coming month it should go wherever he went, reminding him of the life of misery from which he had come and to which he must inevitably return. It should serve as the death's head at his feast, telling him that time fled and that he must snatch at all the sweets swiftly—swiftly. Dum vivimus vivamus: memory of unhappy past, sure knowledge of unhappy future, should point the jest, sweeten the winecup, make fair faces fairer. "I wonder who'll ask me why I keep it by me?" he wondered idly. "I'll say it's a mascot."

He searched for such a pebble, but the lava lay in gigantic twisted masses, glassy hard, and the short poor grass covered any weatherworn debris between them. He searched round the base of the great rock. It seemed to have been pushed a little from its place by the lava stream, grinding its way heavily for perhaps a foot or more over the uneven ground, and scratched and ragged fragments of spalled rock lay beneath it. He kicked at one of them with his heavy sea boots, breaking off a small piece of dark greenish stone. It showed a lighter green on its broken side, with a hint of iridescence. "Some sort of jasper or agate," he said to himself, then put it into his pocket and walked back across the lonely plain to Langholt, reaching the farm just as sunset gave place to the long twilight of the northern latitudes.

A messenger had been sent to the sysselman, the woman told him. In all probability he would arrive before noon on the morrow, after which Clitheroe's burial could take place as soon as Laurence desired; so, promising to come ashore in the morning he again entered the boat and was rowed off to the Westray.

CHAPTER X.

After making the necessary declarations before the sysselman, Laurence paid the modest sum demanded by the folks of Langholt for funeral expenses and hastened back on board as soon as possible. The weather still kept fine, and the crew, though short handed, worked well, so that the Westray arrived in Leith in but two days over the week. In another two he had handed the trawler over to her new skipper, drawn the money lying to his credit at the office, locked his sea-kit in his room at Anstruther's and, without a word of farewell or explanation to any soul in Leith, was speeding south as fast as the Edinburgh-London express could carry him.

He rode third class. "No use wasting money yet," he told himself. "That'll begin later on—when I've got into the swim. I'll go to Pat Dwyer first. He'll know the ropes—if he hasn't got married in the last two years." Driving straight from King's Cross to Dwyer's office in Chancery Lane, he demanded to see him. A young solicitor is of all men most readily accessible in office hours, so, though Laurence's clothes were rough serge, his hat half a year old, and his manner to the clerks little short of insult, he yet was soon ushered into his old friend's private room.

Dwyer looked up from the table as he entered, polite inquiry in his uplifted eyebrows.

"And what can I have the pleasure of doing for you, sir?" he asked.

"You can try and polish your memory a bit, Pat Dwyer," Laurence answered. "And if you drop that de haut en bas manner you'll do no harm."

"Saints above! It's Laurie Averil!" He was out of his chair in a moment, and the men gripped hands. "And yet 'tisn't the old Laurence, somehow. What the blazes have you been doing with yourself, man? Navvying? Look at your hands—and you must be six inches bigger round the chest. What is it, my returned prodigal? The husks of the swine never did that for you. You've been living on stolen pork."

"I've been living amongst the swine all right," Laurence answered. "And a pig's life's no catch, Pat, my dear. And now I've—I've made my little pile, and I've come back to town to do some of it in, and you've got to help. . . . Curse your business. Your business first is to give me a line to your tailor and tell me where I'm to stay. I must lay low a couple of days until I get some decent duds, I suppose, and then, oh ho! we'll rogue and we'll range. Where do the boys foregather now, Pat? Are there many of 'em in town? And what's on at the theatres?"

"Oh, man alive, it's good to be back in dear, dirty London again. Do you know, I enjoyed coming here from King's Cross as much as if I was a country yokel riding in a real proper 'ansom for the first time in my life. I've been living in the bottomless pit, old man. Haven't spoken to an educated man or kissed a decently dressed woman for two years."

"Whe-whew!" Dwyer whistled through his teeth. "This is not the Laurence Averil we knew. 'Rogue and range—kissed a well-dressed woman'—what the deuce? You've been finishing your education, Master Laurie."

"Wer liebt nicht wein, weib und gesang." Laurence trolled the old students' song from the depths of his chest, to the great wonderment of the clerks in the adjoining office. "Perhaps I have altered—some. If you stick the most moral of bears on hot plates he'll learn to dance. You'll see whether I've learned, mighty soon. I'm somewhat out of practice, and clumsy, maybe; but my heart's in it, and I'll do my best, and you shall introduce me to partners, my worthy Master of Ceremonies. Now, what do we do to-night?"

Dwyer hesitated. "There's a decent show at the Alhambra. Manuela—she's the last new Spanish importation—takes Carmen in the ballet. They say it's all right. Will that do?"

"Oh, anything, man—anything'll do. Manuela, eh? What's become of Otero? She was the leading light of Spanish dancing when I went away. Not that I took much notice of 'em in those days. My education wasn't completed."

"Where are you staying?" Dwyer asked.

"Nowhere yet. I told you I wanted digs. My home is my hansom at present, and if you look out of the window you'll see all my Lares and Penates in one small kitbag on its roof. What's it to be—an hotel for a day or two?"

"Um. I don't know." He touched a bell. "Ask Mr. Tyrrell if he can spare me a moment."

Mr. Tyrrell, a thin, fair man, prematurely bald and with forensic side whiskers, was introduced to Laurence as "Our new partner. This is Mr. Averil, an old friend of mine. He wants rooms, Tyrrell. What about that furnished flat in New Cavendish Street that you were speaking of last week? How would that do, Laurence? Four rooms—a fiver a week or thereabouts. It's a bit hot, but I daresay we could get it for less if you take it for the expiration of the lease."

"I only want it for a time," Laurence explained. "I'll be off to Paris next week, likely enough. Should like a look at Monte Carlo before the season's done, too. Let's go see the place, and then if it suits, and the sticks and fittings are decent, I'll take it for a month, anyway. Come round and show it to me now. Where can I get a key?"

"Oh, at the caretaker's, for certain. But I can't come now. Can you amuse yourself for an hour? Yes? Then clear out and come back at half-past four, and I'm your man."

Laurence paid his cabman, sent his bag upstairs by a clerk, and turned down Chancery Lane towards the Strand and Fleet Street.

The roaring torrents of life flowing east and west surged in his ears like the sound of a sea, and he stood by the Law Courts in a daze of happiness. This was coming back to life, in all good earnest. His face radiant with the joy of it all, he sauntered down the Strand, his feet light and springy on the good paving under him, as full of idle delight as a holidaying schoolboy. This was resurrection—nothing less. He could have sung aloud for sheer blitheness of heart. This was worth waiting two years for. Let the dead past bury its dead—the future take care of itself. Here was the glorious present to be lived. Carpe Diem should be his motto.

He climbed on a westward bound 'bus and went as far as Piccadilly Circus, rejoicing in the afternoon sunlight and crowds every inch of the way. To think he could ever have trodden these streets unmoved!—that exile should be needed before he could perceive their beauties, or enjoy immersion in the great turmoil, in this full tide of life. Here things moved—here things were done. "Man is naturally gregarious," he said aloud to himself. "It's only to have tasted the loneliness of those cursed northern waters to be sure of that."

The 'bus driver overheard his muttering. He turned and looked up at him.

"What say?" he asked.

"I said it was good to get back to life again," Laurence told him.

"Y' don't look as if you'd been dead—particler," the man said, glancing at his bronzed skin and brown beard.

"I have, then; worse than dead for two years," Laurence replied.

The man, observing his work-worn hands, merely nodded, forming his own conclusions.

[illegible] that cove," he remarked to the conductor after Laurence had left the 'bus. "Been worse 'n dead for two years, he said. More likely three—he never got that color and them 'ands through indoor labor. Quarryin', likely—Portland or Princetown, I expect. Spoke like a toff, too. I lay 'e 'as a time for the next week or two, if 'e's got the brass." In which sentiment Laurence, had he heard it, would have heartily concurred.

He returned to Dwyer & Tyrrell's offices just before five, to find Dwyer waiting for him. A hansom was called, and the two men set off for New Cavendish Street together.

"And now," Dwyer said, "perhaps you'll tell me where you've been, and what you've done, and what you're going to do next?"

Laurence leaned over his knees, gazing straight before him over the horse's back.

"I'll tell you as much as I please. I've had a rough trip—a ghastly rough trip, Pat. I've made money, and I've come back here to spend it. I want amusement. I want dinners and suppers; I want theatres and music and evil company of the washed and scented and bedecked pattern. I remember you for a reprobate—how often have I called you a fool for it, eh?—and I want you to introduce me to a few people who'll help me play the fool myself. Is that plain?"

"M—yes. Somewhat. You certainly have altered. To come to town with the deliberate intent of a spree is distinctly a rural idea. Most of us find enough bother in slipping from virtue occasionally without going to seek trouble from malice prepense. But you were always the methodical type of brute that makes up his mind what he'll do before he starts about it. I'm not so sure that Sir Pandarus of Troy is my role, exactly, all the same."

"Look here—" Laurence put a hand on his wrist—"if you're going to kick—kick, and have done with it. I ask you, as a personal favor, to introduce me to half a dozen of your friends. You used to stage-door dangle at one time. Let me feed and fondle one or two of the breed of hogs that spend their lives at it, and your duty's done, and you can get back to the office and virtue, if you like. Refuse, if you will." His eyebrows lowered, his jaw projecting in dull animal obstinacy. "It won't affect matters in the least degree. I've been kicked about in intense misery for two years, old gentleman. I've lived like a hog and with worse than hogs. I've been crowded to the very edge of murder. I've had to behave like Satan himself to get an unlovely living. I've never had a man care whether I lived or died, except perhaps one poor fool, and I saw him torn nearly in two before my eyes only about a fortnight ago. My hand's against every man, and every man's hand's religiously against me. Never was such an Ishmael. I care nothing for anybody on the earth except myself—and, with or without your help, I'm going to have the run of my teeth for a bit, before I settle down to anything.

"I've got money, thank Heaven—no, thanks to myself, I mean. I got it by the sweat of my brow and at the risk of my life, and I'll spend it on myself as I jolly well please. I wouldn't give a penny, a farthing of it, to save injured innocence from starvation and the street, I tell you straight."

"Who's asking you?"

"Nobody. I know that. But let me continue to expound. Do you know—? I told you I hadn't spoken to an educated man for two years. Let me make the most of it.

"I shall spend it on myself solely and simply in gratifying my animal appetites. I shall spend much of it in driving about in cabs. I begin to understand the instinct that sends Jack ashore in large parties about town in hired growlers. He waves flags also—and gets drunk. I haven't quite assimilated the flag-waving instinct yet; but as to getting drunk—cheer oh, Pat! You wait and see. Meanwhile, this is good enough to go on with. The tinkle of that horse bell, the clop, clop of his hoofs on decently laid road are music, man—sublime music. Is this the flat?"

"Yes. Come and have a look at it, and stop your indecent protestations, your proclaiming aloud of evil intents. I'll introduce you to one or two of the 'breed of hogs' you speak so tenderly of, and you must do the rest yourself. You're pretty beastly in your open statements, and when I remember you two years ago, it strikes me that you've had an interesting time, if a rough one. However, that's your affair, and if you don't choose to speak of it, you can do the other thing. How do you like the crib?"

"Tain't dear at a fiver a week, is it?" Laurence asked. The place was on the second floor, well lighted, well furnished, and well kept. "Whose is it?"

"Forget his name. Tyrrell knows him. Some sort of a writer, I fancy—essays and reviews. He's been ordered south for his health—consumptive tendency, I believe. Does that matter?"

"Lavvie a bit. It's an additional recommendation. Who'll do for me?"

The hall porter's wife had done the little housekeeping the late occupant required, they were informed. "Very late hours 'e kep, gentlemen," that functionary thought fit to add. "A very quiet, nice gentleman 'e was, though, an' mostly 'e dined out at restaurants and such."

"Ah. So shall I. I shall also keep late hours, but as to being nice or quiet—well, that you'll find out later. Now we'll go do shopping, Pat. Can I rake together a suit of dress duds at a minute's notice like this? I suppose it can be managed. And I must get a piano in, too. The consumptive predecessor wasn't musical, evidently."

The hall porter coughed behind his hand, viewing the new tenant of the rooms with subdued interest from the corner of his eye.

"You'll excuse me, gentlemen—you spoke of late hours, sir. Per'aps I ought to say that piano-playing and music are gen'rally discontinued in the Mansions at eleven p.m."

"Are they? you be sugared! Then in future they won't be. See? If other tenants object, you can send in their complaints in due course. I'm not taking the place with a view to going back to school."

"Don't you be quite too frabjous an ass," Dwyer requested when they had re-entered the cab and were being driven back to Oxford Street. "Just you remember, my sweet, irrepressible Ishmael, that I'm a respectable, quiet young solicitor, and that Tyrrell's my partner and a good fellow; also that the owner of those sticks is a pal of his. If you're going to play the fool and break up the 'appy 'ome in the exuberance of your spirits, you will make things unpleasant for me.

"More—you've been plain with me to the verge of indecency in announcing your intentions—in which, to tell the truth, I'm not particularly interested. On other points you preserve a discreet silence. Now, see here. You were broke when you went away. You come back inside of two years with every appearance of having performed manual labor in the open air; and if I can judge from your hands and eyes, and that little slip just now about Jack ashore, I should guess you've been at sea. Manual labor at sea is not highly paid—no recent successful piracies have been reported, as far as I know—and yet you talk of having made a pile in that short time.

"I don't want to ask personal or impertinent questions, but as you, in a manner of speaking, ask me to supply you with credentials—— It's purely a matter of business, you understand. If you wanted to borrow money, you know where to come for it. I told you that two years ago, didn't I? But this is business. Play the fool if you like, and welcome, but kindly oblige me by pulling out the soft stop occasionally, and let me know beforehand how I stand."

Laurence looked round at him, a queerly curious expression in his puckered eyelids.

"That's all right. I'll pay in a hundred to your business account as soon as the bank's open to-morrow, and you can act for me with your partner's pal—pay the rent for a month in advance. Will that do—er—for a start? As for playing the fool—for all my talk and my hands and my manners, I haven't forgotten the difference between wardroom and fo'castle drunk. What I said to the porter? Oh yes! Only the fool annoyed me with his clack, and I thought he might as well understand from the first that I propose to keep my own hours, and do as I please."

"I fancy you said something to the same effect before," Dwyer said. "Now we'll get about your shopping—unless you'd like to lead off by smashing a few plate-glass windows as a declaration that you fear no foe in shining armor—or blue cloth. Here's your piano shop, for a start."

And the London of a June evening, beautiful as a jewelled woman in a shaded light, took Laurence to its heart and made him divinely happy. All the world went to pleasure or to dine, and never a lighted theatre but spoke to him of welcome, never a face that glanced on him from beneath the hood of a passing hansom but seemed to smile in greeting, and the soft night air on his face was like a caress. Wherever they stopped obsequious tradesmen took his orders, backed by Dwyer's references, unquestioningly and with alacrity, promising delivery that same evening of the more especially needed of his purchases. Dress clothes were not immediately procurable, but Dwyer's tailor, anxious to please, was able to find a suit which, together with others destined for a less favored customer, he declared would fit Laurence well, and consented to make a few slight alterations and deliver the whole order of four suits to him on the morrow. To bootmakers they went, to wine merchants and glovers, hatters and tobacconists, Laurence spending money joyously and recklessly right and left, and then to dine. Because they were not arrayed in evening wear they partook of the meal in a restaurant not usually frequented by Dwyer's more intimate acquaintance, but that all should be in accordance with his preconceived ideas, Laurence stipulated for music; and when cigars and coffee were served, he felt the jagged fragment of rock in his pocket almost with disbelief of the past. Clitheroe's dying face—he tried to recall it, and the bitter wastes beneath which that face now lay. They must be a dream—and yet, if they had never been, could life be so sweet as this? The contrast was needed, else such happiness were impossible.

After dinner he demanded another ride, and a hansom took them to Hyde Park Corner and back. "I want to see the long line of cab lamps outside the clubs, Pat," Laurence pleaded. "Man, I've dreamed of 'em."

At the Alhambra he drank freely, yet with care. "Get drunk? No fear. I wouldn't lose a minute—not a second of it." The moving rainbow of the ballet, the soul-maddening whine of stringed instruments, intoxicated him far more than anything he had to drink. "To shut eyes and just listen is the seventh heaven, Pat. And to open them and see that"—he nodded towards the radiantly appointed beauty of the crowded stage, advancing, retreating, wreathing and winding and grouping ever into new color schemes, revealing ever new beauties of face and form. "Man alive, it's gilding the lily. There, that's a mixed metaphor, but let it stand. It's none so bad."

Amid the trailing robes of the lounge he held talk, much to Dwyer's disgust, with a painted native of the Faroes. "You go to the deuce," he said, when his companion remonstrated. "My taste's all right. I only want to speak to the woman and stand her a couple of drinks. I've been where she comes from. She's part of the whole joyous scheme of this heaven of a day. She provides the chiaroscuro—the deep splash of shadow in the foreground that brightens all the coloring and rounds the forms. While we talk, you go and find a couple of men to come home and have supper at the digs. You'll find me here when you come back."

He subsided into a seat and talked Danish to the woman. When Dwyer came back her head was bent and her lips shaking.

"Give her money? Not likely. She's had two whiskies and sodas out of me, and that's all I owed her," he said afterwards in answer to inquiry. "She looked a peg low, did she? Likely enough. We talked of [illegible] her home. I suppose she was happy there, once upon a time. When I was there I was in direst misery, my friend, and I wanted her clucking Danish to remind me of the difference between then and now. See?"

"I see you're a most infernal brute," Dwyer said wrathfully. "Why couldn't you leave the poor beast alone. She never harmed you."

"Nor I her. I've given her two drinks—I call that charity. You said she was a peg low yourself. Here's the flat. Oh joy! Joy as of harvest!"

He hummed a few bars of dance music from a Gilbert and Sullivan opera, shuffling his feet on the pavement to beat time, and breaking into the words at the finish. "'Of course it does; of course it does. It signifies indifference.' Come up, you men. It'll be a scratch supper if there's anything at all, but there's drinks—heaps. Pat here vouches for 'em. I got 'em from his man. And when we've had tucker you shall teach me this new fancy whist. Bridge, is it? Come up."

Mixed cold foods made a supper of sorts, and when at half-past one Laurence settled down, a pile of loose change at his elbow, to be instructed in the mysteries of bridge, he felt his cup of happiness was nearly full.

CHAPTER XI.

A bright noon three weeks later found Laurence in the demi-toilette of shirt-sleeves before his open window, gazing idly across the street at the houses opposite and the passers-by upon the sunny pavement before them. For a while he stared, heavy-eyed, seeing nothing, then, turning to the empty room, stretched himself and yawned. "Heigh-ho!" he said dully. "To think one could kick the bottom out of things in less than a month! I half wish I was at sea again."

Now there is an unwritten law that howsoever man obeys the inexorable edict, "Work to eat," his material and the tools of his calling shall surely react upon him, marking on him in some ineffaceable way the sign-manual of his craft. Deeper than gnarled hands and furrowed brow the traces of his labor must inevitably go; and the man's outlook on life and religion, his relations towards his fellows—nay, his very love itself—are determined in no small degree by the toil in which he labors for his bread.

LABOR DEPARTMENT ASKED TO CONCILIATE

The Grand Trunk Railway carmen, who are seeking improved conditions and an increase in wages, and who have been refused by the company, have asked the Labor Department at Ottawa for a board of conciliation to take up the matter. These men want the same conditions granted the men employed by the Canadian Pacific. The C.P.R. and C.N.R. men receive 32½ cents an hour, while the G.T.R. only pays 17 to 23 cents an hour.

PREFERS PRISON TERM.

Mrs. Hinkley Fails to Return to Her Husband.

Mrs. Edith Hinkley, who was given the option of going to her husband at Detroit or spending six months in the Mercer Reformatory, by Police Magistrate Dumble last week, was still around town yesterday, and this morning the court issued the necessary papers and Edith is now in jail awaiting to be transferred to the prison.

Mrs. Hinkley was arrested as the keeper of a disorderly house on George street, and her two daughters who were also arrested at that time were sent to the Mercer for one year.

COMPLAIN OF FOOTBRIDGE.

Reason Why Railing on That Structure Is Not Put Up.

Several citizens have complained to The Review that the railing has not been completed on the C. P. R. footbridge, and that there is danger of pedestrians falling into the water while making the crossing some dark night. The wooden railing is up at both ends where there is no danger. The open space is directly over the river, where, if a person should happen to fall, the result would be serious.

It may be said in explanation that an iron railing will be put up on the section now uncompleted. The local firm that has the contract for this work is unable to get the material required, and has been granted a fortnight's grace by Council. The bridge will in a short time be finished and will be perfectly safe for traffic.

Any person using the bridge before it is completed is trespassing, as signs at either end of the structure warn them that it is not yet a thoroughfare.

Capt. Campbell is one of Canada's best known athletes, and has made good decisively in the big game in France. He is a staff officer on the front line.

OLD DISPUTE AT LAST SETTLED

DEPARTMENT OF WORKS WILL CARE FOR THE CANAL WHARVES.

Ottawa, July 13.—The long standing dispute between the Department of Public Works and the Department of Railways and Canals, as to which Department is responsible for the up-keep, etc., of the various wharves along the T. V. Canal in the west riding of Peterborough and lying chiefly from Peterborough city to Rice Lake along the west shore, has at length been decided. Henceforth, the Department of Public Works, which built these wharves, will look after and maintain them.

Mr. Burnham, M.P., has been working on this dispute for three years and the climax was reached when the member brought the matter up in the House of Commons and was told by the Minister of Railways and Canals that nobody owned the wharves as they were built on private property. Such an unexpected outcome as that necessitated the laying of the whole history of the dispute, and all the correspondence, before the Prime Minister.

Hereafter, those who have made a loafing place without let or hinderance of these conveniences for the farming public, will have to keep "off the grass" and it will result in their being kept in future in repair and will provide a saving of public money.

"HUSH BOAT" MYSTERY

One Of Craft Carried Balfour To America

London, July 13.—With regard to the mystery that some writers have called the "hush boats," and the part they are playing in the war, The Daily Chronicle quotes a correspondent as follows:—

"It was a "hush boat" that carried Balfour across the Atlantic. She is the pride of the Navy, the greatest ship of the fleet, and out and home she did the trip in something under six days—how much I won't say."

CAPTAIN KIDD APPOINTED CASUALTY OFFICER

Popular Officer Receives Another Mark Of Recognition

The announcement that a casualty officer would be appointed in this district was made several weeks ago. Capt. T. A. Kidd A.D.C. to General Hemming who has been appointed casualty officer was recommended for the position some time ago, and the authorization of his appointment has just been received. Capt. Kidd is a veteran of the present war, having gone over with the 2nd Battalion, as did also Major Birdsall, officer commanding the M. H. C. C. Capt. Kidd was in Sault Ste. Marie when the war broke out, and qualifying as a lieutenant, was taken on the strength of the 2nd Battalion at Valcartier on September 22, 1914. He was through the most of the fighting of the early days of the war, and returning was appointed A.D.C. to General Hemming, which post he filled in a splendid and most efficient manner.

HARDWARE HIGHER AND HARD TO GET

The past week has witnessed another heavy quota of changes in hardware lines, all of which have been in an upward direction. Wrought pipe is one of the important lines that has been increased in price. Manufacturers are experiencing difficulty in getting materials for this line of goods. Iron washers have also been moved to higher levels. Black sheets are in firm position and dealers intimate there is a strong probability of some gauges being increased in price in the near future. The above changes are sufficient to indicate the trend in the steal and iron products.

New lists and discounts have been issued on handles of all kinds, together with neckyokes, whiffletrees and doubletrees. In some instances the advances are slight, while in other cases the advances are heavier. This is the first change to take place in handles for some time past. A new list has been issued on shoe findings which provides for a substantial increase. Cooper's nails and barrel nails have also been advanced. Padlocks, night latches, door closers and trunk locks are among the lines that have been changed in an upward direction. Picks, mattocks, grub hoes and crowbars have all been altered upward. Other lines in which higher prices have been recorded include hat and coat hooks, batteries, cow bells, butter ladles, butter bowls, rolling pins, potato mashers, butter spades, food choppers, horse pokes, levels, screw-drivers, bevels, dog chains, tie-out chains, auger bits, car bits.

Linseed is in firmer market, due to a considerable advance in the price of flaxseed. Turpentine held in steady position. An advance has been recorded in fancy glass lines. Business in hardware lines has been good during the week.—"Hardware and Metal."

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

Sleepy Time Story About a Fairy Queen of Long Ago.

LIVED IN A MAGIC CASTLE.

Method by Which She Tested the Character of Children—Modest and Polite Were Rewarded and the Greedy Punished.

As this is the season of flowers, said Uncle Ben to Little Ned and Polly Ann, I will tell you about the—

PRIMROSE QUEEN.

Across the ocean, in Europe, primroses grow wild, and there are many pretty stories told about them. The one which I shall tell you is a great favorite with the little folks of central Europe, to whom the primrose is known as the key flower.

The story goes that in a forest—no one seems to know just which forest—in a golden castle lives a wonderful fairy queen named Bertha.

No one has ever seen it, though many little ones have started out hand in hand searching through field and woodland. Over his arm each child may carry a basket, and this is to bring home the treasure which is for all who are guests in the magic castle.

Up and down, over hills and valleys, they wander, and whenever they meet any one the little ones stand and wait to see if they are spoken to, for Queen Bertha is said to go wandering about, trying now this child and now that one, to find out who is good enough to be her guest. Now she asks this little favor; now she asks that one. It may be that she is hungry and asks to share the children's food, or she may carry a heavy basket and ask the children to help her.

And if she is really Queen Bertha by and by she will say very suddenly, "Do you like primroses?"

The little one must answer very politely. "Yes, ma'am; we like primroses very much."

Then the queen smiles and, casting off the disguise she may be wearing, stands dressed in all the lovely fine clothes which fairy queens ought to wear.

"Here is the key of my castle," she says, and hands them a key. "You will find it just over there. Go in and stay as long as you like. When you leave you may take a pot of primroses with you. When you get home dig up the primroses and you will find a gift at their roots."

When the little ones reach the castle they are feasted and waited on by the fairies.

If they are greedy and take more than one pot of the primroses the flowers get heavier and heavier as they carry them home. Then when they dig up the plants, expecting to get more gifts than one, they find only lumps of lead there.

If they have been polite and taken only the single pot which the queen has told them they may have they find the pot crammed and running over with gold and precious gems, enough to make them and their parents wealthy for life.

Quick Sight.

Take two boards about a foot square; divide each into twenty-five squares; get ten nuts and ten pebbles. Give to each of two players one board, five nuts and five pebbles. The first places these on the board in any pattern he fancies and then shows the board to the other for just five seconds. The second, from memory, attempts to duplicate his opponent's pattern on his own board. He counts one for each nut or pebble which was placed right and takes off one for each that was wrong. The players take turn and turn about.

A Couple of Kittens.

It is customary to speak of the lion's cubs when perhaps it would be more proper to speak of them as kittens, because they are young members of the cat family. These interesting young kitties were snapped at the New York zoo by an enterprising camera man.

Bad Shot.

Mr. Bacon — This paper says that only 88 per cent of the real efficiency of a ton of coal is utilized. The remainder is wasted.

Mrs. Bacon — Well, I guess, John, that you did throw at least 12 per cent of that last ton out of the window at the cats.—Yonkers Statesman.

Her Habit.

"What a traveler the young wife of old Moneybags has developed into! She is always crossing or recrossing the ocean. She certainly keeps the transatlantic line busy."

"She's used to keeping the line busy You know, she was formerly a telephone girl."—Baltimore American.

A VILLAGE TALE.

Miss Elviro Eunice Parker,
  Single lady—by desire—
Years ago was quite determined
  What she'd do in case of fire.
Thus she reasoned: "I would dress me
  Wholly without perturbation,
Gather up my chief belongings,
  See to Tabitha's salvation,
From its hook take down the parrot,
  Cheery partner of my labors;
Then I'd raise my chamber window
  And alarm the sleeping neighbors."

Well, one night a fire started
  As Miss Parker slept. The smoke her Chamber filled, and presently the Suffocating smell awoke her.
Did she do as she had reasoned?
  No; she quite forgot her scheming,
And with shrieks she roused the neighbors
  From the sweetest of their dreaming.
She threw vases from the window.
  Tabitha her own salvation
Had to seek out, while the parrot
  Used a word that ends with -ation.
When the neighbors came they found a
  White robed figure wildly screaming.
All the fire was soon extinguished,
  But she kept on loudly calling:
"Fire! Fire! Fire! Fire!"
  In a manner most appalling.
And the neighbors, having stopped her,
  When they finally departed
Left Miss Parker, single lady,
  In the ruins broken hearted.
—Somerville Journal.

"You may talk of gin and beer,
But you won't get any here,"
Said some senators in Washington one day.
"While the war is on you'll get Naught but water, you can bet."
And the prohibitionists they yelled "Hooray!"

"Nothing doing!" said the rest.
"Every man must know what's best,
Whether he should drink or leave the stuff alone."
So they're arguing it still,
And perhaps they always will—
Some for wet, and some for dry as any bone.

Connie Mack is getting to be a great little artillery general—artillery of the diamond, of course. He is giving particular attention to the training of his heavy guns, in the persons of Russell Johnson, Wis Noyes and Harry Siebold.

Fritz Maisel still continues to hit when the hitting counts most. There is hardly a game in which his stick work doesn't figure prominently in the scoring. And Fritz is very popular with the fans, despite the fact that his name is Fritz.

Schupp's curve ball has got 'em worried. He has done more damage to batting averages with that delivery than perhaps any other man in the big leagues. The ball isn't accidental, either, for Schupp has studied it and controls it perfectly.

George Stallings has added several gray hairs to his hirsute adornment since Hank Gowdy decided to get behind the bat for Uncle Sam. Stallings can't find anybody to equal Gowdy, but he will simply have to get someone to help out Tragressor.

Grouchy Gus Says:

"The reason that a great many men prefer the high life to the quiet life is that if they were very good they'd be very lonesome."

There once was a fellow named Louis
Whose favorite dish was chop suey;
His wife named Louise
Didn't like food Chinese.
And said "That stuff is too gooey."

This day is the anniversary of the birth of "Jiggs" Donohue, probably the greatest first-baseman that ever lived. He was born in 1879. He reached the highest point in his career playing with the Chicago American League team in the world's series games of 1906, against the Chicago Nationals. Comiskey is the man who considered Donohue the world's greatest first-baseman. His chief claim to distinction was his remarkable fielding ability. His first big league engagement was under Connie Mack in Milwaukee, during the infancy of the American League. In 1906 he accepted 1908 chances at first base, a record which has never been equaled. "Jiggs" also held the record for the fewest number of chances in a game, having only one. It was during a game in New York that he made one assist. It had never been known in baseball before where a first-baseman was not given a chance to make at least one put-out. "Jiggs" died several years ago in an insane asylum near Columbus, Ohio.

A Great Batsman.

One of the greatest batsmen that ever lived was Ed Delahanty, who played with the Philadelphia Nationals and succeeded Willie Keeler as leading batsman in 1899. He was of powerful build and a tremendous hitter. Delahanty is credited with the greatest batting feat on record, that of making four home runs in one game. It happened in 1896 during one of the games with Chicago. The first time up Ed cracked the ball over the right-field fence for a home run. The second time he drove a liner over short to Dahlen. The ball was so fast that it tore through Dahlen's grip and went into left-field, while Delahanty went all the way to third base. The next time up he knocked the ball over the right-field fence again and made the complete circuit. The fourth time up Ed walloped the ball to the club house back of center-field, making a third home run. When he came to bat in the ninth inning the fielders got back as far as they could. They were all hugging the fences; but this time Ed cracked the ball over center-field, over the fence, on to the club house. Ed scored his fourth home run. Final summing up: Five times at bat; four home runs and one three-bagger. His entire team got only three other hits besides his own.

Pugilistic Annals.

1901 — Eddie Hanlon defeated Frankie Neil in four rounds at San Francisco.

1906—Jack Johnson knocked out Morris Harris in one round at Philadelphia.

1909—Ad Wolgast and Battling Nelson fought a ten-round no-decision bout in Los Angeles.

1909—Sam Langford outpointed Klondyke in six rounds at Pittsburg.

1911—Porky Flynn, American, defeated Jewey Smith, English, in ten rounds at New York.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Preventing Colds.

Colds frequently result where there is a deformed or diseased nose or tonsil or where there are adenoids. Frequently the bacteria get a better or easier hold there than in the case of people with good noses and throats. Living and sleeping in the fresh air increase one's resistance against colds. Taking a cold sponge bath about the neck, arms and shoulders each morning also helps immensely. Constipation is very frequently an indirect cause of colds and should be strenuously guarded against. Overeating, overheating, especially dry steam or stove heat in winter, and underexercising are potent causes of colds. Last of all, one should avoid close association with other people having colds, coughs or grip or those who cough or sneeze without holding handkerchiefs before their faces. Keep a good bunch of fresh air between yourself and the cold victim, and you will be much safer.

PLAYED THEM BOTH WAYS.

Magical Qualities of the Pyrenees Mineral Springs.

The French comedian Perlet was extraordinarily thin. A physician recommended him to try some bath in the Pyrenees, so he betook himself to the mineral springs, where he bathed unremittingly, but all in vain; he did not increase in size. "Patience," urged the doctor. "There is nothing like our baths for making people fat."

One day while Perlet was waiting philosophically in his bath for an embonpoint which never came he heard a conversation in the next room, from which his own was divided by only a thin partition and which was occupied by an enormous woman, fat as the Hottentot Venus.

"Doctor," said she, "I am getting tired of this." "Why?" asked the Aesculapius. "I have been here two months." "Well?" "Well, I am as enormous as I was when I came." "A little patience, madame," urged the doctor. "There is nothing like our baths for making people thin."

Perlet, hearing these words, sprang out of his bath, dressed, rushed home to his hotel, ordered his bill and left for Paris by the next train.

Woman's Back Hair.

I recollect the Psyche knot.
Of devotees it had no lack.
It used to be employed a lot
A few years back.

But now, as through the town you hike,
You see a new twist on the job,
And some declare it looks just like
An old doorknob.

Classifying Him.

Modern Magic.

There was a little girl
Who had a little curl
That hung right down on her shoulder.
That little curl was brown,
Which made its owner frown;
'Twas gold ere she grew much older.

Too Thin an Excuse.

When Shimmerpate arrived home an hour later than usual he was nibbling a clove.

"I stopped in a concert hall for a few moments," he observed. "The music was intoxicating."

"That's right!" exclaimed his better half. "Blame it on the music."

A Unites States flag bordered with white was ordered hauled down from over the Clear Lake camp of Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, a pacifist member of the Ford Peace expedition.

It is a woman's privilege to wear short-sleeved dresses if she wants to. The constitution of the United States says that the right to bear arms shall not be infringed.

On their side, the Government's representatives assured the steel men that reasonable profits would be included in the price fixed, and that provision also would be made to care for the expansion of the industry to meet new demands.

WEARING PLAINER HATS.

Effect of the War on Headgear of Milady.

The effect of the war on the millinery trade is more far-reaching than the conditions imposed on account of the hostilities on most of the other trades and industries in the Dominion. Milady's headgear is no longer solely a source of adornment or decoration. The days of floral and bird designs have passed. A lady's hat is now a piece f simple clothing, shorn of all the erstwhile adornments, and reduced to a minimum of decorative art.

"The hat is now staple clothing," declared the head of one of Canada's largest wholesale millinery houses. "It is no longer an adornment or a frill that advocates of economy can attack as a source of unwarranted extravagance. The vogue to-day is to wear the plainest possible headgear, and the wholesale milliner suffers to that extent. The millinery trade has suffered from all the disadvantages of the war, and has not benefited from any of its peculiar advantages, as other industries have.

"There has been a very marked falling off of styles since the beginning of the war," he continued. "In the first place, we lost the European sources of supply, where we obtained our designs, etc. We are relying absolutely on the Canadian and American makers, and the tendency is towards much plainer makes.

"The peculiar thing about the millinery trade is the fact that the style or material the people can get most of is the vogue; therefore the inability to get goods from Europe soon after the outbreak of war encouraged the making and wearing of plainer hats. The trouble and difficulty the millinery trade is up against just now is the delivery of large quantities of ribbons, etc., in Canada that were ordered a year ago. This makes it very difficult for us to get rid of these goods just now.

"But we will never go back to the old condition of affairs. The hat factories that have sprung up in Canada are now in view. I know of one now which had one hundred people employed, now has 300, because it has gone in to the hat manufacturing business. But the difficulty is this: the hats that cost $15, $20, or $30 several years ago, cost no more today, although the workmanship and materials are more costly."

Regarding the condition imposed upon the trade by the inclement weather, this dealer declared that the division of the year into four hat seasons had minimised the possible loss. "You see," said he, "we had fairly good weather in the spring, that helped the early spring and Easter trade, but now the cold weather has returned there is considerable cutting into our summer trade, but we still have the early fall and winter trade to look after."

In Military Hospitals.

The latest return of Canadian patients in hospitals in the United Kingdom, received in Ottawa gives a total of 19,459 on April 30, including 583 officers. The total had fallen from its highest level, 20,256 on October 20, 1916, to 14,165 on April 6. The total for April is made up thus: In Canadian primary hospitals, 3,180; in Canadian special hospitals, 1,658; in Canadian convalescent hospitals, 3,986; in special sanatoria, 82; and in British hospitals, 10,553.

The latest return of men on the strength of the Military Hospitals Commission command in Canada showed a total of 5,953 on April 30. The total on April 15 was 5,677, having risen to that point from 2,404 at Christmas. The latest total is made up of 3,563 in-patients and 2,390 out-patients. Included in the total are 1,130 men who have not been overseas. At the convalescent homes on April 30 there were 2,220 overseas and 391 camp men; while the convalescent out-patients numbered 1,934 overseas and 447 camp men.

There are 631 patients in the sanatoria for tuberculosis, with eight out-patients; 414 of the total being overseas men and the remaining 225 camp men. The total of 5,952 is completed by 331 men in other institutions.

NOTED SINGER'S TESTIMONY

Redferne Hollinshead, Canada's famous tenor, writes:

It affords me great pleasure to express my encomium of praise for the splendid qualities of the New Scale Williams Piano we are using on our Western tour.

Possessed of brilliancy of tone ideal for the needs of a pianist, your instrument also embodies a lovely singing tone of velvety softness when needed, affording ideal support to my voice both in fortissimo and pianissimo passages.

I am observing its magnificent durability in the midst of constant moving in bitter cold weather, which it sustains constantly by keeping in perfect tune.

Music in the Home

A TOAST TO THE VIOLIN.

It is a Home as Well as a Concert Instrument.

It is doubtful if any instrument commands as much affection and care from its devotees as the violin. Certainly no other surpasses it. The organ occupies a large place in the organist's heart but when he leaves the church he needs must leave his organ. The violin goes with him. It is kept in his home. It is a home instrument as well as a concert instrument. A fine tribute to the violin is contained in this splendidly worded toast which has been received, and which is understood to have appeared in the Musician over the signature of Ralph Wylie:

Miracle of color, form and sound—in such delicacy framed that the thumb of a child might splinter the frail body to ruin, yet artfully planned to bear, through long ages, such strains as would bring a strong man low. Stained with colors that rival the play of leaf-filtered sunlight on forest pools. Warm reddish hues, fine gold, rich brown, half shrouding its grains in mystery, through hues interchanging — softly flaming to each vagrant, shifting ray of light. Rivaling the opal in variety and, like the mind of a maid, gently tricking the cold of analyst's eye.

Chiseled in the symmetry Phidias knew—given more lines of beauty than live in the rose—a mere bok—infinitely simple, yet complex beyond the power of Helmholtz to compute. Jewel worthy the setting of fair woman's hand—task not to be conquered in ten men's lives.

Out-compassing the voice and out-speeding it, as the blue swallow distances the slow-winging crow. Attuning itself, ,with equal ease, to dancing, dreaming, laughter, love. Voicing the spirit of battle and chase or caressing our years with the tenderness that only sweethearts of twenty know. Moulded slowly by deft, firm hands; pondered deeply and long by skilful brain; nursed into being by soul loyal to truth, and by heart long stilled ere vindication could come. Now, mellowed by age like that spirit of youth that sometimes gleams from a wrinkled face, a lesson in fibres singing the songs of lives given ever to hopeful trial.

Voicing and waking all human woods save vanity, envy, lust or hate. Oft-times abused, yet patient withal and therefore triumphant; oft injured sore, yet healing again to sing us ever a sweeter song. Child of heart's planning and infinite care; of flashing inspiration and patient toil—man's nearest approach to the craft of God—

The Monarch of Music—Here's to the King.

A MUSICAL GHOST STORY.

How a Noble Tried to Steal Mozart's Requiem.

Once upon a time it was a cold dark night. That is the way a ghost story usually makes its debut. Perhaps though, it does not apply to the mysterious events surrounding the composition of Mozart's Requiem; but at any rate we are told that near the end of Mozart's life a stranger in black descended from a carriage at his house, and left an order for a Requiem for which cash was paid as a part payment in advance. Later on the strange messenger in black called for the composition but it had not been completed.

The great musician then began to brood over the event and it is said that he became convinced that he was poisoned, that the messenger was from another world, and that the Requiem was for himself. Not being able to finish the composition himself, Mozart had his pupil complete it under his supervision. The black messenger was the steward of a Count who wished to get the work and then give it to the world as his own. He came nearly putting his plan over; but musicians knew that this titled person could not create such a piece of music; also there was some difficulty in tracing Mozart's style in it. After a good deal of disputing over the authorship some of the original manuscript in Mozart's own handwriting came to light which of course established the composer's identity.

It is a coincidence that a part of this Requiem was sung around Mozart's deathbed.

THE BASCOM PLAN.

Familiarity With World's Great Music Creates an Interest.

It happened that Curtis Bascom (the name fictitious) has a great enthusiasm for the songs and dances of vaudeville, but no ability to play them at home. Therefore he bought a player piano and acquired a bundle of rolls, which included "Back to Michigan," the "Hula Hula," a score of other popular songs, and a collection of fox trots. Every evening for a month he played these airy melodies, his only complaint being that instead of the "Honolulu Rag" the abandoned dealer had given him in mistake a "Hungarian Rhapsody by some unknown Dutchman named Liszt."

One evening, having run through his ordinary repertoire, he determined to try the unknown composition. The next night he tried it again, and then determined not to return it to the warerooms. Within a week this was his favorite rolls, and he had grown a bit tired of some of the "Real Ones." The next time he went looking for music rools he mentioned Liszt. The clerk played "Venice and Naples." He bought it. Imagining that the customer had a taste for something worth while the clerk brought out the Mendelssohn Rondo Capricioso. "It's a peach," remarked Mr. Bascom. This was the beginning of a new system.

Today the fox trots and ragtime songs are in an unregarded corner, and one finds in a convenient place Chopin's Ballade (the popular one), and Polonaise in A flat, Rachmaninoff's famous Prelude, Moszkowsky's Spanish Caprice, and several other compositions of importance. The evening caller at the Bascom residence hears a piano recital of worthy music, played by an enthusiast. This is no fairy story. It is true in every detail. Furthermore, it indicates a process that is going on in a good many Canadian homes. The general public is being educated without suspecting it, by means of the players and phonographs. We shall find before many years a body of musical appreciation in this country which cannot fail to be the utmost value in rubbing the rough edges off our people.

It may be said that the player is mechanical. In a measure that is true, despite the improvements which are constantly being made. Yet familiarity with the great music of the world will kindle an interest in musical art and artists which up to this twentieth century would have been impossible. At last there is a possibility of proving the mischievous falsity of the opinion that good music is dull and cannot be enjoyed by any untrained ear. Theodore Thomas said, "The master-works of instrumental music are the language of the soul, and express more than those of any other art. Light music, popular, so called, is the sensual side of the art, and has more or less devil in it." Follow the Bascom plan.

STATE-AIDED MUSIC.

Must Have a Greater Place in Life of a Nation.

It is impossible to follow the trend of musical thought in Great Britain, United States and Canada as reflected in the musical press without discovering a marked tendency to advocate a greater place for state-aided music in the life of the nation. In the American Republic they have much of it, though much more is wanted. In Canada we are behind the times in this respect. In Britain a plea is frequently made for a greater recognition of music on the part of the government.

As typical of the feeling in many quarters in the Motherland, there might be quoted this extract from a letter to the press by a Kirkcaldy musician: "The Prime Minister has appointed two committees to enquire into the position of science and modern languages in our national system of education. Reform is much needed in this respect and doubtless a measure will be achieved. There are other constituents of a modern education, and music as the most important of the arts by far, also requires consideration. What then of our national education? Is the government to stand aloof in this and allow it to languish for want of official direction and encouragement? Not long ago the government spent some £70,00 on a single picture upon which a few favored visitors may gaze, while recently a few hundreds were grudged towards the support of the Royal Academy and the Royal College of Music. This is a state of matters which no friend of music and which no public-spirited man who has the highest interests of the nation at heart can contemplate without dismay. At present we have no government support of musical education worth speaking of, beyond the instruction in elementary singing in the Board Schools.

"We have only to compare ourselves with other countries in these matters to see our deficiencies."

ABOUT SIGHT SINGING.

Paid Singers Must Be Able to Read Music at Sight.

A controversy over the proper method of teaching sight-reading has been raging in the United States. Musicians of highly cultivated type have inveighed against the tonic-sol-fa system which is based on the moveable Doh. They say it destroys in the pupil's mind the color-feeling peculiar to every key. They affirm that to a confirmed tonic-sol-fa-ist a chord in the jubilant Key of D is no more cheerful than a similar chord in the mellow Key of E, and they protest against the practical abolition of the minor-scale sense. The defenders of the moveable Doh declare that sight singing was desperately rare before the Curwen system was elaborated and say that distinction between Keys is appreciable only to the refined ear of a composer. In a sense this is threshed straw, for it is not a discussion to be settled in a moment. Yet it brings to mind the extraordinary progress that has been made in sight singing.

It is not long since Arditi died. He was a song writer and an Operatic coach in the middle of last century. But the meaning of the word "coach" has changed. In these days it means a singing teacher who can instruct operatic singers in the traditions of a role, in its phrasing, and in the peculiar vocal difficulties it presents. In Arditi's time, a "coach" was a man who taught the operatic artist the notes, hammering out each phrase on the piano until the singer had learned the entire role "by ear." It is an astonishing fact to musicians of our times that some of the greatest singers of fifty years ago were dull as ditchwater in the rudiments of music. The possession of a voice apparently made up for many failings.

Today no singer can secure a minor church position unless he is able to read any simple melody at sight. Choral Societies of standing demand much more, and rightly so. It is apparent therefore that we are better equipped as a people for musical advancement than our grandfathers were. There can be no drudgery more wearisome for any conductor than to pound music into the reluctant head of a man or woman who is too indolent or too careless to acquire the rudiments of his art. Imagine the situation if it were necessary to teach an actor to recite his part if he were unable to read or write!

A Curious Medical Mixture.

There are numerous excellent stories in the "Life of Sir Charles Tupper," which has recently been published. One of these stories has reference to Sir James Simpson, the discoverer of chloroform:

"On one occasion a certain colleague, who was an ardent homoeopathist, brought Sir James a case of globules which he asked him to give to a number of patients and note the result. Each phial was marked with the name of the medicine and the disease it would cure.

"Not feeling inclined to comply with this request, Sir James allowed the case to remain on the mantelpiece for some time, afterwards passing it on to Doctor Henderson, another colleague, who was so delighted with the results of his experiment that he became an entire convert to homoeopathy, which he always practised afterwards. When he heard of this Sir James told his wife, and Lady Simpson remarked very quietly that the result was even more surprising than Doctor Henderson supposed, because her small daughter had amused herself for a long time one afternoon by emptying all the phials in the case into a saucer, mixing the contents together, and than refilling the phi—"

War Time Economy

COCOA versus TEA AND COFFEE

THE war is being fought in the kitchens of Canada, just as truly as it is in the trenches of France.

The housewife that is genuinely anxious to help the cause of our Empire will use Cocoa on her table in preference to tea and coffee, which—delightful as you may find them as mild stimulants—have no real food value, and hinder the proper digestion of starchy foods, bread, cakes and potatoes.

Saving at Home Serves in the Trenches

There is more nourishment in a cup of cocoa than in a cup of chicken soup, bouillon or beef extract. You require less of other foods when you drink cocoa. You save money on your table expenditures.

The money you save will enable you to purchase War Savings Certificates. For $21.50 you can buy at your nearest bank or Post Office a Certificate worth, in three years, $25.00.

Cowan's Perfection Brand Cocoa for the table, and Cowan's Maple Buds or Milk Chocolate Bars for most delightful confections will be found at the stores of all dealers throughout Canada.

THE OWL FAMILY.

Not All of These Birds Are Nocturnal.

Most of our owls are rather common, but being generally nocturnal and wary and inhabiting by preference those districts far from human habitations, they are more rarely observed. With keen attention to all of the detail of plumage, form, flight, etc., one may pretty nearly be sure of all of the following species:

The screech owl is the size of a pigeon, but stouter; head with ear tufts, tail with dark cross bands; flies only at night; common everywhere; familiar call.

The Arcadian or saw-whet owl is smaller than a pigeon; head with no ear tufts; tail with white cross bars; rather common in the Middle West; cry like name.

The pygmy owl is no larger than a robin; but more fluffy; no tufts on head; tail with white spots; common in the Rocky Mountains and to the Pacific Coast; flies in daytime.

The burrowing owl is about the body size of a pigeon; no ear tufts on head; digs holes; lives in prairie-dog towns; flies in daytime; white bars on tail.

The long-eared owl is a little smaller than a crow, or shorter; head with long ear tufts; tail closely barred with rufous and brown; not often seen, but common.

The short-eared owl is the size of the last, ear tufts inconspicuous; tail with few dark bands, everywhere common, but generally roosts all day.

The hawk owl is a little smaller than a crow, tail long with many white crossbars; hawklike; flies mostly in daytime; Southern Canada only in winter.

The barred owl is as large as a crow and stouter; plumage black with cross bands of dull white; flies rarely in daytime; cry of who who!

The barn owl is about as large as a crow; slender, big head, monkey face, long legs, not feathered to toes; plumage tawney reddish marked with brown and white; common; flies in daytime and hunts mice on ground; useful.

The snowy owl, seen only in winter, is much larger and stouter than a crow; plumage white, marked with dark spots.

The great-horned owl is larger than a crow, with large ear tufts; color drab, mottled with black, brown and white; barred thickly on the breast; flies day and night; savage; call a steamboat whistle; common everywhere, but wary; soars high in the air.

The great gray or eagle owl is the giant of its race, having no ear tufts; found in the Arctics and in Southern Canada only in winter.

The Bantam Regiments.

Unique among the armies of Europe, the British "Bantams" have amply justified the opinion which the late Lord Kitchener formed of them. They owe their existence to his initiative and foresight. Many men had been rejected because of their shortness of stature, and Lord Kitchener's idea was that if the little men wanted to fight for their country the right should not be denied them.

A correspondent at the British headquarters in the field says:

"No man over five feet three inches was accepted. Short men who had been turned away in the early days of the New Army formed the first battalion. As it was a success, others followed. At the front they were brigaded together, and a visitor to certain parts of the line sees thousands of sturdy short-legged men marching along the roads and keeping guard in the trenches."

Many jokes have been made about them. It was even suggested that when they went into the trenches some one would have to hold them up to the parapet to fire. Instead of having to hold them up, however, the difficulty is to keep them from showing their heads. They have the advantage of being small targets, and they are completely sheltered in a trench where another man's head would be exposed.

"They are particularly good at scouting," said one of their officers. "There is no limit to their nerve. It is nothing for them to crawl out in the dark across No Man's Land up to the German barbed wire. In one of the recent trench raids they captured a machine gun. No battalions have so thoroughly the good wishes of the entire army."

Following this idea of Lord Kitchener's, the Canadians also organized Bantam Battalions, which are now arriving at the front. The 216th Battalion, which was drawn from the Toronto division, recently reached England and was accorded a hearty reception.

TWO WAYS TO ACQUIRE AN ESTATE

1—By saving, stinting, sacrificing; fighting the world at every turn, battling the blows of business competition; running the risk of fire, theft, embezzlement and misfortune; skimping your family, and yourself maybe, and standing only one chance in twenty of reaching Old Age without being dependent upon others for support.

2—By securing a Life Insurance Policy—A Policy which guarantees to pay your Beneficiary at your death, either a definite lump sum or an income every month as long as she lives—an income that is fixed, certain, regular, inalienable, unassailable, untaxable, and which cannot be lost, sold, dissipated, squandered or mortgaged.

Which is the EASIER and MORE SENSIBLE Way to Acquire an Estate?

TWO WAYS TO BEQUEATH AN ESTATE

1—By Testamentary Document: Requires an Executor. Must go through legal red tape at court. Requires court costs. May require months or years to settle. This kind of Will can be broken or set aside. Property is subject to attachment for debts of the deceased.

2—By Life Insurance (when the Beneficiary is named): Requires no executor or administrator—you are your own executor, your own administrator. No need of court proceedings—no expense of court costs. Does not require time to settle. This is a Will direct which no lawyer can break nor court set aside. Policy is not subject to attachment for debts of the deceased.

PICTURES OF WAR.

Interesting Collection From the Canadian Record Office.

A very interesting collection of pictures is now touring the Dominion of Canada. The pictures have been loaned by the War Records Office, and they are intended to give the people of this country an idea of war as it really is. The series of exhibitions will be arranged throughout the Dominion by an officer, though it is possible that the position may be offered later on to a returned wounded soldier. The pictures are very large, and they have a great amount of detail which can be carefully studied. There are over two hundred photographs in the collection, and a haphazard selection of any ten of them would be sufficient to impress a multitude of spectators first, with the tremendous significance of the subject and secondly, with the wonderful quality of photographic art which the pictures display. The pictures were all made on the Somme front a few months ago, and the subjects testify to the hazards run by the photographers who made them. There is none of the fuzzy obscurity which betrays the use of a telescope lens and the process used for enlarging the originals has been perfected to a point which makes it possible for the spectator to see life-sized men clambering "over the top," and clearly distinguish the determined lines of their features.

In addition to the clearness of every detail the pictures are remarkable for the sense of action which the camera men have caught. For instance, the last man over the top is actually kicking a foothold in the crumbling earth of the parapet and his every muscle seems vibrant with eager haste to catch up to his companions who are ahead in the crouching race across the strip of No Man's Land. The work of the Army Medical Corps is well-pictured, the groups taken in the first-aid dressing stations right in the thick of the show are remarkable for their realism. The proximity of these havens of healing to the frightful mill which grinds out the material for their work is vividly portrayed in one scene which shows a group of battered fellows painfully trying to dodge the debris falling amongst them and caused by the explosion of a Jack Johnson, which is seen spouting its spume in the background. Altogether the collection is quite unique. The pictures are in charge of Major M. S. Boehm, who went as far as England with the 169th battalion and who returned to Canada with the intention of doing recruiting when the men of the unit went to the front.

A Slight Error.

"One morning in the early years of the present century," says Mr. Beckles Willson in his "Life of Lord Strathcona," "an elderly individual, not very prepossessing as to appearance, called at the office of the High Commissioner for Canada in London and asked to see Lord Strathcona. He was told that his lordship was far too busy to see any but those who had appointments with him.

"'Well,' was the confident reply, 'he'll see me if you tell him that my father drove him to Aberdeen when he sailed for Canada.'

"The message was taken in to Lord Strathcona, and word came out that the visitor was to be admitted. Five minutes later he emerged with a five-pound note crackling in his palm.

"Three weeks later the same man reappeared. Again they told him how busy the High Commissioner was, and again his answer was, 'Tell him my father drove him to Aberdeen when he sailed for Canada.' He was admitted, and emerged rustling another five-pound note.

"A few weeks later he presented himself a third time. The secretary felt that the limits of benevolence must have been reached. He went into Lord Strathcona's private office and said—

"'Here is this broken-down Aberdonian, my lord, come to see you again—the man who says his father drove you to Aberdeen when you went to Canada. He has had two five-pound notes from your lordship already.'

"'Indeed!' said Lord Strathcona in his quiet way. 'Give him another five-pound note and tell him he need not come again. You may add that his father did not drive me to Aberdeen when I went to Canada. As a matter of fact, I walked!'"

THE CHARM OF SAN JOSE.

One of Central America's Most Attractive Cities.

Have you ever been in San Jose? It is 3,800 feet above the sea level built in what must formerly have been the crater of a great volcano. Mountains surround it on all sides making a beautiful background for the squat, compactly built houses chimneyless and vari-colored. It is strange to see a brilliant blue house huddled close up to a dwelling of rose or orange hue. Buzzards sit upon the corrugated roofs, looking speculatively around, or fly lazily about above the streets.

The city is clothed with little green plazas, and the people come and go there all day; men with wide hats and women with beautifully embroidered silken shawls drawn closely about their shoulders. They are duskily beautiful, with their hair hanging loose or in long black braids. In the evening the band plays in the grandstand of the little plaza, and always the people walk about the park, listening to the strains and smilingly bowing to passing acquaintances.

The market is large, with stalls where tropical fruits, vegetables, meats, curios baskets, calabash-cups and bowls are sold. Outside, the picturesque two-wheeled ox carts pass, the sombreroed driver going ahead of the patient beast, a wicked-looking goad in his careless grasp. The wheels are cut from solid mahogany logs, and painted crudely but artistically.

San Jose is proud of her Teatro Nacional, whose mural decorations and statues are the work of some of Europe's noted artists. She is proud, too, of her insane asylum, set back in amazingly beautiful grounds. It is said that every species of rose is planted here, with tropical plants in abundance. Many people go away absolutely cured; due to the effect upon them of such beautiful surroundings. A hurried glimpse of the hospital gives one the impression also of beautiful flowers, and of poor crippled mendicants—men, women, and children—some with heads tied up, some with poor, helpless feet, but each ready with a smile, though it be a wan one.

Outside the city is the Bosque de los Ninos, left forever to the poor by a wealthy priest. It is never flooded; it never dries up; never do the weeds grow there. It is blessed. Once a year the little Costa Rica children have what corresponds to our Arbor Day, and add more trees to the ones already growing so luxuriantly.

Nearby is a coffee plantation, with hundreds of bushes, the blossoms yellow and dainty, with a delicate fragrance. In the yard of it coffee berries, placed upon flat concrete surfaces, dry in the tropical sun.

Everywhere flowers grow luxuriantly, and American beauties and rare orchids may be purchased almost anywhere for a mere song. Although in the tropics, San Jose is marvelously cool, surrounded as it is by mountains upon whose summits the clouds perpetually sleep.

Fancy Dress Fighters.

Dandies were much in evidence in the Peninsular War, and an officer of the famous Light Division has recorded how some of the officers were "rigged out in all the colors of the rainbow."

The Duke of Wellington, however, never troubled what his officers wore, so long as they brought their men intact into the firing line with sixty rounds of ammunition apiece; and one of the chaplains, known as "The Fighting Parson," always wore a red hussar jacket, whilst during the battle of Vittoria, General Picton wore, instead of the usual cocked hat, a round and very old hat, and carried "a huge white umbrella, lined with green."

In the war against the American rebels in 1777, Sergeant McGregor, of the old 42d Foot, seems to have been allowed to dress himself as though he were going to a ball instead of a battle. For unlike Captain Cawley, who donned the oldest clothes he could find to fight in at Waterloo, the dandy sergeant spent a considerable time over his toilet and finally appeared in "a new jacket with silver lace, large silver buckles in his shoes, and watch of some value."

When the 10th Hussars were brought hurriedly from India to reinforce our army fighting in the Crimea, it was found necessary for them to be all dressed in plain clothes and marched across the Arabian desert to Alexandria. But it is doubtful if any regiment has ever been dressed more strangely than the old Portsea Volunteers, who in 1797, wore gold and scarlet cords, golden rosettes, feathers, cockades, white waistcoats, "gold wings" (to quote the official description), and "frilled-skirts largely flounced."

CANADA'S INLAND SEA

"ATLANTIC SEAPORTS" WILL BE OPENED ON HUDSON BAY.

Great Undertaking That Will Help to Solve the Problem of Transporting the Grain Output of the North-West to the Markets of Europe, Thus Helping Development of the Dominion.

TORONTO or Ottawa thinks of the Atlantic as far distant. Yet north of these cities Canada has Atlantic seaports—towns on the great inland extension of the Atlantic known as Hudson Bay. This great body of water, of course, has always been just where it is to-day. Its use for transportation by boat has been greatly hindered by the ice-blockade that closes Hudson Strait for all the months of the year but three. Modern traffic conditions, the growing grain-output of the great Canadian North-West, and, above all, the necessities imposed by the present war, have at last made it profitable to use this water-route for the limited period during which it is available, and the Canadian Government will complete, this spring, a railroad line connecting her three transcontinental roads with tide-water on this inland sea, thus eliminating the railroad haul across half the continent. Writes Mr. Earle William Gage in The Scientific American:

"That the completion of the Hudson Bay Railroad is a vital matter of interest to commerce needs no argument. It is not the idle dream of a passenger-agent desiring a new field of tourist endeavor, but the result of insistent demands made by a country whose development has outstripped the efforts of three great railway systems to keep pace. As early as 1906, western Canada was the congested centre of railway transportation, both outgoing and incoming lines being blocked with grain, live stock, and supplies. The Hudson Bay Railroad is simply the result of a continuous blockade of traffic, the aim being to relieve this by giving the shortest possible route to tide-water from fields of production.

"Had not an enlarged outlet been supplied to the ocean, the development of Canada would have been retarded. Canada's great inland sea, Hudson Bay, gives the West tide-water in the meridian of the Mississippi Valley. A glance at the map shows it to be the shortest route from the centre of the country's fields of production to the world's markets. Port Nelson, the northern terminus of the new railroad, is as near the central point of the grain area as the centre of that area is to the head of the Great Lakes, and it is about the same distance from Liverpool as Montreal. . . . .

"This region is often associated with Arctic conditions; yet no part of Hudson Bay comes within the Arctic Circle, and Engineer Armstrong in his recommendations stated with considerable assurance 'That ships may enter and leave Port Nelson all the year round is a fact worth remembering.'

"Though the Bay remains open, Hudson Strait freezes over. Hence transportation will be possible for only three months a year, from the end of July to about the end of October. But inasmuch as this gives full time for the moving of the food-products to Europe, at a very material saving in time and freight cost, the expenditure of $16,000,000 for the construction of the 425 miles of railroad will pay big dividends to the Government. During the closed season the natural resources of the Bay region, including farm-crops, timber, paper-pulp, minerals, and the enormous wealth of fur and fin, will compensate for the operation of the system."

The exponents of the railroad point out that the heavy grain traffic from the Western plains to the Atlantic seaboard is carried over the Great Lakes only during a little longer season than the Hudson Bay route promises, and larger cargoes may be carried in a shorter time, which discounts the argument against the route to Europe. To quote further:

"That the Hudson Bay route promises a path from western Canada to Liverpool, shorter by 1,000 miles than the present prevailing rail route, is a powerful factor in its favor. . . . That a very material saving will be effected in freight cost alone is appreciated when we remember that the freight upon grain from the wheat-belt to Hudson Bay approximates ten cents per bushel, or the same as to the head of the Great Lakes, at present. It now costs fifteen cents per bushel to transport the grain to the Atlantic seaboard ports, which represents a fair profit to the wheat-growers. Assuming an export trade of 20,000,000 bushels, which could be readily handled if the harbor were open but two months of the year, this saving would amount in a single season to approximately $3,000,000.

"The demand for western Canada's prime beef, mutton, pork, and poultry is increasing in Europe. It now costs about sixty cents per hundred to transport steers to the Atlantic ports, and an additional sixty cents to ship them to Liverpool. For the payment of sixty cents per hundred these cattle and stock may be delivered in Liverpool, on an average, from the fields of production, or an average saving of $6 per head for steers. This saving will approximate $1,000,000 per season of only two months, or a total of $4,000,000. Therefore, if the Hudson Bay Railroad is operated but two out of the twelve months, in four years it would pay off its construction debt. But the officials have calculated that the remaining nine or ten months may be devoted to interest-bearing operations of a local nature."

Some Gems of German Thought

IF you want to work up a war appetite, get a copy of "Gems (?) of German Thought," compiled by William Archer and recently published by Doubleday, Page & Co., settle into an easy chair and spend an hour in contemplation of the serene and euphonious thoughts of German publicists. After that there is an even chance that you will want to go out on the street and hit the first German you meet.

If you hit him once for Dr. Lehmann (Gem. 21), twice for Pastor H. Francke (Gem 29), and three times for a fellow named Siemens with a half dozen capital letters attached to the hind end of his name (Gem 236).

You can temporarily forget Bernhardi and Treitschke—they are a couple of pikers beside most of the crowd from whom Mr. Archer has selected his 501 paragraphs in exposition of the Kultur mania.

The 501 "gems" are alike in one respect—they are all divinely inspired.

What seemed deep and profound to thousands of Germans makes particularly light and frivolous reading for the rest of the world. The sole serious reflection which they arouse is an understanding of the amazing tenacity of the German Nation in the present war.

Siemens, the fellow for whom you are storing up three slams, is guilty of this:

"The war must last until we have forced disarmament upon our enemies. There is a nursery rhyme which runs thus:

Knife and scissors, fork and candle,
Little children must not handle.

Since the enemy States behave so childishly as to misuse their arms, they must be placed under tutelage. Moreover, our enemies have acted so dishonorably that it is only just that rights of citizenship should be denied them. . . . When they can no longer bear arms, they cannot make any new disturbances."

Gem 29, from Mr. Francke, is also worth reading:

"Germany is precisely —who would venture to deny it—the representative of the highest morality, of the purest humanity, of the most chastened Christianity. He, therefore, who fights for its maintenance, its victory, fights for the highest blessings of humanity itself, and for human progress. Its defeat, its decline, would mean a falling back to the worst barbarism."

Gem 21 is brief, but glorious: "Germany is the future of humanity."

This is but one of many counts against Pastor Lehmann. Another of pungent odor reads: "The German soul is the world's soul. God and Germany belong to one another."

There is a contribution by Professor W. Sombart, which must be abbreviated owing to the scarcity of newsprint paper. "Have no fear, my dear neighbors, we will not devour you," says the professor, admitting that Germany has a greater mission than to expand, and that she will do no harm beyond establishing naval stations in Dover, Malta, and Suez.

The "gems" have been grouped by the editor under general headings, such as "Deutschland Uber Alles," "German Ambitions," "War Worship," "Ruthlessness and Machiavelism," with a large assortment of hate utterances at the end handed to England, France, and Belgium, "especially England." The sayings are also grouped according as they were made before or after the commencement of the war, but there is no considerable difference in their bombast.

In the collection on "Ruthlessness" one is struck by two paragraphs in particular. The first, written by a German patriot in 1900, reads: "Whoever enters upon a war in future will do well to look only to his own interests and pay no heed to any so-called international law. He will do well to act without consideration and without scruple, and this holds good in the case of a war with England."

The other — mark! — was taken from an address on the Sermon on the Mount, delivered by Pastor D. Baumgarten after the sinking of the Lusitania, in which he says of it in part: "Whoever cannot conquer his sense of the gigantic cruelty to unnumbered perfectly innocent victims and give himself up to honest delight at this victorious exploit of German defensive power, him we judge to be no true German."

Finally, to keep a good taste in your mouth, read this one from Pastor B. Losche:

"It is a pity that men like Newton, Darwin, Shakespeare, Marlborough, Nelson, Wellington, Spurgeon, etc., should have their births recorded in English registers. But they are exceptions. Among the millions of the cities of the Plain there must be a few just men."

This is the type of dope they have been pumping into the German people for years. Quick, Wilhelm, the needle again, or the heart will fail.

Damascene Blades.

A writer in a foreign journal points out that, according to Jean Jacques Perret, the well-known French author living in the eighteenth century, Damascene blades were probably hardened in olden times by a powerful blast of cold air issuing from a narrow passage between two walls specially built for the purpose.

New Zealand Railways.

New Zealand railways have a mileage of 2,970, nearly 16 miles having been added last year. The gross revenue in 1915, £4,548,356, exceeded the previous year's by £442,890; and the expenditure, £2,910,882, or £9,872 less than in 1914 and £9,117 less than the estimated amount.

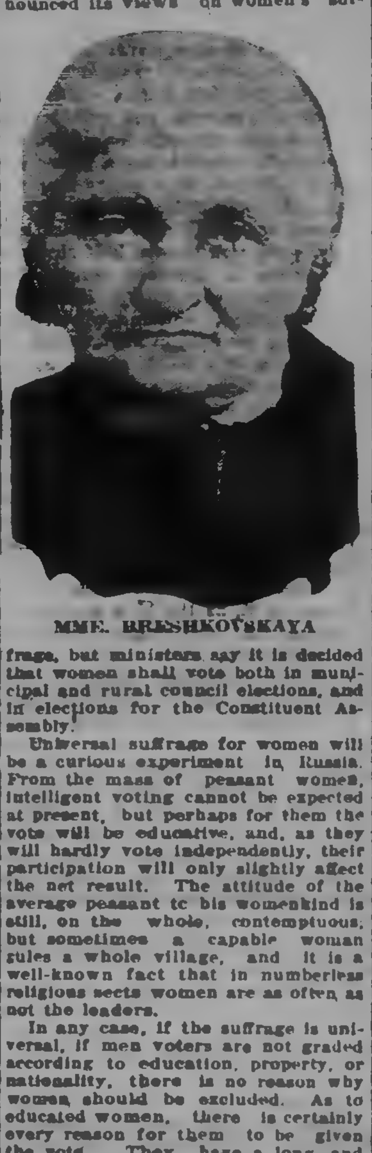
Mother of Revolution Means Symbol of Liberty To the Women of Russia

ONE of the first pieces of news that came to this country in connection with the Russian revolution was that the new rulers had liberated Mme. Catharine Breshkovskaya, who has become known as the "Mother of the Russian Revolution." She had been in Siberia for many years and was nearly eighty years of age. This great woman came from a noble Russian family and began to preach liberty when only seventeen years of age. The brave woman has become what might be called the symbol of the woman's suffrage movement in Russia.

At Petrograd, writes the Russian correspondent of The London Daily Telegraph, there has been a great woman's suffrage demonstration with speeches in the City Hall and processions with red flags. It was not a militant, but rather an educative, demonstration, a reminder to the women themselves to be up and doing, and a gentle reproach to the men who do not seriously object to women's suffrage, but wish it were not coming quite so soon. The Government has not yet officially announced its views on women's suffrage, but ministers say it is decided that women shall vote both in municipal and rural council elections, and in elections for the Constituent Assembly.



MME. BRESHKOVSKAYA

Universal suffrage for women will be a curious experiment in Russia. From the mass of peasant women, intelligent voting cannot be expected at present, but perhaps for them the vote will be educative, and, as they will hardly vote independently, their participation will only slightly affect the net result. The attitude of the average peasant to his womankind is still, on the whole, contemptuous, but sometimes a capable woman gules a whole village, and it is a well-known fact that in numberless religious sects women are as often as not the leaders.

In any case, if the suffrage is universal, if men voters are not graded according to education, property, or nationality, there is no reason why women should be excluded. As to educated women, there is certainly every reason for them to be given the vote. They have a long and honorable record of public service.

Secondary and university education was secured for women in Russia long before it was conceded in Western Europe. Women have for years past had great liberty of thought and action, and if there has been no very strong and organized suffrage movement, it was largely because women were directly engaged in public work side by side with men, and it seemed incredible that when the opportune moment came they should not be given the vote.

On the other hand, there is the peasant point of view. In the ward committee for the relief of soldiers' wives near my home some young women were trying to organize an unruly band of recipients of relief into a corporation, with elected representatives who would deal directly with the committee. The women quarreled, brawled, each played her own hand, none wanted to elect, there was no esprit de corps.

The Russian Women's Rights League plastered the town with bills demanding the vote. A well-known woman writer was placed at the head of the whole network of temporary soup kitchens opened for the soldiers during the revolutionary week. The city council elected to the permanent committee, and so practically co-opted, several leading women workers, including Countess Panin and Mesdames Miliukova, Tyrkova and Shishkina Yavein. There was a rush of meetings for all classes of women. My servants went to some of these meetings, and came home militant.

But they don't call me "Comrade" yet, though the cook threatens she won't give me a samovar after 8 in the evening. There were meetings specially for servants to form servants' unions, but as none quite know what to demand nothing further has happened. There are continuous meetings, too, at the Women's University and Medical College, with stormy conflicts between moderate and extreme factions, the moderates usually winning and declaring for resumption of work, continuation of the war, and support of the Provisional Government.

LURE OF CHECKERS

A Game That Has Been Played For Twenty Centuries.

LONG KNOWN AS "DRAUGHTS."

Plato and Homer Mentioned the Game in Their Writings, and Many Relics of It Have Been Unearthed From the Tombs of Ancient Egypt.

In the messengers' room of a big industrial plant two boys hovered meditatively over a checkerboard of red and black squares and moved their "men" from square to square with much premeditation. An old man chanced that way and, lured by the contest, stopped and looked on. Taking the liberties or the rights that his years warranted, he suggested a move and was soon absorbed in the game. Another man came by and stopped, and soon there was a group around the silent and intent contestants. The lure of checkers was upon them.

This game in slightly modified forms has exercised its fascination upon the human race for centuries that cannot be counted. "Checkers" is a new name for an ancient game. To English speaking people it was long known as "draughts," and in all the languages of civilized men it has a name. There are variations in the way of playing it, but it is the familiar checkers of our time just the same.

So many things come to light out of the ancient tombs of Egypt that it strikes the modern man as remarkable how many articles they buried with men in those dim, long gone ages, but out of tombs at least twenty centuries old explorers, excavators and tomb breakers have brought forth pieces of checkerboards and the disks which for some reason are called "men." And as such things have been found in tombs that were sealed twenty centuries ago it is possible that some time in very much older tombs explorers may find relics of checkers.

In the British museum one of the exhibits in the Egyptian collection is a board and men of the ancient game which came out of one of those ancient tombs. Some of the oldest of the mural decorations of ancient Egypt depict players engaged at draughts, or whatever the ancient Egyptians may have called the game.

Classic references may be found to draughts. Plato mentioned it and writes that it was the invention of an Egyptian whom he called Hermes Trismegistus, but where and how Plato got the information are not clear. It is very easy to say that such and such a man invented such and such a game, but close investigation usually proves that he hit on some adaptation or variation of a very much older game.

Tracing the genesis of a game of skill or chance usually leads the investigator too far back in the mists of the past to be sure that he has found the correct answer.

This game is also mentioned by Homer, and he records the observation that it was played during the period with which the "Odyssey" deals. There is little doubt that the Greeks played the game and that at a later period the Romans played a variant of it, which they called "latrunculi."

It was early played through northern Europe and was played there at such a remote period that it was said to have been one of the few things which were not introduced in that region by the Romans.

It was one of the most popular games in Europe during the sixteenth century. In the Library of Congress are several old books treating of the game. Samuel Johnson once wrote a preface to a book on the game of draughts which one William Payne had composed at the expense of much time and effort.

Students of checkers and very old players of the game recall the names of Anderson, an Englishman, and Wyllie, "the herd laddie," who were famous checker players about half a century ago. Wyllie traveled all over the world playing contests with local checker experts and enthusiasts. Martens, an English player, and two Americans, Yates and Barker, succeeded to the fame of Anderson and Wyllie.

Richard Cromwell.

Oliver Cromwell tried to train his son to be a worthy successor as protector, but the attempt was a failure. Richard was easy going and amiable and more addicted to sports than to statecraft. He was the acknowledged lord protector from Sept. 3, 1658, to May 25, 1659, but cut little figure as such. He did not relish official duties and much preferred having a good time. The cavaliers called him "Queen Dick," and others still less respectfully spoke of him as "Tumbledown Dick." He was glad to quit when parliament told him to get out. After his abdication, however, he conducted himself with credit and even with dignity. He lived in quiet retirement for fifty-three years and died July 12, 1712, at the ripe old age of ninety.

IS YOUR HEALTH WORTH $5.00?

Woman Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Lima, Ohio.—"I was all broken down in health from a displacement. One of my lady friends came to see me and she advised me to commence taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I began taking your remedies and took $5.00 worth and in two months was a well woman after three doctors said I never would stand up straight again. I was a midwife for seven years and I recommended the Vegetable Compound to every woman to take before birth and afterwards, and they all got along so nicely that it surely is a godsend to suffering women. If women wish to write to me I will be delighted to answer them." —Mrs. JENNIE MOYER, 342 E. North St., Lima, Ohio.

Women who suffer from displacements, weakness, irregularities, nervousness, backache or bearing-down pains, need the tonic-strengthening properties of the roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The Sturgeon's Food.

The common sturgeon of the rivers of North-Eastern America is one of the largest and most valuable of food fishes. It sometimes reaches a weight of five hundred pounds and a length of ten feet. The female produces a mass of eggs that is equal to a fifth or even a third of her own weight, and numbers two or three millions. It is from those eggs that caviare is made. The sturgeon feeds along muddy bottoms on small shellfish, water weeds, and bottom fishes. Its method of feeding is peculiar. Underneath the snout and near the point of it are four barbels or "feelers", about two and a half inches long, and placed about three-quarters of an inch apart across the snout. It swims with the snout close to the bottom, which allows the barbels to trail along on the sand or mud.

Whenever the barbels touch the protruding siphons of the soft-shelled clam or the razor clam the siphons of the clams contract, and by doing so notify the sturgeon of their presence. It halts, and with its telescope mouth pumps the sand or mud away from the clam, passes it out of the gill openings, and finally draws the clam from its resting-place into its jaws and there crushes it. The larger portions of the shell it discards through the gill openings; but if the clams are small it discards very little of the shell, but swallows nearly all of it. Another way the sturgeon has of feeding is to plough a furrow through the sand or mud with its long pointed snout, then to turn round and go back through the furrow and pick up whatever small molluscs and crustaceans it may have exposed. It also sucks up with its protruding mouth great quantities of sand and mud, sifts them through its gills, and thereby finds many small organisms upon which it feeds.

Lignite Possibilities.

The lignite fields of Saskatchewan are said to contain thirteen million tons, almost untouched

The lignite is a low-grade coal, but, on the other hand, it has the advantage of being easily and cheaply mined. All that is necessary to do is to dig it out of the ground, for it lies practically on the surface, no galleries or shafts being required.

Some years ago R. O. Wynne-Roberts, an engineer in the employ of the Saskatchewan Government, made a report on the lignite fields, and suggested that the best way to develop them would be to establish a central power plant located right in the centre of the lignite bed and distribute power all over the province. His scheme was to burn the lignite in retorts, as is now done with the same grade of coal in Germany and elsewhere, and use the gas so developed to produce the electric energy.

Our Forest Fires.

There are estimated to be 10,000 forest fires in Canada every year of all sizes and descriptions. Nine-tenths are set by human hands, and the damage runs from four to ten millions of dollars, not counting damage to soil, to the value of watershed areas and many other factors.

A Remedy for Poison Ivy.

Studies of poison ivy show that its poisonous principle is a volatile acid resin; therefore, the treatment of rhus poisoning with an alkali is theoretically right. In practice the correctness of the theory is borne out; a saturated aqueous solution of sodium bicarbonate being one of the most efficacious remedies. Recently a note was made of the application of ice water for rhus poisoning in the United States Army with good results. This will interest Canadians as poison ivy is very common in all our country districts.

The possibility of combining the alkaline and ice water treatments naturally suggests itself, and upon trial this has been found to be prompt and efficacious. In two cases which have come to our notice a saturated solution of sodium bicarbonate in ice water applied freely and continuously to the infected area brought about prompt relief and a complete cure within twelve hours. In view of the suffering entailed by a severe attack of rhus poisoning and of the failure of the older method of the treatment with opium and lead water, grindelia, etc., it is well to bear in mind this method, which is easy of application and prompt in affording relief.

NEED FOR FLAX FIBRE

Canada May Develop Industry to Aid Britain

The linen industry in Ireland and Scotland is in danger as a consequence of the war. Much of the raw material, flax fibre, has come from Belgium, France and Russia, and these sources of supply are, for the time being, closed. Representatives from the large mills of Great Britain have visited Canada in an endeavor to enlist the co-operation of farmers in a greater production of flax. Here is an opportunity to develop the industry in this country and by modern methods of production and handling, put it on a basis that will make it profitable under normal conditions and prices.

Flax for fibre can be grown in Canada wherever mixed farming can be carried on. In some parts of Quebec and in Western Ontario, from the days of early settlement, flax has been grown and homemade into linen. In only a few sections of Ontario in 1904 some 700 tons of fibre were produced, which sold for $201 per ton. This fibre was of a poor commercial grade, owing to antiquated methods of preparation for spinning. A shipment to Belfast produced by slightly improved methods sold for $240 per ton. The average price for Irish flax during the last five years has been $325 per ton, while Belgian flax has averaged $405 per ton. It is obvious that Canadian flax should supply the present deficiency and future requirements of the Empire's raw material for linen production, and that more remunerative prices will be received if improved methods of production are employed.

ICE HOUSE FOR FARMER

Directions For Building a Good Cooling Room

A 20x20 ice house with 12-foot studding is a practical sized building for farm use. A suitable sized ice house, and one that gives most practical results is 16x20 with 12-foot studding—building the cooling house on north side wall of building.

Under this plan the cooling room is attached to and forms a part of the north wall, with door opening into the cooling room from the north to prevent the direct rays of the sun at any time entering the cooling room. Dimensions of cooling room is 8x8x8, the top of which should be covered with some waterproof material—the roof built with a slight pitch in order that the water from the melting ice, which is placed on top and on three sides of a cooling room, will not drip and leak through the roof.

It is advisable to have one or more glass panels in door of cooling room so that in entering same the door may be closed and still permit enough light for convenient operation in cooling room. In filling the house with ice it is a common practice to pack the ice in a solid body to the desired height, leaving a space of 12 to 18 inches around the outside walls to be filled and thoroughly tamped in with hay or straw as the ice house is being filled.

Sawdust is, of course, most desirable for protecting the ice, but with most farmers is not available, and excellent results can be had from the use of hay or straw. Three to four feet of well tamped hay or straw should be placed over the ice as a final covering.

PERSIAN LAMB FUR

Cross-breeding Cheep Produces Excellent Persian Lamb

In appearance the Karakul differs from Canadian sheep in their greater length of body, broad tails and long, drooping ears. The wool is long and coarse in texture, the first shearing being generally brownish in color, but afterwards very similar in color to our native sheep.

It has been found that by crossing the Karakul with some of our long-wool sheep that Persian lamb pelts equal to the pure-bred Karakul can be produced. It has also been found that in crossing with our native sheep the offspring is invariably heavier than the pure-bred native (generally from 20 to 30 per cent.). They are also extremely hardy. The mutton is of a very superior quality, and is absolutely void of the musk flavor which gives common sheep, especially the Merino family, the characteristic, and, to many, disagreeable sheepy taste, and it is the most delicious mutton known. In breeding the Karakul a good deal of the ordinary loss in sheep raising is eliminated, as the pelts of still-born and early-dying lambs have a market value, and if from any cause the ewe dies after four months' pregnancy the unborn baby lambskins often bring the price of an ordinary full grown lamb. It will thus be seen that the Karakul although comparatively unknown in Canada, deserves a front place in the sheep raising industry.

Farm Sanitation

It would be difficult, writes a community builder, to make every farmer father believe that lack of sanitary equipment for his household and neglect of his barnyard caused sickness and deaths in his family. It may be impossible to convince him that the death of his wife at an early age was a result of too much pumping, churning and washing by hand; but they are really so closely related as cause and effect that one might almost declare that only the wilfully blind will or can fail to see their relation.

For Motor Touring

Considerable hard work can be avoided on the road if the tire rims are treated occasionally with a little shellac and graphite. Aluminum paint is also good to prevent the head of the tire from rusting in the rim. It is a difficult matter to remove the casing from a rim when it has become rusted.

"O Canada" by Our Soldiers

A BOOK that will be very interesting to the people of this country has just been published in England. It bears the title "Oh, Canada," and is a budget of stories, verse, pictures and music contributed by the members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force. In appearance it is very attractive, with a sketch, "The Byng Boys Are Here!" on the cover. For the benefit of those who have not kept in touch with the entertainments of England, it may be mentioned that the "Byng Boys" were introduced in one of the London reviews, and when Sir Julian Byng took charge of the Canadian Corps, it seemed appropriate that our khaki lads should become known as the Byng Boys. In addition to a picture of Sir Julian Byng, the volume opens with an article by the Hon. Lady Byng, entitled "A Backward Glance," in which she gives her recollections of life at Rideau Hall when she was a small girl, her parents having been in the staff of the Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise. This article contains a tribute to one of the most picturesque figures in our history. Lady Byng says, "But most of all I remember Macdonald, 'Sir John A.,' though I was not of an age to realize all that the long, lean face, with its loose skin and innumerable lines meant, or what it would stand for in the future history of Canada. To me he was just a kindly-spoken old man, not the great Imperialist statesman who faced strife and enmity to consolidate and confirm that unity betwixt Canada and the Old Country which is bearing fruit to-day."

The contributions of the men include some excellent illustrations. One mentions these first because they are so remarkably good. Some of the pictures are from water-color sketches, and few are fanciful sketches, but the bulk of them have to do with jokes. There is one series worthy of note that shows the artist's idea of what would have happened to the famous spots of England if the Kaiser had been given an opportunity to treat London as he treated Ypres. There are a number of stories and articles in the book, two songs with the music composed by the poet who wrote the words, and also many pieces of poetry. It is easier to quote the verse because it is shorter, so two examples of the writing of the Maple Leaf boys can be given. The first is "On the Gatineau," by J. R. Galt, which is spirited and musical:

Oh sing of Italy and France, oh chant of sunny Spain,
A jaunt on foreign mountains or by a sandy main;
And when you've sung your sweetest, dear, unhitch the old canoe,
And hand me o'er the paddle and I'll take a trip with you.

On the sunny Gatineau, when the current's sweeping slow
And the cooling breeze is blowing overland from Hudson Bay,
And the hot wind from the south Gushes from the river's mouth,
To meet and kiss the birches and with the wild fowl play,
So we'll skim through shine and shadow all the livelong summer day.

Do you hear the merry bobolink a-calling in the cove?
Do you see the little foxes leaping careless in the grove,
And the brown musquashes splashing and the fishes darting high;
Feel the scent of pine and hemlock, see the blueness of the sky,
And the shimmer of the ripples over which the swallows fly?

There is another, written by a Canadian prisoner in Germany, and addressed "To Cornel Prum," the name of the shopkeeper whose name decorates the wall opposite his place of confinement.

O Cornel Prum, how grey I feel,
  How dismal, dull, and lone I am;
As flung from home by Fortune's wheel,
  I at this casement sit and damn
  You, Cornel Prum!

'Tis not because to you I owe
  My exile to this foreign land,
But I have neither friend nor foe,
  The language I don't understand,
  So, Cornel Prum,

On your devoted head I'll heap
  The vials of my long-pent wrath.
I cannot eat, I cannot sleep,
  But only stare across the path
  At "Cornel Prum."

Who are you that to me must be
  The streets, the park, the glitt'ring crowds,
The shops, the smiling pageantry,
  Of field and grove and flying clouds,
  O Cornel Prum?

Till war has ceased to rage and flame
  Must I sit thus in horrid gloom,
Staring at your infernal name,
  The maddening name of "Cornel Prum,"
  O Cornel Prum?

Temperance Among Soldiers.

A large number of Canadians from the camps were present at the annual meeting of the Royal Army Temperance Association held in England recently, when the Duke of Connaught expressed his pleasure at hearing that many of them were pledged as members. He hoped they would return to Canada and set a splendid example. Sir Hamar Greenwood in a strong speech said the wave of temperance had swept across the world since the war, which was irresistible, and would ultimately result in a teetotal world. There was no insobriety in the army and navy. It was the civilian who kept the breweries going and the politicians were afraid to talk to him. Referring to the camp canteen question he said the Canadians had fair ground for grievance, and though as a soldier he did not question higher commands, whether right or wrong, he hoped this matter would soon be remedied.

Call Him "Heiney."

With the Canadian troops, the nickname "Heiney" has almost replaced "Boche" as a name for the enemy. Frequently used alternatives are "Fritz," "Hun," and "Honey."

The king can do no wrong—if the other fellow holds all the aces.

Quebec Officer a Brilliant Soldier

TORONTO and Eastern Ontario men fought under Major-General David Watson in the second battle of Ypres. The Toronto men who were in his battalion at St. Julien, when the Canadians stopped the German rush for Calais, were the members of the 9th Mississauga Horse, who volunteered for service in France when hostilities started in August, 1914. There were, perhaps, one hundred Torontonians in the second battalion; the other thousand had joined the colors in Glengarry, Northumberland, Hastings, Ontario, Prince Edward, Peterboro, Cornwall, Kingston, and other Eastern Ontario towns and counties.

Major-General Watson is at present in command of the 4th Canadian Division, which should be about twenty thousand strong, and "somewhere beyond the Vimy Ridge."

As head of The Chronicle, an English morning newspaper in the historic city of Quebec, as a former lacrosse and hockey star, and as Past Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Order in Quebec and Three Rivers, he was well known in various parts of the Dominion. There are many prominent business men who know him and few newspapermen and sportsmen who did not know "Dave" Watson.

He was born in Quebec on February 7, 1869, the son of William and Jean (Grant) Watson. He joined The Quebec Chronicle staff when just turned twenty years of age, and some twelve years later succeeded Horace Wallace as general manager. That was about 1904. Two years later he became managing director and in 1909 he was a delegate to the Imperial Press Conference. In addition to his newspaper work he took an active interest in athletics and military matters. In his younger days he was one of the most brilliant hockey and lacrosse players of his native Province. He was one of the most enthusiastic members of the 8th Royal Rifles, and when war broke out was commanding officer of that regiment, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. He holds the long-service medal in addition to the other honors bestowed upon him for distinguished service in the great war. In 1911 he was appointed by the Ottawa Government to command the Rifle Company of the Canadian contingent, which attended the Coronation of the King. He married, in 1896, a Quebec woman by the name of Mary Browning, and has three daughters. He is described as an "Independent Conservative" in politics, and he is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

It can truly be said that General Watson was one of the first Canadians at Valcartier, because he was there before the Government bought the land for that great training camp. It was he who took General Sir Sam Hughes down there and urged him to acquire the land for what in a few days was transformed from a veritable "Sleepy Hollow" into one of the finest military camps in the world.

When the call to arms was sounded in August, 1914, Lieut.-Colonel David Watson left his newspaper office, mobilized his regiment and proceeded forthwith to Valcartier. His services and his resources were placed at the disposal of his country. No time was lost in organising the volunteers from all parts of Canada into battalions, batteries, and brigades, and it fell to Lieut.-Colonel Watson's lot to take command of the 2nd Battalion. With these men he sailed some weeks later for England. At Salisbury Plain his regiment had the honor of escorting the Princess Pats to the railway station, the Princess Pats being the first Canadian infantry unit to leave Salisbury en route to the front. The following February, a few months after the outbreak of hostilities, Colonel Watson and his battalion arrived in Flanders, and it is officially recorded that the colonel carried himself "gallantly and resourcefully" throughout the second battle of Ypres, and that some of the last blows struck by the Canadians in that fierce struggle were delivered by those in his battalion. It is further written of him that on the third day of the great battle he was called upon to perform as difficult and dangerous a task as fell to the lot of any commander, and that he crowned his success with a deed of personal heroism which but for his rank would have won for him the Victoria Cross. In a spray of bullets and flying shrapnel Colonel Watson noticed one of his officers, Lieut. A. H. Hugill, lying on the ground, sixty yards away, in the direction of the enemy's attack. Without a moment's hesitation Colonel Watson went back to him, thinking he was wounded. Fortunately he was just resting to recover his breath before making another rush. Almost at the same moment Private Wilson, also of the 2nd Battalion, was passing nearby when he was shot through the leg.

The Colonel suggested to the Lieutenant that they might carry the wounded man back and Hugill agreed, whereupon Colonel Watson knelt down, got Wilson on his back and staggered with him through a hail of bullets to a place of comparative safety nearly half a mile back.

After the Second Contingent reached the front Lieut.-Col. Watson was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General of the 5th Brigade. His distinguished service and gallantry continued. He fought with distinction at St. Eloi and at other places where the Canadians were engaged, and now commands the 4th Division, Canadians with the rank of major-general.

"MAKE YOUR DOLLARS FIGHT AT THE FRONT"

Help Canada Maintain Her Financial Freedom !

Do Your Share towards Financing the War with Canadian Savings Rather than with Outside Capital.

THE problem of meeting the enormous cost of this war is twofold. Not only must Canada get the money—most of it, of course, as loans—but she must get as much of it as possible here in Canada.

We can carry the war-debt if the bulk of the interest goes to Canadians, and so is used again in the country's development. But it will be a serious matter for us if a large proportion of the interest has to be sent outside the Dominion.

For the sake of our own and our children's future this drain on our resources must be avoided! Canada's financial freedom can and must be maintained! An average saving of 15 cents a day, invested by each man, woman and child in Canada in War Savings Certificates, would enable us to carry the whole cost of the war. To approach this average, hard work, thrift, self-denial and sacrifice are required of every citizen.

For each $21.50 you lend the Government now, you will receive $25.00 in three years—or you can get your money back at any time. Certificates are issued in denominations of $25, $50 and $100, and may be purchased at any Bank or Money Order Post Office. 22

CHANGING PATRIOTIC POEMS.

One Effect of New Friendships Among Nations.

War has had some odd effects on national poetry. Here in Canada we became so very humane in times of peace that we hesitated to sing the verse in the national anthem about "frustrating the knavish tricks" of our enemies. Now we shout it quite lustily without a single qualm. Recently we have heard that the Americans may change one verse in "The Star-spangled Banner" so that it will not worry the British and Canadians. Quite lately some American suggested that the line in Longfellow's poem "Paul Revere's Ride," which reads,

If the British march by land or by sea.

If the enemy march by land or by sea.

It was considered that the alteration might please Canadians. However, it is not at all probable that many people in this country want the Americans to mutilate their literature and repudiate their history because the nations have become friends. In fact if any Briton or Canadians happens to be reading Longfellow's poem, he will doubtless be glad to think that these two Anglo-Saxon nations are not marching against one another. That would be our chief thought. We do not want Uncle Sam to give up his heroic literature in order to flatter us.

The English, by the way, are not making any haste to amend their own literature by cutting out of it the numerous hostile references to their present allies, the French. They have not cut this line out of Shakespeare's "King John"—

Go I to make the French lay down their arms.

They may even continue to sing, as in Palgrave's "Crecy,"

The legions of France are no more!

Even so recent an English poet as Sir Henry Newbolt has seen fit to tell how

The Frenchmen turned like a covey down the wind
When Hawke came swooping from the West.

Scott's heroic poetry is largely a rhythmic anathema of England, telling as in "Flodden" how the "English hosts,"

Their King, their Lords, their mightiest low,
They melted from the field as snow;

but the English had their revenge in more than one chant against the Scotch, and the same songs are sung to-day on both sides of the border.

Do our expurgators fancy that in view of the joint operations of Russians and Englishmen in this war, these two lines will be expunged from "The Charge of the Light Brigade"?—

Right through the line they broke;
Cossack and Russian
Reeled from the sabre-stroke,
Shattered and sundered.

The literature of their wars against one another has truly helped Britons, Frenchmen, and Russians to fight the more valiantly, perhaps the more harmoniously, side by side now. We have no doubt that the unexpurgated "Ride of Paul Revere" inspired many men to fight with the British now.

War: A Sonnet.

The following sonnet was found scribbled on a sheet of paper among the effects returned to Canada of the late Major Miles Langstaff, the well-known young Toronto barrister, of the 75th Battalion, who was killed in action:

I never thought that strange, romantic War
Would shape my life and plan my destiny;
Though in my childhood's dreams I've seen his car
And grisly steeds flash grimly thwart the sky.
Yet now behold a vaster, mightier strife
Than echoed on the plains of sounding Troy,
Defeats and triumphs, death, wounds, laughter, life,
All mingled in a strange complex alloy.
I view the panorama in a trance
Of awe, yet colored with a secret joy,
For I have breathed in epic and romance,
Have lived the dreams that thrilled me as a boy!
How sound the ancient saying is, forsooth!
How weak is Fancy's gloss of Fact's stern truth!

Fats as Foods.

Man needs a varied diet, and in the main the classification most suited to ordinary understanding is fats, proteids, and carbohydrates. Many other things are essential in a fully-balanced diet if one would enjoy that state of existence known as being in good health. A proper amount of water, a more careful attention to the important factors. No one can live any length of time in good health if there is not in their diet a proper proportion of all these elements, and it is hard to say that one is more important than the other, so closely allied are they one to another, and for their full action depend so much on the action of each to the other in the body. Fat forms about 15 per cent. of the weight of the body, and is found in all its parts. It occurs in the largest masses just under the skin, but is scattered in small amounts in all our tissues. In our food we get fat from the animal kingdom meat, butter, milk, and eggs. From the vegetable kingdom we get it from the various oils, olives, cottonseed, peanuts, etc., certain cereals, and nuts. Some food which we eat is changed into fat by chemical action in the body. Food, sugar, and starch are so changed and are thus stored up in the body as reserve fat to be drawn upon if the fat is deficient in our diet.

Well, old fellow, what d'you thing of this for happy married life?

Gosh! Algy you have the real thing here. Gess I'll have to do likewise.

You ought to, Bill. You don't know what you're missin'.

Say, Algy, that was some dinner you're wife gave us. Those New Potatoes were New, and those Green Peas were Greens and, Gosh! I was a hog on that ham.

Yes, Bill, my wife knows how to fix it; and, better still, she knows how to Buy it. Why, those Potatoes were only 85c a peck, and that Ham only $1.25, or 29c a pound. But you wait till you see her teas

Oh! Well, Algy, they all do that.

Do what, Bill?

Why, what you said—tease.

Silly Mutt! I didn't say tease. I said Teas

Here, don't you call me names Didn't I say Tease.

Oh! pshaw! Bill, I mean drink

Oh! hush, Algy, you don't mean that sweet little wife drinks.

Of course she does, Bill, and she knows how to make it and where to buy it.

Oh Gosh! Algy: this is awful, old chap. I'm sorry for you.

Look here, Bill. Do you want a row? What d'you want to be sorry for 'cause my wife makes good tea?

Eh! Oh-o-o! I see Ha-Ha Ha I thought you meant T-E-A-Z-E.

Oh! don't say a word, Bill, she can do that, too.

(Four hours later)

Well, Bill, what d'you thing of that for supper?

Gee! Algy! I think it's all you said and then some That Tea was the best I've tasted yet, and your wfe says she only pays 40c a pound for it. And that Cream Custard wth Red currants was as good as the Strawberries, and I could hardly believe those Currants were only 10c a can. You must have some very cheap stores here.

Oh! no, Bill. It's my wife knows the one that is cheap. He's a gem, and she swears by him.

That's better than swearin' at him. Algy Gosh! It makes me wish I was married. Think that grocer could find me a wife as nice as his goods?

I don't know, Bill, but he advertises "Families supplied to order." So perhaps he could fix you up.

Guess I'll call on him What's his address?

Remnants of cereal breakfast foods may often be employed in the making of palatable dishes, thickening soups, etc. Thus, for example, small quantities of cooked cereal left over from a meal can be molded in cups and reheated for later use by setting the cups in boiling water.

THE HOUSEKEEPERS' GUIDE

Watch the advertisements on this page,
They will appear every Friday.

HINTS FOR THE HOUSEKEEPER

Never use gasoline in a room with fire or light.

A baby's dress that opens the full length of the back launders very easily.

A cup inverted in the centre of a meat pie will keep the juice from running over.

Buckwheat makes an excellent breakfast cereal.

New potatoes are more delicious baked than old ones.

Fruit used in frozen fruit should always be cut or mashed.

Fish is excellent food and not eaten nearly enough.

The most economical way of preparing fish is by steaming.

Potato salad with sardines and olives is an agreeable change.

All the water should be drawn from the tub before the ice cream is packed.

Carrots scrubbed clean and shedded raw are good added to a hot dish like soup.

Don't regard any time-saving method of doing housework as shiftless; it isn't.

Dry beans can be cooked in a variety of ways. No more nutritious food article is grown. Learn to make frequent use of them.

Rochester has made arrangements to open nine of the public schools this summer as canning kitchens for the housewives of the neighborhood. If the patronage warrants, the work will be extended to all the public schools.

Orange County, N. Y., clubwomen are running a special food demonstration train throughout the county to informs housewives on best methods of food conservation. A special coach has been fitled up as nursery, where mothers can leave babies while attending lectures.

Make an inventory of foods and household supplies. This should reveal any waste, extravagance or carelessness. Get rid of the nonessentials. What is not necessary, sell or give to a relief association.

Investigate the kitchen and those who work in the kitchen. Stop all leaks. It is just as scientific to use and serve foods rightly as it is to learn how to find the range of the enemy.

Preparation in advance for the family meals is essential. While the delicatessen store is a convenience, do not let it be a family habit.

A tightly rolled piece of cloth is an excellent thing for rubbing spots off clothing.

Shirtwaists can frequently be cut down to be used in the dresses of small children.

Linen will have a more beautiful texture if it is ironed only on the wrong side.

Children can eat a very little well cooked bacon now and then with great advantage.

Bread to be wholesome for any member of the family should be thoroughly baked.

One way to prepare rice is to put it in a cotton bag and drop the same into a kettleful of boiling water.

Buy by weight. Disregard the measure. Insist upon correct weight. Patronize a responsible merchant. By insisting on full weight you obtain the full amount of food for which you are paying.

So far as possible relieve the dealer of delivery of goods. Ask him for a discount, and take care of your own deliveries. If you cannot do it yourself, ask the children to help out or the servants.

Great results are expected from the dehydrating processes, which have been much improved and are being made use of more extensively this year than ever before. All kinds of vegetables may be dried, so that practically none of the abundant garden stuff need be wasted.

Change your food habits casually as you would change your shoes. Look around you and see the variety of foods that you never heard of or saw before. They are all good to eat, and catholicity of taste is the foe of speculators who corner staples.

MEAT RECIPES

The average housewife is having a difficult time these days to make ends meet and yet manage to provide her family with the food they have been accustomed to. Meat, for example, has risen in price, but has it ever occurred to you to make use of the cheaper cuts of meat?

Properly prepared simple dishes of the cheaper cuts of meat contain more nutrient qualities than the expensive cuts, and at the same time tempt the appetite and satisfy the hunger. These may require a little more time to prepare, but the results will fully compensate you for your trouble. For instance,some of the following recipes may prove useful:

Steak Birds.—Small pieces of thin round steak, in which are rolled one slice of bacon and half an onion; tie up and dredge in flour and brown in a frying pan; add a little piece of butter and hot water to cover; let simmer for one and one-half hours.

Chuck Pot Roast.—Salt and dredge in flour about 4 pounds of chuck beef, and brown thoroughly on both sides in the skillet; add hot water and vegetables (carrots, turnips, onions, etc.); let simmer for two hours. This makes delicious gravy.

Braised Beef.—Chuck steak, about three inches thick(about two pounds) place in a hot skillet and turn so that it is seared on both sides, to prevent escape of juices. In a covered baking pan make a bed of chopped vegetables (potatoes, turnips, carrots, onions, etc.); season well. Place upon it the beef with enough water to keep it steaming for four hours. Cover this tight.

Stuffed Flank Steak.—Bread (that has been soaked in water), one egg, one onion, salt, pepper and a little sage—makes a delicious dressing for stuffed flank steak. Spread this dressing on a thick flank steak, season, roll it up, and tie and roast in tightly covered pot. Serve with gravy.

RUMOR KAISER HAS ABDICATED

CAPT. BURNHAM AGAIN AT ODDS WITH GOVERNMENT

With Three Other Conservatives He Opposes Amendment Proposed by Sir Robert Borden to Exempt Divinity Students.

Ottawa, July 14.—The chief interest of the day in Parliament Friday night, however, centred about an amendment proposed by Sir Robert Borden exempting divinity students. This was vigorously attacked from both sides of the house, and practically no one came to the defence of the prime minister except Dr. Clark (Red Deer), Hon. Charles Mareil and Mr. Prouix, of Prescott. The amendment was adopted, but there is every reason to believe that it will be reconsidered before the bill is finally passed. The insurgent Conservatives included Messrs. Morphy (North Perth), Burnham (West Peterborough), Schaffner (Souris), and Currie (N. Simcoe).

In France At Once.

The conscription bill is still in committee, but all of its clauses together with the preamble have been adopted, and it will no doubt be reported to the house today. Several important amendments were made. One of these brings the bill into force immediately instead of holding it in abeyance until proclaimed by the governor-in-council; another prevents any summary suppression of a newspaper which interfered with the execution of the law without the consent of the central appeal judge.

Red Cross Ladies Were Early at Work

Appeal Meets With a General Response and Sale of Tags Lively.

The ladies of the Red Cross were up bright and early this morning, tagging the citizens in aid of the Peterborough prisoners of war.

The ladies were very attractive in their Red Cross uniforms, and a number of owners of cars had given their machines over to the society and these were appropriately decorated with flags and used in transferring the ladies from one place to another with fresh supplies of tags.

Every business house and office was invaded by the taggers, and it was a hard-hearted person who could refuse to help in the noble work for the brave Peterborough boys now in the Hun prison camps.

The Red Cross appeals always meet with a ready response, and judging by the weight of a few of the boxes the contributions will be equal, if not better, than on any other occasion.

Reichstag Holds up War Credit Vote

GERMANY'S PARLIAMENT IS ON STRIKE— SITUATION SERIOUS.

Copenhagen, July 14.—Serious news came from Berlin late yesterday. The reichstag has gone on strike and the members have decided to suspend the labors, both of the full house and the main committee, until the political situation is cleared up. This leaves the war credit bill in abeyance.

Emperor William has summoned Field Marshall Von Hindenburg, chief of the general staff, and General Ludendorff, the chief quartermaster-general, for a conference.

This news should be interpreted in connection with intimations that the German Government has decided to refuse to parliamentiarize the cabinet and difficulties reported in connection with the adoption of a peace resolution.

MATTHEWS-BLACKWELL COMPANY ASK PREMEIR TO INVESTIGATE REPORT OF FOOD COMMISSIONER

Claim That Official Has Done Them Rank Injustice in His Findings Based on Their Monthly Reports to Government—Ask Sir Robert Borden for Investigation.

The Matthews-Blackwell Company have sent the following telegram to Ottawa:

"Have read in this morning's papers statement given out by W. F. O'Connor, giving our profits on bacon for year 1916 and former years, supposed to be compiled from our confidential figures rendered Mr. O'Connor on your Government authority. The accounting rendered him does not warrant any such figures, which are grossly wrong and misleading, and their publication is most unfair, and will do serious injury to the packing industry, in lessening production of hogs and creating prejudice in the public mind that is entirely unwarranted and not true to facts. We must ask that correction be made at once, and publicity given to correct, as far as possible, the lamentable injustice done us."

MONTHLY STATEMENT.

The blank form which the packing houses are required to fill out by the Government for the purposes of war taxation, is as follows, so far as the bacon department is concerned:

Firm........................

Goods the property of the firm:
1—Quantity on hand 1st day of month:
2—Quantity received during month, and cost laid down in warehouse:
3—Quantity disposed of and removed from warehouse: and different prices at which sold:

Goods stored for others:
1—Quantity on hand 1st day of month:
2—Quantity received during month:
3—Quantity removed during month:

The directors of the companies claim that there is nothing in their monthly statements to justify the deductions made by Food Commissioner O'Connor in his report to the Minister of Labor, which report was made public and laid before Parliament yesterday. The Food Commissioner, it is claimed, has become bewildered and erred in hs figures.

When the war broke out the packng house men offered to turn over their establishments to the Government. This offer was declined, and all the bacon sold has been disposed of in the open market. No firm or firms has, it is maintained, anything like a monopoly of the business, and if one concern did a larger trade than another, this was due entirely to enterprise, and not because of any unfair advantage.

The monthly statements filed by the packing houses are audited by Price, Whitehouse & Co., and this should be a guarantee of their correctness. The figures of Mr. O'Connor are based on these reports, and the firms interested are satisfied that his deductions are at fault.

Both the Matthews-Blackwell Co. and the firm of which Sir Joseph Flavelle is a member have asked the Government to order an investigation of Mr. O'Connor's report, and claim that they will have no difficulty in proving that he is in error.

RED CROSS PIG BROUGHT $55.10

The Peterborough Red Cross Society received a check today from Mr. David Breckenridge, of Westwood, amounting to $55.10, being the proceeds of a sale of a hog.

Some time ago the little pig was set aside by Mr. Breckenridge and was to be known as the "Red Cross Pig." It was carefully fed and a few days ago was sold along with a number of other hogs to a local dealer. The animal was weighed separately and tipped the scales at 380 lbs. and sold at 14½c per lb.

This original idea of Mr. Breckenridge will doubtless be followed by other suggestions of a similar nature. The proceeds go to a good cause and the Society appreciates Mr. Breckenridge's donation.

WAS SHOCKED BY LIVE WIRE

EDWARD JONES RESTORED WITH THE AID OF PULMOTOR.

Edward Jones, 580 Chamberlain street was severely shocked at the factory of the Henry Hope Co. by coming in contact with a light wire when he was standing in some water on the floor.

The shock rendered him unconscious even if it was only 125 volts and a call was at once sent in for the pulmotor and it was there in short order. The fellow employees of the man had rendered first aid and he was partly conscious when the Chief and firemen arrived. The pulmotor was used for some time and Mr. Jones was taken to his home. There was a report in circulation that the man had been killed by a very heavy shock. He was recovering rapidly last evening.

THE PRICE OF PEACE.

Harmony Cost Cavan Couple $200 and Costs.

A resident of the Township of Cavan ordered a case of whiskey from Montreal and in due course the consignment reached the Cavanville station and was taken home by the purchaser. His wife, however, objected to the vile stuff having a place in the home and to preserve peace in the family, the hubby stored the case in the barn. In making his rounds License Inspector Gooderich visited this home and also the barn. He found the case of wet goods and immediately laid an information for keeping liquor in a place other than his residence. The defendant apepared in court at Port Hope, pleaded guilty and was fined two hundred dollars and costs.

HAVELOCK MEN PLEAD GUILTY

ONE IS FINED $200.00 FOR KEEPING LIQUOR OUT OF PLACE.

County Magistrate Langley held a session of his court at Havelock yesterday afternoon and heard two cases in which breaches of the Ontario Temperance Act were involved.

The charges were laid by License Inspector Joseph Stewart after the residents of that locality had sent in complaints of a carousal by certain parties. John Lytle of Havelock pleaded guilty to the charge of having liquor in a place other than his residence, and was fined $200 and $15 costs. Archie McIntyre of Havelock pleaded "Not guilty" to a similar charge, and after hearing the evidence the case was adjourned for argument at Peterborough Court House on Tuesday at 10 a.m.

Crown Attorney Hatton prosecuted and Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the defendant.

SHOT-SHATTERED FLAGS CARRIED THROUGH PARIS

People Join in Celebrating National Fete With Fervor and Great Joy Unknown for Years -Chosen Veterans in Parade--Two Women and Child Killed by Airplane

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, July 14.—Paris wept and cheered at the sight of the battle-torn flags brought from the front and caried through the streets today, France's national fete, the anniversary of the taking of the Bastille. The Cross of the Legion of Honor, the the Military Medal, or War Cross swung from ribbons above each of the 134 flags, and with each flag marched thirty men picked from the regiment — men who had been through infernos, most of them recovered from wounds, each of them exceptional among so many brave men for deeds they have done. The day was celebrated with a fervor and a quiet joy unknown for years.

TWO WOMEN KILLED

Paris, July 14.—There was active artillery fighting last night near St. Quentin and on the Aisne front between Craonne and Courcey, the War Office reports. German attempts to raid trenches south of St. Quentin were crushed. The French made a successful raid west of Navarin Farm. On the Verdun front at Hill 304 and in Woevre artillery was active.

A German airplane dropped bombs near Nancy. Two women and one child were killed.

HARDEST FIGHT IN CLOUDS SINCE WAR BROKE OUT

Fourteen German Airships Driven Down and Sixteen Out of Control—Nine British Machines Are Missing.

London, July 14. — British airmen have been victorious in the most severe aerial fighting since the beginning of the war. On the front in France on Thursday fourteen German airplanes were brought down out of control, says the official statement from the British headquarters in France last night. Nine British machines are reported to have been lost in the fighting. The statement reads:

"Enemy detachments which endeavored to approach our lines early this morning west of Queant, were dispersed and driven off by our fire.

"Wednesday night bombing operations against enemy railway stations, shelters and airdromes were carried out with success. All our machines returned.

"Yesterday there was increasing aerial activity on both sides from dawn until late at night. The fighting, which resulted greatly in our favor, was the most severe experienced since the commencement of the war.

"Continuous engagements took place between large formations, consisting in some cases of as many as thirty machines. As a result of these encounters, fourteen German airplanes were brought down, three of which fell within our lines. Sixteen other hostile machines were driven down out of control, and in additon one enemy machine was shot down by a direct hit from our antiaircraft guns.

"While our scout machines were engaged in fighting, other British airplanes took many photographs. Bombing of the enemy's airdromes, dumps and railway stations was continued, and a large number of bombs was dropped with good results.

"Nine of our machines are missing."

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

PETERBOROUGH SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1917

THE STRIKE IN TORONTO.

THE TROUBLE between the employes and directors of the Toronto Street Railway Company is to be finally settled by the operation of the Industrial Disputes Act, at least an attempt is to be made to so dispose of it. The union will appoint a member of the Conciliation Board and the directors another. These will choose a chairman, but, if unable to agree on a selection, the Minister of Labor will appoint that official. This tribunal will then decide whether the men are entitled to the increase of ten cents an hour which they ask for. Pending final settlement the men are to receive six cents an hour above the old scale.

The Industrial Disputes Act has for years been in disfavor with the workingmen, and they have asked for its repeal time after time. They have ignored it in the past on the ground that it was unfair in its operation. No matter what the award may be, there is no provision in the law to compel either party to the dispute to accept the finding of the Board of Conciliation. The employes have been as a rule satisfied with such finding only when it is in their favor. When men are thoroughly organised they have nothing to fear. When their organization is weak the Industrial Disputes Act affords them no assistance.

The street railway men in Toronto have a union which includes every employe. More than that, public opinion has been solidly at their back since the trouble first started. There were nearly two thousand men on strike in Toronto, the transportation system was tied up, and yet there was not the slightest sign of disorder anywhere. The conviction of the men that their cause was just was strengthened by the sympathy which they received from the very people who were most inconvenienced by the strike.

The Industrial Disputes Act should either be amended or repealed. There is little sense in keeping on the statute books any law which is repeatedly ignored and ignored with impunity. The Act itself may be benign in its aims, but there are defects in the measure and it has not always been operated fairly. Often when the men in any concern asked for a Board of Conciliation, their request has been ignored by the Minister of Labor because the employers were opposed to such arbitration.

In Toronto the first trouble is likely to arise over the constitution of the Board. The men have selected as their representative Mr. David Carey, who is prominent in the labor movement and who is associate editor of the Toronto Telegram. The company has yet to make its selection, but the main appointment is that of the chairman. If the two arbiters fail to make a selection, the choice will be up to the Minister of Labor, and the difficulty will be in finding a man who will do justice between the parties to the dispute and not unduly favor one side or the other. The entire decision really rests with the chairman, who has the casting vote.

The men themselves agreed to arbitration under the Industrial Disputes Act rather than by an independent board, as the company proposed. They could afford to accept either, as in the present state of public opinion there is no doubt about the union's final victory, no matter what steps may be taken to secure it.

THE SITUATION IN GERMANY.

FROM THE intelligence that is allowed to filter through the German censorship it is evident that conditions in that Empire are serious and that the people are on the verge of revolt. The Kaiser is aware of the temper of his people, otherwise he would never consent to the electoral reform which he has just decreed. The resignation of the chancellor is insisted upon, not by the Emperor, but by the people, who are convinced that the war will be continued with insane pertinacity while he is at the head of affairs, and that peace, without indemnities or otherwise, is impossible.

The Kaiser has attempted to placate his subjects by offering to extend the power of the people. From the despatches sent out yesterday, it is evident that the masses are after bigger game than that of the chancellor and that they will insist upon the retirement of the Kaiser himself. That is the deduction made by Stewart Lyon ,the special representative of the Canadian Press, and his opinion is entitled to every consideration. Peace for Germany is held to be impossible until the Kaiser is dethroned and his family placed out of the line of succession. In other words, the example of the Russian people is having its effect upon the German masses and they are beginning to realize that their only hope is the overthrow of the autocracy and the setting up of a republic.

The Germans have been deceived by artful autocrats for the past three years. They at last, apparently, realize that the war is hopelessly lost and that there will be no peace for them until those charged with the management of affairs are got out of the way.

The German people want peace at any price. They are weary of the senseless slaughter, of sacrifice after sacrifice that leads to nothing. With the organisation of a republic would come the early collapse of the war., and such a peace as would ensure the tranquility of Europe indefinitely.

Today there comes from Berlin the most significant news yet received. The cables tell us that the members of the Reichstag have gone on strike and refuse to vote any more war credits. If that is so, it marks the beginning of the end.

FOR PUBLIC OWNERSHIP.

IF THE TORONTO street car system had been owned by the public instead of by a private corporation, there would have been no strike. The men would have been given a fair living wage without the necessity of resorting to the bludgeon to obtain it.

The London street car employes, who work for the Hydro Commission, asked for more pay, and Sir Adam Beck, after a conference with the men, granted their demands.

The new man who acts as conductor or motorman on the Peterborough street railway, receives the munificent allowance of 18 cents an hour. The highest pay is 22½ cents. Living expenses are not much, if any, lower, in this city than in Toronto, where the men are asking 36 and 40 cents an hour, with every prospect of obtaining it. The local conductors and motormen are naturally looking for more pay. They are assured of this from the simple fact that their present employers are the Hydro Commission and not a private concern.

ABANDONING PUBLIC WORKS.

ALL BUT THE MOST essential public works, civic, provincial or federal, should be abandoned while the war is in progress. The labor problem is the great question today. Every man of working age should be available for some duty connected with the winnnig of the war.

There is another argument that can be used with still greater force in this connection. When the war is over, conditions are sure to change. There may be as much difficulty then in finding work as there is in securing workers today. That will be the opportune time for embarking on a campaign of public works.

The City Council has certainly adopted the part of wisdom in deciding to abandon all civic work that is not absolutely necessary. The day may come again when, as three years ago, the city was obliged to give employment to men in order to keep them from becoming wards of the charities.

Wit and Wisdom

Her Own Medicine

Bridget had proved to be all that a servant should b in regard to her duties, but, unfortunately, her energies never seemed to extend to keeping her own face clean.

Her mistress desired to tell her to wash her smutty countenance, but not wanting to offend such a treasure, she resorted to strategy.

"Do you know, Bridget," she remarked in a confidential manner, "that if you wash your face in hot soapy water it will make you beautiful?"

"Shure, an' it's a wonder ye niver thried it yersilf, ma'am," was Bridget's surprised and surprising answer.

Thrift

Few things have suffered a bigger smack from the desolating hand of war than wood. At the present time a bundle of firewood of most delicate physique costs a penny.

A watchman was discovered asleep minus his wooden leg, and a friendly wayfarer awoke him exclaiming:

"Hey, man, they've stolen your leg."

The sleeper sat up and glowered.

"Did ye think," said he, sarcastically, "that I wud gang tae sleep in this locality wi' onything about me for burpin'? The wife takes away ma leg every nicht and brings it back in the mornin'."

Learned Too Late

An old man living in South Berkshire was leading two lively calves out to early pasture in the morning. When he came to a field he tied one of the calves to one of his boot straps, while he opened the rickety gate. The calves ran away. When he was picked up his wife asked him:

"Didn't you know any better than to do a trick like that?"

"Yes," he answered. I hadn't been dragged four rods before I saw my mistake."

No Need

Mrs. Jenkinson, a regular visitor in the doctor's consulting room, started on the long story of her troubles. The doctor endured it patiently and gave her another bottle. At last she started to go, and the doctor was congratulating himself when she stopped and exclaimed:

"Why, doctor, you didn't look to see if my tongue was coated."

"I know it isn't," wearily replied th mdical man. "You don't find grass on a motor speedway."

How It Worked

A Scotsman who suffered terribly from insomnia was advised to consult a specialist. When the consultation was over, the unsophisticated old man asked what there was to pay.

"One guinea," said the doctor, and the old man paid it. Then he returned home. Later, recounting his experience, he said, with a pathetic quaver in his voice:

"Yon man cured me sleeplessness! Dae ken. I coodna sleep for a hale fortnicht efter thinkin' on what I had to pay him!"

The Cry Unheeded

A certain man broke through the ice. As the freezing waters clutched him he screeched most eerily for help. Another man came running up, and then detecting the identity of the gentleman in the drink, turned and sauntered away, whistling.

"He was one of those cold bath cranks," he explained next day to the reporters.

OFFICERS' TRIBUTES TO LATE CAPT. HAROLD HILL

Those Who Knew Him Intimately Testify to His Manly Qualities and Tell How in a Double Sense He Gave His Life for Others

Capt. W. H. Hill has received the following letters from Europe touching the death of his son, Capt. Harold F. Hill, who lost his life at Vimy Ridge while aiding a soldier who had fallen. In a double sense the gallant young officer gave his life for others. At the time of his death he was discharging the duties of adjutant and need not have exposed himself to the enemy's fire but he could not ignore the opportunity to go out and extend all possible aid to those who were wounded. The letters from the front are as follows:

From the Chaplain.

Dear Mr. Hill:—

As it was my sad duty to officiate at the funeral of your son, Capt. H. F. Hill, I am taking this opportunity of sending you a few particulars concerning his death and burial. He was killed early in the famous attack on Vimy Ridge, while helping in a wounded soldier. Never did a nobler death come to a bright and promising young man. Your son was in my opinion one of the finest types of officers in the Canadian Army—clean limbed, athletic, a brilliant, well balanced mind and of high moral ideals. The Battalion has suffered an irretrievable loss in the death of your brave son. Personally I have lost one of my dearest friends, for during the months in which we had been associated together in the 38th Battalion. I learned to love your son very much.

It will comfort you to know that his body was brought back for burial to a military cemetery some distance back of the line where his grave will be undisturbed by the desecrating shells of the enemy. Already a cross has been erected over his grave by his brother officers. The military authorities will not allow us to disclose the location of the cemetery but if you will write the following address, they will give you the desired information and send you a photograph of the grave if you request it.

Director of Graves, Registration and Enquiries,
War Office, Winchester House,

Yours sincerely.

To Save Others.

In the Field, France.

Mr. W. H. Hill,
Peterborough, Ontario.

My Dear Mr. Hill:—

I had a letter from my wife yesterday in which she said she had seen Major McPherson who was with us and that he had asked her to have me write you re Harold's death. Also she sent me your address. I understand the Colonel wrote you but as I think I was the last of Harold's brother officers to see him alive, perhaps you would like a line from me telling you what I know of his very gallant death. He died, as he had always lived, a true gentleman, in trying to save the life of another. Harold and I were standing together on the parapet of a trench during our attack on the 9th of April and were trying to locate the position of our battalion after the waves had gone over. Harold had been over and brought back certain information, by this time the German counter barrage was very heavy and I suggested that as we could do no good where we were we get down into the trench. This we did and were walking along same to the dugout, I in the lead. I was talking to Harold over my shoulder and noting that he did not answer I turned round to see where he was and saw he was not following me. Thinking he had gone down the other entrance I went down and on not finding him there I went up to where I had last seen him, but he was not there. I then went along the trench which had quite a few dead in it and examined them but he was not there. I went forward as far as the communication trench and still could not see any sign of him, so went back to the dugout in the hopes he had gone down the communication trench to the dugout, and while in here our Colonel came in, wounded. This left the command of the Battalion on me and for a while I was very busy, but I sent a couple of runners along our front line and our support line thinking he might be wounded, but they returned saying they could see nothing of him. I then went down to the dressing station to see if he had passed through there and while asking about him a wounded man spoke up and said that Capt. Hill had been killed while helping him in. It appears that when we got down into the trench that Harold had looked over the parapet and saw a corporal wounded and trying to make his way through the German barrage to our trench. He had gone out and brought this man in and had seen the man I saw in the dressing station and had then gone out and got him and was bringing him in when German shrapnel exploded over him, killing him instantly. While I know that your grief must be great at losing such a son, I hope that this information of the very gallant manner that he died will somewhat soften it, for he gave his life to save others, the very basis of our Christian religion. I know you must have been proud of Harold as a son. We were all proud of him as a brother officer and feel his loss keenly, but I know you will be more proud of the way he died. May God in His mercy comfort you and Mrs. Hill in your loss. I remain yours in deepest sympathy,

W. S. WOOD,,
Major. 38th Batt'n.

P.S.—We covered Harold's body and buried him with the bodies of Capt. Moore, Mr. Duncan and Mr. Jolliffe who also fell that morning. They lie in separate graves, side by side, in the cemetery at Villus Au Boiu.

Major Parkinson's Tribute.

In the Field. June 12th, 1917.

Capt. W. H. Hill,
Sun Life Ass'nce Co.,
Peterborough, Ont., Can.

My Dear Capt. Hill:—

I have your letter of April 27th and trust that long before this date you have my letter written around April 18th conveying to you my deepest sympathy in the loss you have sustained and adding a tribute to the memory of one of the finest characters the B.E.F. has known. I have also received a copy of the Peterborough Review and can fully appreciate the tributes accorded Harold by those who knew him so intimately and well at home.

I think I was responsible for your son joining the 38th Battalion. I was on a Board of Examiners at Barriefield where he was one of the candidates and after seeing him at work I drew the attention of my comamnding officer to his splendid qualifications as an officer, as a result of which we made application for him. From the very outset he made a unique success of every task assigned to him and so fully did he win our confidence and esteem that when in February it was known I was to give up the work of Adjutant to take up the work of Second in Command he was the choice for the position of Adjutant. For three weeks we worked together while he was talking over these duties and in this period I learned to appreciate his fine qualities even more fully than previously.

The attack on April the 9th commenced at 5.30 a.m. and strictly speaking, he might have remained at headquarters looking after office routine, his courage, enterprise, and devotion to duty caused him to follow up the attacking waves to bring back information as to the attack on the 1st objective. On returning he was again reminded to remain at headquarters, but shortly after hearing some wounded men were being brought in he went into "No Man's Land" to render assistance. It was while helping wounded in this way he was struck by a shell and killed instantly. His body was recovered and taken several miles to the rear and buried some days later in a large military cemetery, with most of our surviving officers present. Our Chaplain, Capt. H. F. Clarke, conducting the burial service over Harold and our other officers who fell.

Naturally, the loss of any officer from this family which has been so closely associated for over two years is severely felt, but throughout the entire battalion no death has so keenly affected us as that of Capt. H. F. Hill, for the simple reason he had our love and respect to a marvelous degree. Every tribute you have paid him in your leter to me, we saw exemplified in his daily life among us, and those Christian qualities to which his former pastor refers, he lived up to every day of his life here. No matter where the end of the day found him, whether in a muddy dugout or comfortable billet, I always saw him kneeling to say his prayers.

As regards his personal effects, our orders provide for the sending of the same to the record office, London, Eng., from which point they are sent on to you. This was done and they should reach you within a short time, although I am well aware of the delay which might occur in their despatch from England. I trust, however, that everything will reach you in due time. The Bank account will be with the Bank of Montreal, as all our accounts are kept there.

Please do not hesitate to write me further at any time if there is any little service I can render you. I am sorry the censor does not permit us to use a camera here or I would send you a photograph of the grave which is suitably marked and very attractively kept up.

I note you are associated with the Sun Life Ass'nce Co. I think that the closest friend I have in the world is Mr. Lyle Reid of Ottawa with the Sun Life and I have no doubt you know him well.

With kind regards and again assuring you of my sincere sympathy, I am.

Yours sincerely,
R. F. PARKINSON, Major,
Commanding 38th Infantry Battnilon.

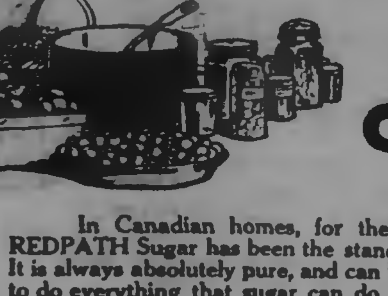
Help to Save Canada's Fruit Crop

A Practical Thrift Suggestion

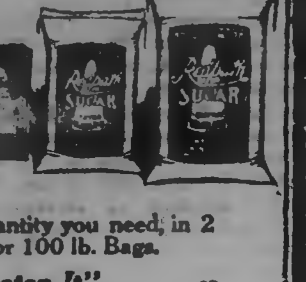
This year, as never before, every quart of Canada's fruit crop should be used to the very best advantage. Though it all ripens within four months, it can be made to supply every table, every day in the year, at moderate cost.

Canning and preserving, done at home at the time when each fruit is cheapest, provide in delicious and economical form the daily fruit so necessary in a wholesome diet. Fruit put up at home is much cheaper than that which you buy, and the slight increase in its cost, due to the higher price of sugar, is small compared with the mounting cost of other foods.

Successful preserving and canning are by no means difficult, either, if you are careful to boil everything, and use



Redpath SUGAR



In Canadian homes, for the last Sixty Years, REDPATH Sugar has been the standby for preserving. It is always absolutely pure, and can be depended upon to do everything that sugar can do to ensure success.

Buy it, according to the quantity you need, in 2 or 5 lb. Cartons, or in 10, 20, 50 or 100 lb. Bags.

THE SALVING OF A DERELICT

By MAURICE DRAKE

And the man who strives with the elemental forces of nature walks in spirit apart from all his kind. He has his craftmark deep branded as surely on his soul as on his knotted hands. The colonist, the engineer, the drainer of bog and marsh, the breaker of untilled land, all serve one Mistress. Her service is not kind, and weaker men must seek other, or stand trial by her laws. She has but one punishment for all offences whatsoever—and that punishment is death. For the bridge builder's unsteady girder—Death. For the clay-founded dam—Death. For the unguarded homestead set in far lands—Death.

But the follower of the sea is set about with this death penalty beyond them all. For the unwary footstep, the indistinct order, the rotten spar, the ill-kept hull, the falsely laid course—for all the one doom sentence, against which there is no appeal. Ignorance is no plea in her stern courts. Wilful negligence or weariness, innocence or rash greed alike are beat to carrion on her leeshores. The mast that human eye unwarily appraised in port snaps before the winter gales; pampero or typhoon drag straight the weak link of the groaning anchor chain; the belated deck cargo of October shifts, and the listing hull dives once too often.

Withal, there is some brave sincerity about her. "Come," says she "and do me service. My face is beautiful, and new and beautiful things have I in one hand for my servants' delight; but, in the other is a naked sword. I speak my warning plain. Slip or grow weary, and you die.

'Ye th' unharnessed waves shall test,
th' immediate gulfs condemn.
Unless ye owe the fates a jest, guard
how ye jest with them.'"

And men look upon her loveliness and go, knowing their doom. And many die. But they that live have knowledge of three things the town-sheltered man may never see. Life they know, and death, too well; but also they have seen her promises and warnings fulfilled in letter and in spirit to the utmost; and lies to them are a weariness of the flesh for evermore. Their craftmark may be seen within their steady eyes—and its name is Truth.

Laurence's listless arms fell to his sides and he looked around the room with heavy eyes. He had discarded his beard, and his clean-shaven lips and jaw showed sallow against the lingering brown of his cheeks. His face was wearied and sneering, and dark pouches showed beneath his eyes.

For three weeks he had, as he himself said, "Lived forty hours in every twenty-four," only to learn what a wiser man learned in the same school [illegible]

All had gone as he had declared it should go. Every pleasant folly that could be bought he had taken to himself; every appetite had been sated to the full. He had frequented strangely diverse places. Race stands knew his face as well as the coulisses of the theatres, and the best that music and the arts could give him he had enjoyed to the full. His bent was eclectic, if his tastes were catholic. That which was best—most costly most sought after—he swore was good enough for him; and only the day before an afternoon at the Academy had preceded a drive to and dinner at Richmond and a riotous supper in this very room, of which evidences now lay in plenty around him.

The housekeeper's perfunctory tidying of the table to lay his breakfast had swept a debris of cards and unsmoked cigarettes to the mantelpiece. A long glove hung from the heap, its fingers dangling over the fireplace, and beneath an armchair lay a dove-colored shoe, of quaintly puritan cut.

He stooped for it and held it at arm's length, remembering how its owner, gathering together her voluminous draperies, had clicked across the pavement on its fellow, her stockinged foot held clear of the cool flagstones, sparrows hopping close about her, fearless in the unfrequented dawn.

"I'll fine you for it, Lucifer," she had laughed from the carriage window. "It's been lost on your premises, and I believe you've stolen it—all for love of poor little me. Sentence of the court will be pronounced in due course—when you come to see me to-morrow. No, it's to-morrow now—this afternoon. Home."

As Laurence held it in his hand some strange throw-back of memory—perhaps the jointing of the pavement suggested alternately lapped deckplates—brought Clitheroe's dead face before him, and he threw the shoe angrily behind the fender. "Ugh!" he said, and shivered; then sat down to his untasted breakfast.

Staled by late hours, his appetite was poor. He drank some coffee and rummaged in the heap upon the mantelpiece for a pipe. Finding none, in a whiff of temper he dragged off the dangling glove and some cigarettes, letting them fall to the floor, and then retired to the bedroom to search his pockets, on his return opening and leaving ajar the outer door of the flat for the convenience of the housekeeper when she should come to clear away his breakfast things.

Sinking into a deep armchair by the window, he blew clouds of smoke into the air, idly watching their thinning flow towards the open casement. Following them, his thoughts wandered into the outer air, northwards, to Leith; northwards, farther yet, to the banks and the weariness of old toil.

How long was it since? Years, surely. Impossible that a short month ago he himself had been on unsteady decks, the sight and sounds of the sea in his eyes and ears, recollections of recent tragedy in his mind.

Five weeks ago Clitheroe was alive—if that existence could be called life. How the fool of a boy had worshipped him! He thought of the mute testimony of the handkerchief that had slipped upon the table beside the tumbler, and compared it with soft voiced protestations, prettily couched, that he had heard but a few hours past. Which were true? Well for him he knew. How would the future taste when it came, if he were weak enough for one moment to forget that the soft protestations were only to be bought with money—were uttered for gain alone? Those same lips that had whispered them had laughed and called him "Lucifer," paying fearless tribute to the wicked strength in him. Clitheroe had worshipped the strength too, good and bad alike—if any good there were. And his payment? Kicks and blows and curses. "I'll fine you for it, Lucifer," she had said.

Never doubt it! In money, or money's equivalent, of course. Curse the money! After all, it bought nothing worth having. Clitheroe's dying curses were more savory. At the worst, they showed genuine admiration of the man he had first heard utter them. Which of his genial acquaintance—which of the owners of the soft voices and sweet lips—would die, racked with agony, in stoic silence, because they imagined he might give to them a place in his memory?

For all the toil and cruelty of that life, it made men. He looked at his scarred hands with the broken finger nails, the roughened skin. To hide them he had gone gloved on all possible occasions; but the fact that they had excited no remark when uncovered angered him again. A hunchback, a squint, a hydrocephalic idiot's defect would have been passed over in [illegible] face. What would the fools have said if the gnarled hands had not been paying for their approval?

Oh, he was weary and sick of it all! He had gulped too deeply—a wiser man would have gone more delicately about it—and now he was sick.

He had meant to go to Paris, he remembered. But what was the use? It would be the same thing there—the same allurements, the same follies, the same weariness of the flesh, ill-used by excesses.

The sea, after all, gave one good thing—Power. The man gave orders—the underman obeyed them; and sternness of strife must first distinguish man from underman. What could this life show half so sweet? Obedience? Yes. Swift and graceful obedience, soft acquiescence, pleasant smiles, pretty speeches, kisses bought to order. But money bought them, not the strong right arm, the clear command. Any puny fool with a rent roll could outbuy him in the market.

He tried to picture any one of the men who had been his guests of the night before cowing the crew of the Fairy Belle, and half regretted he had not brought maimed Jock Menzies with him as servant to swell his poor triumph here. Uncouth Caliban would have heightened the beauties of Lais and Thais and Rhodope; the broad shoulders and bull-neck, bent by brute force, have shown well beside the pleasantries of the fools who now fulfilled his wishes at the pull of his purse strings.

Yet Mesdemoiselles Lais and company were fair—most fair—dazzlingly fair. He thought of a delicately-moulded, sweet-scented head that had bent over and kissed his own in farewell as he lay in that very chair that morning.

"What's the use of getting sour with it?" he said aloud, rising and crossing to the fireplace to knock the ashes from his finished pipe. "It's all sham—empty sham. Any man knows that. But so's all life; and this is a pretty part of the sham, anyway." Then, in answer to a knock at the door: "Come in. You can clear away the things."

The order was received in silence, and he turned round to find a strange girl standing where his housekeeper should have been.

"I beg your pardon," she said. "I had no idea Mr. Webster had any visitors. The door was open, and I walked in. Please can I see him?"

Laurence, devoid of reverence for all womankind, looked her up and down. She was slim of figure and unsuitably dressed, he decided. Her brown tweed walking dress, though well made, was for March wear rather than for June. Her hat was of brown, some white about it; brown hair lay under it, framing a brown-eyed pale face over a little white neck, and in her ungloved hand she held a few large envelopes.

"Who, did you say?" he asked.

"Mr. Webster, please."

"I never heard of him."

"Then what are you doing in his rooms?" She looked bravely in his eyes, and Laurence caught himself thinking of the little common mountain butterfly that sits in shadow like a dead leaf, its wings clipped tight until in answer to a stray sunbeam it flips them open in a glory of warmth and golden brown.

"Eh?" he said stupidly.

"What are you doing in Mr. Webster's rooms?" She backed towards the door.

Laurence laughed at the faint alarm in her face.

"They're my rooms. If you want the man who had them before me, you're a bit late. I believe he's in Italy, or somewhere south. Wasn't he consumptive?"

The girl nodded, and her figure slid into lines of weariness at once. "Do you know his address?" she asked.

"No. I expect Mr. Tyrrell—Messrs. Dwyer & Tyrrell, of Chancery Lane—can tell you. I got the rooms through them. Is it anything important?"

"No, thank you. Yes, though; it is to me—rather. Messrs. Dyer & Tyrrell, did you say?"

"Dwyer & Tyrrell. I'm going there myself as soon as I have my coat on. Shall I give you a lift? You look tired."

"Thank you. I am—a little. I've been walking this morning."

"Sit down, then. I'll be back in ten minutes."

He retired to his bedroom to complete his toilet. On his return he found the girl seated, regarding the disarray of the room with grave disapproval, and her manner to him was chilling in its politeness.

On the pavement, "I think I'll walk," she said, "if you don't mind. I'm rested now."

The cab wheeled up beside the kerb.

"But I do mind." Laurence was feeling like a naughty child, caught in misdeeds. "I'm going the same way, I tell you. Get in."

The girl looked up in surprise. "I beg your pardon," she said.

"I beg yours. I'm afraid my manner is a little brusque at times. It's due to want of feminine society, perhaps. Won't you get in? It seems silly, when we're both going the same way. . . ."

She climbed in, somewhat mollified—then stiffened again. "Your room hinted at no lack of feminine society."

"I had a mixed supper-party last night," Laurence explained. "I'm afraid they got larking and made the place untidy. A bachelor's diggings are rarely remarkable for order, are they?"

"I suppose not. Oh, this is nice." She leaned back against the cushions, watching the sunlit life of Oxford Street flying past, and Laurence looked round at her pale face. Regular features, long lashes, pink lips—"That's anæmia, caused by underfeeding," he said to himself. "They ought to show scarlet against that skin." He looked at her hands, but she had gloved them in his absence, and they told him nothing.

"You like it? So do I. Do you know, when I came back to London three weeks ago I swore I'd spend all my spare time driving about in han-

How is Your Appetite?

Loss of appetite during the summer months is a common trouble, and indicates that the digestive system is out of order. Lacking a healthy appetite many people — especially women — go too long without food, or eat sparingly because food seems to distress them, and it is no wonder that they complain that they are constantly tired and unable to stand the hot weather. This simply means that the digestive system is not doing its proper work, and that the nutriment that should come from the food is not being distributed to the various organs of the body. In other words the blood is growing thin and watery.

You need a summer tonic, and in all the realm of medicine there is no tonic can equal Dr. William's Pink Pills. Take a short treatment with these pills now and notice how promptly your appetite returns and your power to digest food improves. Your food will then do you good, your strength will return and you will no longer complain that the hot weather tires you out.

The best time to begin taking Dr. William's Pink Pills is the moment you feel the least bit out of sorts. The sooner you do so the sooner you will regain your old time energy. You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. William's Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

PACKERS SAY MR. O'CONNOR GOT DECIMAL POINTS MIXED

Quoted Profit on Bacon at 5.05 Cents a Pound When it Was Really .505---Heads of Concerns on Commissioner's Report.

Toronto, July 14.—W. F. O'Connor's report upon the profits of the packing houses in the curing of hams and bacon has taken local managers by surprise. They cannot understand how Mr. O'Connor got his figures. In fact they say he made a "stupendous blunder." He has made a mistake of placing the decimal point wrong in some part of his calculations so that the profits he arrives at are ten times too much. Otherwise from the figures he received from the packing houses, when he commenced his investigations, these results could never have been arrived at.

Deductions Must Be Wrong.

"His deductions are entirely wrong," said Mr. C. S. Blackwell, of the firm of Matthews-Blackwell, Limited. "Mr. O'Connor asked for the figures showing the private details of our business and we very frankly furnished them. But he seems to have got them all mixed up. He has got the decimal point wrong. When he says the profit on bacon in 1916 was 5.05 cents per pound he should say .505 cents per pound. Similarly when he says the profit in 1915 for one of the packing houses was 3.67 cents, he should say .367 cents. That's the only way I can understand his figures. He has overlooked the details of cost of curing and calculated his profits on first costs, seemingly. The figures are entirely wrong. What they are based on I don't know. They are based on the wrong facts, if they are correctly worked out. But if they are based on the real facts, they are all wrong in the deductions.

Says Statements Are Wild.

"The statements are wild. Profit in the packing business is most irregular and very speculative. A period of two months elapses before the bacon is sold in England, after the hogs are bought. There is a profit in the packing business, both good profit sometimes, and sometimes a smart loss. The gross average in Canada and the United States is from 2 to 2½ per cent on the total turnover. On bacon the turnover would be from six to eight times a year, so that the profit on capital in a good year might go as high as 16 per cent. But that is only possible by turning capital over eight times per year. I do not know of any business with as large a turnover with as small a net profit percentage. Packers have made money since the war, but not like Mr. O'Connor says."

"Did you make $1,500,000 in 1916?"

"No," replied Mr. Blackwell, emphatically.

"Have you made a million and a half the since the war?"

Mr. Blackwell paused a moment.

"No," said he, finally.

Davies' Figures Wrong.

Sir Joseph Flavelle is in Ottawa these days, as head of the Imperial Munitions Board. Mr. E. C. Fox, the next in command at the packing house, did not wish to give out a statement in reply to Mr. O'Connor at the present time.

"The statement as to our profits as given out by Mr. O'Connor is a perfectly untruthful statement." Mr. Fox contented himself with declaring for publication just now. "The public will be given the true statement in due course. If Mr. O'Connor had wanted the facts about our profits he could have got them from the Finance Minister, who has the full details about them just as he has about any other business subject to the war tax."

"Is it true that the William Davies Company made a profit of $5,000,000 on bacon alone in 1916?"

"Absolutely wrong," said Mr. Fox, with emphasis. He promised that a statement in full in reply would be issued shortly.

Save the Children

Mothers who keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house may feel that the lives of their little ones are reasonably safe during the hot weather. Stomach troubles, cholera infantum and diarrhoea carry off thousands of little ones every summer, in most cases because the mother does not have a safe medicine at hand to give promptly. Baby's Own Tablets cure these troubles, or if given occasionally to the well child will prevent their coming on. The Tablets are guaranteed by a government analyst to be absolutely harmless even to the newborn babe. They are especially good in summer because they regulate the bowels and keep the stomach sweet and pure. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. William's Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Contracts for 217,000 pairs of shoes have been let by the U. S. War Department at an average price of $4.73.

SIR JOSEPH WIRES PROTEST AND COURT'S INVESTIGATION

Tells Premier Borden That Figures of Food Commissioner O'Connor Are Grossly Misleading---Will Furnish Detailed Statement

Ottawa, July 14. — Sir Joseph Flavelle has sent the following telegram to Sir Robert Borden with reference to the report of Food Commissioner O'Connor to the effect that the company in which Sir Joseph is interested made a profit of $5,000,000 in bacon alone last year:

The statements given to the press by the Department of Labor, and which appear in the morning papers covering the business of the William Davies Company, are grotesquely untruthful, both in the mass and in detail. They evidence a curious admixture of ignorance and malice. I deeply regret the injustice of this attack, I regret it naturally on personal grounds, but even more on public grounds. Bitterness and anger and suspicion are being stirred up against public men, against labor and capital and corporations which in many instances have no better support than flippant impudence and ignorance. The pity in this case is an authorative statement was available and was not consulted. The department of Finance is furnished with a balance sheet and the profit and loss sheet annually of each firm in Canada given under the provision of the Business Tax Measure. The statement on the William Davies Co. is and must continue to be furnished to the Department of Finance. These statements are not only audited on behalf of the company, but are verified by the accountant of the Department of Finance, and are final in authority. The Department of Labor could have consulted these statements and could have procured such further information as they might have desired by application to the general manager of the company, and could have thus avoided the grave injustice of an attack based upon absurdedly untruthful statements. During its entire history the William Davies Company has sought for no trade advantage or profit other than could be secured through diligence and attention to its business. If much volume of business has been secured in contrast to others, it has been secured in open competition, free from combination or arrangement or understanding with other packers or merchants. The company offered to the Imperial authorities at different periods since the outbreak of the war to operate to its capacity in bacon products, canned meats products, and pork and bean products on a cost and percentage basis, but each time the offer was declined, first for bacon, and later for canned meats and pork and beans. The Imperial authorities expressed the desire to purchase in the open market. All army purchases of bacon are made in London. All army purchases for canned meats and pork and beans are made in Canada. Both are made in open and untrammelled competition with the world. The world during the period of the war is confined to the United States, the Argentine, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand. If it is wrong to secure a share of this and other business under these competitive conditions, the company has been guilty of such wrong and of no other.

As this statement was issued by the Department of Labor, I ask you to take such steps as you may think necessary whereby the truthfulness or untruthfulness of these statecan be established.

(Signed) J. W. FLAVELLE,
President of the William Davies Co., Limited.

WHERE UNFORTUNATE AND HOMELESS ARE CARED FOR Children's Shelter an Ideal Refuge for Little Ones Who Otherwise Would be Neglected.

The local branch of the Children's Aid Society have quite a contract on their hands at present. There are at the Children's Shelter twelve inmates ranging in age from two to ten years; three of them are girls, and the rest boys. Ten of the children are for adoption, and Mr. Geo. W. Powell, the society inspector, has applications in for some of them, and is looking up the history of the applicants. The law governing the adoption of wards of the society is very strict. The children are allowed only to go to homes where the surroundings are the best and where the little tot is assured of a real home. On the other hand, after the child has been made a ward of the society and is placed in the shelter, it is the duty of the agent and matron to see that the child is in good physical condton and where medical attention is required, it is called in. None of the children can leave the society for a foster home unless it is clean in every way.

A True Home

In Peterboro the little ones that fall under the protecting wing of the Children's Aid Society are very fortunate in having a shelter to go to that is a home n every sensel of the word, and any of the citizens who have not paid a visit to the local institution should do so at the earliest opportunity. The house itself is large and roomy. There are plenty of play rooms for the children on rainy days. The dormitaries are beautifully light and airy, and the dining room, kitchen and basement are well adapted for the wants of the children and matron. The heating is done by a hot water system. The front rooms on the lower floor are fitted as a reception room, and one large room is fitted up as a sewing room where the ladies meet once a week and sew for the children.

An Ideal Matron

Mrs. Read, the matron of the shelter, gives every care and attention to the wants of the little ones, and is absolutely suited for the position, as she has had experience as a nurse in England, and has raised a family of her own. A little attention to the kindly way that she handles the different boys and girls, and the way they will run to her at the slightest call is evidence that she has their confidence.

Home Grown Vegetables

The shelter is admirably situated, overlooking the river on Water Street, just a few steps north of the northern end of the street railway. A beautiful lawn, well trimmed, surrounds it, while at the front and at the rear are large gardens in which are planted vegetables of all kinds, and at the extreme rear are quite a add where number of current and berry bushes. Nearly all of the potatoes and vegetables used at the home are raised in the gardens, which are looked after by Mrs. Read's son.

Yesterday when a Review reporter visited the shelter the matron informed the visitors that they had used the first new potatoes out of the garden on July 12th. The potato plants certainly are fine looking, and the cabbages are hard to beat.

The children were having a great time playing around the grounds, and there are a few of the smaller ones that are confined to the house from minor ills, principally from eating a green apple. All of them seemed happy and contented, and were extremely polith in all their answers.

They are taught their prayers, and when bedtime comes are all taught to be ready to turn down the clothes of their beds and go to sleep.

AUTOISTS WILL HOLD A PICNIC NEXT SATURDAY

RUN TO SOUTH BEACH TO START FROM MARKET AT TWO P.M.

The Peterborough Automobile Association will hold its first club run and family outing on Saturday afternoon, July 21st. This is the first outing which the club has undertaken in several years, but it is planned to make several runs of this nature this summer. For this reason the members are urged to turn out in force. If the first trip is a success it will insure the enthusiasm for future events.

Members' cars should meet at the Market Square between 1.30 and 2 p.m. The start will be made about 2 o'clock for South Beach, where a general picnic will be held. There will be baseball of the indoor variety for the old boys and the hard outdoor variety for the young boys. There will also be arranged various contests for passing the afternoon in a pleasant manner. Every one should bring a basket lunch for his own party. Tea and coffee will be provided by the Association, but cups, spoons, plates, etc., should be brought by the members.

There will be no fees collected for this outing as the small expense will be borne by the Association. Mr. Brooks' hotel will be conveniently near for those who prefer a hotel dinner, and of course boats, bathing facilities, smokes, etc., can be procured from the hotel management.

A general good time is in prospect for the members who take advantage of this run, and it is urged upon everyone to come along and help put life into the Auto Association.

Luncheon or dinner will be held about 5.30 p.m. A notice more in detail will be mailed later to each member, but reserve this date for this event.

"A JUSTLY FAMOUS RESORT."

It would be hard to match in all America a district like that found in Algonquin Park, the wonderfully interesting Government reservation of nearly 2,000,000 acres that the Ontario Government have set aside for a playground for the people. Splendid hotels and log cabin camps have been erected and are operated by the Grand Trunk Railway, which offer first class accommodation at reasonable rates. Tennis, boating, bathing, fishing, canoeing, camping and billiards, are some of the attractions. A handsome booklet telling you all about it sent free. Write or call on C. E. Come and look over the "Bell" at $1185 f.o.b. Barrie, Ontario. It will give you a full-sized, full powered five-passenger car with every new improvement and refinement in design, upholstering and finish. It is sturdily built, runs with the smoothness of the most expensive cars and is the most up-to-date car of its size on the market.

I am now in a position to supply the "Bell" and to give cutsomers the regular Duffus Garage service, so well known throughout the country.

THREE BILLIONS IN LIBERTY LOAN

Over three billion dollars was subscribed by the American people to the Liberty loan. The nation was asked to give two billions and increased the giving by fifty per cent. Every Canadian war loan has been greatly oversubscribed. Sir Thomas White has had splendid financial support. The National Service Board is appealing for individual purchase of War Savings Certificates. Every cent the nation can spare is required for war purposes. The man at the front must be supported by the man with the dollar. The same support is required from every woman in the country. National saving and national investment in war certificates provide a common way of national service for the people of Canada without distinction of race, sex or creed. The man at the front is fighting for you. Will you adopt the motto of the National Service Board and save and give for him. Can you do less? Victory hangs in the balance.

SEVEN YEARS TORTURE

Nothing Helped Him Until He Took "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

ALBERT VARNER

Buckingham, Que., May 3rd, 1915.

For seven years, I suffered terribly from Severe Headaches and Indigestion. I had belching gas from the stomach, bitter stuff would come up into my mouth after eating, while at times I had nausea and vomiting, and had chronic Constipation. I went to several doctors and wrote to a specialist in Boston but without benefit. I tried many remedies but nothing did me good. Finally, a friend advised "Fruit-a-tives". I took this grand fruit medicine and it made me well. I am grateful to "Fruit-a-tives", and to everyone who has miserable health with Constipation and Indigestion and Bad Stomach, I say take "Fruit-a-tives", and you will get well".

FIGHTING SOW THISTLE

"Thorough" is Watchword—Spreads From Seeds and Roots

In fighting sow thistle, says a Canadian writer, we must recognize that this weed spreads from both seeds and roots. We must, therefore, prevent the plant from producing seed, kill the perennial root stalk and sow absolutely clean seed grain if we are to control this terrible pest. Various methods of attack have been advocated such as crowding out the weed by a persistent perennial, smothering the plant with tar paper, straw, manure, or by a quickly growing crop, and starving the plant by preventing it from forming green leaves. The crowding out method often fails because the thistle proves to be more persistent than the crop employed to displace it. The smothering plan succeeds on small patches, but is not practicable on large areas. Many authorities advocate the starvation plan or summerfallow as by far the best for eradicating this troublesome weed.

Plough six to eight inches deep in the autumn, if possible, but if pressure of work prevents autumn ploughing, then plough the same depth about the middle of June. After a few days, begin the use of the duck-foot cultivator crosswise of the land and repeat whenever the tiniest shoots are ready to show, until the land freezes in autumn. Where the soil is a loose loam the land may not need ploughing and the cultivator can be used from the start. Never allow the thistle to show even a leaf above the ground and by autumn it will be killed. The cultivation must be thorough.

PITRE vs. JOHNSON

Hockey Puck Travelled Faster than Pitched Base Ball

Fans who follow both hockey and baseball differ in regard to whether a puck can be shot faster than a baseball can be thrown. In other words, is Walter Johnson's fast ball faster than a shot from the stick of Didier Pitre? An authority on the subject has submitted an opinion. Harry Cheek, who used to catch for the Vancouver Beavers, and who saw Pitre shoot during a Stanley Cup series, made some efforts to time his shots. He had also seen Walter Johnson pitch, and, while he had no figures on Walter Johnson's speed, and was unable to get anything like accurate figures on Pitre's bullet shooting, he declared that as far as he could judge he would rather, any day, stand up and catch a ball from Walter Johnson than take Harry Holmes' place in the net and catch a shot from the stick of Pitre.

He argued that Pitre's shot is the faster traveller, because, while you could see a ball pitched by Johnson, you couldn't see a shot from Pitre until it is right upon you. The argument that a puck should travel faster because the player has a lever in a hockey stick to give it the extra speed; while the pitcher has to throw with his fingers and has no lever, still appears to stand.

FOR CHILDREN'S SAKE

Soil is the Basis of All Prosperity and Conservation

One of the great movements of our time is the movement for the conservation of our natural resources. We have gone on as if the world were coming to an end when we were dead, says a writer. Now we are getting a better perspective. The conservation movement, as was natural, was at first most conspicuously identified with the conservation of our forests and our water power, but it must extend beyond the forests and water power. It must more immediately concern itself with the conservation of the soil, for even our brief history tells us that fertile fields may become abandoned farms through other causes than lack of rainfall.

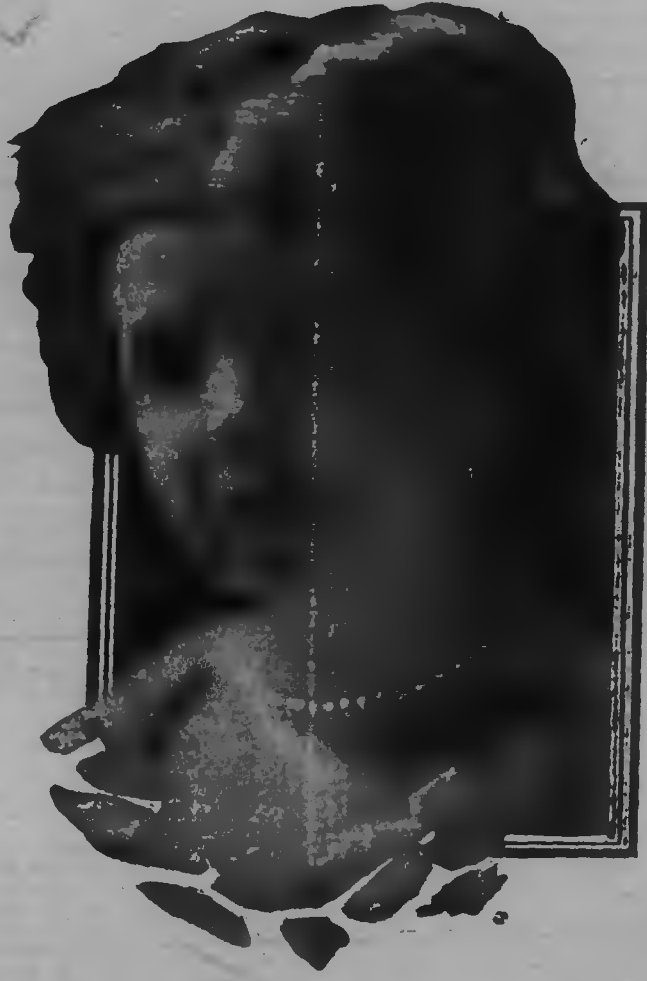
NEW SOLOIST AT TRINITY



MRS. GEORGE H. KING

The new soprano soloist at Trinity Church, comes to Peterborough with her husband, who is organist in the same church, from Goderich, where she was for seven years soloist in the North Street Methodist Church. Mrs. King is well known all over Ontario on account of her activity in patriotic work since the war broke out. She was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and studied music in the Athenaeum of that city and with Prof. Pease in Detroit.

Mr. and Mrs. King are living at 364 Simcoe street. They have two children, a daughter aged nine and a son three and a half years old. Mr. and Mrs. King will be an acquisition to the musical and social circles in the city.

BUY YOUR COAL SUPPLY AS EARLY AS POSSIBLE

Toronto Dealer Tells How Shortage May be Remedied by Mixing Egg and Nut for Furnace.

"There is no need for the citizens to feel alarmed over the coal situation, but at the same time it is advisable for everyone who is in a position to do so to get their winter's supply in as soon as possible. The more who get it now, the fewer there will be who will need to be supplied in the winter."

This was the statement made by a prominent coal dealer in Toronto. The gentleman in question is in close touch with the coal situation both in Toronto and at the mines. He has supplied coal to the citizens during many years, and is in a position to offer reliable advice.

It appears that nearly 9 per cent. of the coal used in furnaces is that grade known as "stove." When the coal is mined is passed down the "breakers" and is then separated into the grades by means of sieves. Naturally there is about the same quantity of stove coal as there is of egg, nut, or any of the other grades. Owing to the great demand for stove coal the dealers have been compelled to break up large quantities of the larger grades. This year, however, they are not doing it, with the result that the demand very much exceeds the supply. Stove coal, therefore, is at a premium.

According to the dealer quoted above, the best method to meet the situation is for the consumer to place his order for both egg and nut coal. The former is slightly too large to make a good fire in the average furnace while the nut coal is too small. The plan is to make the fire up with a shovel of nut coal which will burn up quickly and to throw on that a shovel or so of egg coal, finishing off with another shovel of nut. The combination has produced the best of results and is strongly recommended.

Speaking of the general situation, the gentleman in question stated that the purchasing power of the general public was apparently never better. Persons who have never before secured their coal during the summer are already stocked up for the winter. Where necessary, new bins have been built. During the past three months the firm with which he is connected has put in as much coal as they did during six months last year.

NOTED SINGER'S TESTIMONY

Redferne Hollingshead, Canada's famous tenor, writes:

It affords me great pleasure to express my encomium of praise for the splendid qualities of the New Scale Williams Piano we are using on our Western tour.

Possessed of brilliancy of tone ideal for the needs of a pianist, your instrument also embodies a lovely singing tone of velvety softness when needed, affording ideal support to my voice both in fortissimo and pianissimo passages.

I am observing its magnificent durability in the midst of constant moving in bitter cold weather, which it sustains constantly by keeping in perfect tune.

Awful.

Mrs. Willis—Isn't it awful the way people paw over goods in a store?

Mrs. Gillis—Shocking! I went over to the waist counter this morning and picked up every single garment and there wasn't one that didn't have the marks where somebody had been handling them.—Brooklyn Life.

Granted His Request.

Said the hobo: "I went around to a back door today and asked for something to eat. 'Madam,' I said, 'if you will only give me the food you gave your cat I will be satisfied.' 'If you want to lie around the barn and catch mice I haven't any objections,' she told me."—Atchison Globe.

A Luxury.

"But," protested the plain citizen, "don't you consider honesty a good thing?"

"Sure," replied the politician, "but it's like every other good thing, you've got to make money before you can afford it." — Catholic Standard and Times.

A Cold Comparison.

"So you are going to give up poetry?"

"I am," replied the earnest youth. "I'm going to study medicine. A prescription commands enormously more respect than a poem."—Washington Star.

Indian Totem Pole.

Before people had individual names, the savage people who lived in clans or tribes referred to themselves in the name of some natural object, usually an animal which they assumed as the name or emblem of the clan or tribe. These names never applied to one individual more than another, but only to the clan or tribe, so that everyone in a tribe which had taken the "wolf" for its emblem was known as "Wolf," says the Book of Wonders. Later on they began to distinguish individuals by giving them additional names characteristic of the individual, such as "Lonely Wolf," "Growling Wolf," or other names. The name of this animal was then the emblem of one tribe. They, therefore, placed this emblem upon their bodies, their clothes, utensils, etc. Through this, these emblems also became at times ideals of worship, and so they erected poles upon which their emblems were engraved. The word totem is a North American Indian word, meaning "family token." The tribes called themselves after animals from which they believed themselves descended.

ANIMALS IN THE WAR.

A Record in the Variety Used Made in the Present Conflict.

In no other war in the world's history have so many kinds of animals been employed in the actual conduct of hostilities. The list of beasts engaged in the present conflict includes horses, mules, dogs, oxen, elephants, goats and camels. Dogs are doing sentry duty, hauling light guns and serving with the ambulance corps. Goats are necessary to provide food for the Indian troops attached to the army divisions of Great Britain, and elephants, where the climatic conditions permit of their employment, are used in handling heavy timber. Camels have proved invaluable in the Turkish campaign and, already, as is the case with all beasts of burden, their value has increased tremendously.

Experts have recently begun to give serious attention to the problem of keeping up the supply of the various animals necessary for the vast operations of the hostile forces, and the prediction is freely made that if the war continues another year the supply will not be equal to filling a tenth of the demand.

Woman's Position in Tibet.

The influence of women in family and society has been declining in Tibet as a result of frequent warfare. As in other parts of the world and at various epochs in human history, men back from victorious battlefields in Tibet were wont to monopolize feminine admiration; hence it came that polygamy has been steadily encroaching upon the old undisputed sway of the Tibetan woman in the family. This is an excerpt from the story told by the Rev. Ekai Kawaguchi, the Buddhist explorer, who has just returned to Japan from his second Tibetan journey.—East and West News.

Trench Signs.

Wit is often shown in the notice boards which our soldiers set up in the trenches. Thus a frequently shelled trench junction bears the legend, "Don't stand about here—there's a war on." A Canadian war correspondent has collected a number of these, one of the best being a spot which had once been used by the Germans as a dump for stores, now labeled, "Fritz's Dump—Under Entirely New Management." A siege battery had the whole side of their mess knocked out—you could drive a gun team into the hole where the door had been. On a bit of remaining wall are the words, "Don't Stand Out There Knocking—Come Right In!"

Running Comments.

A young officer, somewhat affected in style, was explaining to his men what happened to a shell after leaving the gun. The comedian of the company could not refrain from making remarks sotto voce, much to the amusement of his mate. This was part of the lesson. Officer: "The shell, on leaving the gun, owing to the bore, goes round and round." Voice: "The mulberry bush." Officer: "After its momentum is expended gravity draws it to earth, otherwise it would keep on for evah and evah." Voice: "Amen!"

MARKET PRICES

PETERBOROUGH MARKETS.

The market this morning was not a very large one for this season of the year. There was plenty of fowl offered and prices were much less than a week ago, particularly for the old stock. Young ducks and spring chickens were in fair supply and sold at about 1.25 to $1.50 per pair.

Eggs were a little higher and the farmer ladies were all telling about their hens stopping laying.

Butter was plentiful and sold at the same prices as last week.

A few dishes of wild strawberries were readily picked up by the lovers of good jam.

Hogs are 25c lower than last week. The quotation for local delivery is $15.25.

The Peterborough Cheese Board will meet next Wednesday.

A Striking Tribute.

The other day the Metropolitan Magazine cabled Lord Northcliffe asking him if he had any suggestions to make as to how the United States could efficiently prosecute the war. Here is what the great British journalist replied:

"If you come in I have one thing to say to you, and it is this: You can learn a great deal from the example of Canada."

This tribute to Canadian achievement, from the man who stands out above all others as the ablest critic that the war has produced, should be for every Canadian a matter of pride.

Bread From Moss.

The Indians along the Columbia River make a kind of bread from a moss that grows on the spruce fir-tree. This moss is prepared by placing it in heaps, sprinkling it with water, and permitting it to ferment. Then it is rolled into balls as big as a man's head, and these are baked in pits.

Where Can One Be Found?

Though knowledge is power, it must be confessed.
Sometimes there is reason to doubt it,
For in teaching a girl how to love it is best
To pick one who knows nothing about it.

A Different Mill.

"Great reel I saw last night."
"What was it?"
"'The Mill on the Floss.'"
"I thought prizefight films were barred."

To Miss Joy.

"You've a charming demeanor, a voice like a flute,
But, alas, you're too merry by half!
I certainly hoped you would smile on my suit,
But I did not expect you to laugh!"

Efficiency That Failed.

Visitor—How did he become crazy?
Warden—He was one of these efficiency experts who thought he could get a hen to lay an egg on toast.

Mary's Little Lamb.

Mary had a little lamb
At lunch. A matter which
We wish to state would indicate
That Mary's folks are rich.

The Shrew.

The shrew was originally the shrew mouse, which, when her young were helpless, would fight desperately in their defense, and so well known was the courage of this little animal, which would even go out of its way to seek an enemy at times when the nest needed protection, that the word became applied to a woman who was ever ready to seek a quarrel.

GROCERY LINES GOING HIGHER, TOBACCO FIRM

BUTTER AND EGGS MUCH FIRMER ON WHOLESALE MARKETS.

Changes in grocery lines have again been quite generally in the upward direction. One exception to the general tendency was in the case of tapioca, in which a slightly lower price was quoted in at least one instance. Cut and plug tobaccos have made advances ranging from 1c to 30c per pound in some instances. Cornstarch and laundry starch have been increased one-quarter cent per pound. Some lines of soap and washing powders have been moved to higher levels. Certain brands of chewing gum are also quoted higher.

Butter and eggs were in strong market and advances were recorded in these commodities, contrary to the expectations of some in the trade. There has been a better export inquiry for both these commodities, and prices exhibited strength in consequence. Cable despatches stated that Denmark butter has been shut out of the English market and this resulted in a demand to Canada. Live hogs were in slightly firmer market and prices were somewhat higher.

Prices on canned salmon and canned peas have not yet been named. It is anticipated they will be somewhat later on salmon this season than usual, due to labor difficulties at the Coast. New crop prices have been named on asparagus, sliced pineapple, spinach, rhubarb. Preserved strawberries are expected to be in short crop this year. The heaviest producing period is now under way for this fruit, and berries are reaching the market in fair quantities.

The market for Manitoba flour held steady during the week, but millers were in an uncertain state of mind over the probable action of the food controller. Mills are not making sales for any distant delivery dates under present conditions. Flour demand has improved considerably during the week, as quite a bit of Canadian flour is going into the United States. Rolled oats and corn products are in firm market. For the former there is an excellent export demand, although the domestic consumption is falling somewhat. Prices on corn products are exhibiting strength, due to the inability of millers to get supplies of corn. There is practicaly no corn being offered for sale at the present time. Millfeeds are all in better demand than they have been for some weeks past, particularly so in the case of bran. Quantities of millfeeds are being shipped into the United States.

Sugar advanced 15 cents per hundred. Raw sugar in the New York market gave signs of a slightly easier tendency. There has been a fairly good demand for Canadian refined sugar recently under the stimulus of strawberry preserving time. Business in the grocery line continues quiet.—Canadian Grocer.

Complete reorganization of the military police system of Military District No. 2 has been decided on under Capt. Widgery, who will be made major.

Mrs. Annie Speiser, whose will has just been probated in New York, left one dollar each to her five daughters "for reasons well known to them."

The prohibition wave in the United States has almost doubled the sale of candy in the past two years, it was announced at a confectionery convention at Atlantic City.

William Furst, one of America's best known theatrical orchestra leaders and composers of incidental music for theatrical productions, died at his home in Freeport, L. I.

Synopsis of Canadian Northwest Land Regulations

The sole head of a family or any male over 18 years old, who was at the commencement of the present war, and has since continued to be, a British subject or a subject of an allied or neutral country, may homestead a quarter-section of available Dominion Land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for District. Entry by proxy may be made on certain conditions. Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of land in each of three years.

In certain districts a homesteader may secure an adjoining quarter-section as pre-emption. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Reside six months in each of three years after earning homestead patent and cultivate 50 acres extra. May obtain pre-emption patent as soon as homestead patent on certain conditions.

A settler after obtaining homestead patent, if he cannot secure a pre-emption, may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.00.

Holders of entries may count time of employment as farm laborers in Canada during 1917, as residence duties under certain conditions.

When Dominion Lands are advertised or posted for entry, returned soldiers who have served overseas and have been honorably discharged, receive one day priority in applying for entry at local Agent's Office (but not Sub-Agency). Discharge papers must be presented to Agent.

SPORTS OF ALL SORTS

If I were only president
I know what I would do;
I'd get a pass to all the games,
And sometimes I'd take two.

If I were only king, my friend,
And ruled some distant clime,
I'd own a team all to myself
And have a high old time.

And if I were an emporer—
Gee! wouldn't that be great—
I'd sit beneath a canopy
And see the game in state,
But I am neither of these things,
And so I'll go my way,
And if I want to see the game,
Like other folks, I'll pay.

George Burns, of the Giants, is earning the plaudits of the fans by his speedy playing. He is considered one of the best fielders in the major leagues.

It will take St. Louis months to get over that home run Ty Cobb made in the Missouri city with the bases full. That's the kind of stuff you read about in books.

Having Hans Wagner for a manager seems to have put some pep into the Pirates. Maybe now they'll come out of the cellar.

The International League and the American Association races are very much more interesting than those of the National and American Leagues. There seems to be much more ginger in the former than in the later.

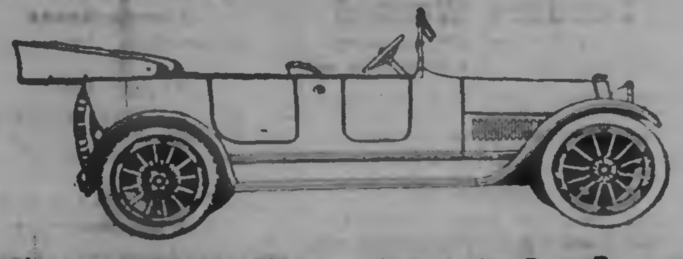
Grouchy Gus says: "Baseball players and boxers must be sore over the fact that this war has butted in and made other heroes besides themselves."

If Larry Doyle gets that chance to be manager of a certain National League club which has its habitat in the Smoky City look out for some spectacular playing by the whole blooming outfit. Larry ought to be able to train players to work as he does—that is, to catch balls and do acrobatic stunts at the same time. Larry can do it, and he just loves to show his tricks to the fans.

There once was a girl in St. Joe
Who had a young man for a boe;
He was bashful and shy
In a crowd, but, oh, my!
When alone he wasn't so sloe.

Grover Cleveland Alexander, the star twirler of the Phillies, seems to lose some of his stellar qualities when he faces the Giants. The best he has been able to get from them is an even break. In the last two years Alexander has pitched fourteen games against the McGraw outfit, and has lost half of them. He hasn't beaten them once this season, despite the fact that he is a terror when facing the other National League teams. Nobody can account for Alexander's inability to trim the Giants, and the fact is taken simply as a piece of baseball luck. This same pecularity has often been noticed in regard to other star pitchers. They have all had a certain team which was immune against their efforts, while the others simply fell before them. Of course Alexander is mighty anxious to beat the Giants, and the latter are just as anxious to keep him from breaking the spell.

Studebaker
Established 1852



Reasons for Studebaker Supremacy In Canada

Studebaker is the foremost Made-in-Canada automobile because Studebaker cars stand up and give the service on Canadian roads.

The Series 18 Studebakers are even better than the Series 17. They are maintaining the leadership the Series 17 established throughout the Dominion.

They embody ninety distinct improvements in mechanical construction, convenience and comfort over the Series 17.

They offer all the improvements, all the refinements suggested by four years' close study of the performance of 300,000 Studebaker cars in every part of the world. In them the many economies made possible by vast resources, the savings obtained through the development of steadily improved manufacturing methods and the installation of the latest and best labor saving machinery are turned to your advantage.

That is why Studebaker cars are most economical to buy. They are economical to operate because Studebaker quality reduces "up-keep" to its lowest possible terms. And they are economical to drive because of great gasoline economy in ratio to power, because of great tire economy in ratio to weight and carrying capacity.

Let us give you a Studebaker demonstration today.

LIBERALS MEET IN CONFERENCE

DISCUSS PROPOSAL TO EXTEND LIFE OF PARLIAMENT AGAIN.

Ottawa, July 14.—The announcement by Sir Robert Borden of his intention to move the extension resolution on Monday, carried some surprise and consternation to the camp of the conscription Liberal members of parliament. They had arranged for a conference and organization meeting on Monday next, which it was beileved might be followed by negotiations for a union government. The premier's announcement rather forces their hand, especially as they are divided among themselves on the extension issue.

The Liberal members from Ontario had a meeting today which was attended by all of their number except Hon. Charles Murphy. They also decided to organize as a separate unit and F.F.Pardee was named as chairman. It is understood that Mr. Pardee did not definitely accept, and it is stated tonight on good authority that a call has been issued for a conference at Toronto on July 21. This conference will be attended by all the Ontario Liberal candidates for parliament. Something like a provincial organization will be perfected and it is rumored that N. W. Rowell will be selected as the leader of the Ontario Liberals in the Dominion as well as in the provincial field.

SCHOOL PUPILS WORK IN FIELD

KENT COUNTY HAS HUNDREDS HOEING SUGAR BEET CROPS.

Chatham, July 14.—School children of Kent County numbering 346, of whom 108 are girls, between the ages of ten and fourteen, are engaged at work in the sugar beet fields, and relieving in no small measure the labor shortage problem. They are working ten hours a day, and are paid 15 to 17½ cents an hour. Officials of the sugar company are delighted with the work which is being accomplished, and entertain the hopes of a bumper crop as a result. In addition to those working on the beet fields a large number of school boys have accepted positions with farmers during their vacation. The suggestion for employing child labor, to help out the labor shortage, was taken up enthusiastically by the Dominion Sugar Company, following a citizens' meeting held some weeks ago to discuss the labor question. They were assisted in the organization of the scheme by the Boy Scouts' association and the Chatham Civic Employment Bureau.

THE ROCK AHEAD.

Will the Conscription Bill Get Past the Senate?

Ottawa, July 14. — Interest has now changed to the fate of the Military Service Bill in the Senate. Liberal senators have refused to enter into negotiations with Conservatives to secure the passage of this measure. The vote in the Senate on party lines is equal, but Senators Landry and Montplaisir will vote against the bill, so that the vacancies must be filled to make certain of its passage. It is understood that all the Senate vacancies with the exception of two or three in Ontario will be filled at once, thus guaranteeing a good majority independent of the Liberals, who have recently become very noncommittal on their policy toward the Military Service Bill.

PRESIDENT FOR BEER AND WINE

WILL NOT PROHIBIT USE OF GRAIN FOR THEIR MANUFACTURE.

Washington, July 14. — President Wilson in his dealings with Congress in regard to a food control law has drawn a sharp line between the use of grain for making spirits and making light beer. He is for beer and light wine.

The prohibitionists wished to have all brewing and distilling stopped during the war; and for a time it seemed that they would succeed. The bill now before Congress is in its final stages, and it is likely to give power to the President to allow the making of wine and beer, and to prohibit all manufacture of spirits for drinking purposes during the war.

CAPT. BURNHAM STANDS BY PREMIER

BRITISH DESTROYERS IN NORTH SEA MAKE PRIZES OF FOUR GERMAN STEAMERS

Two Others Escape Into Dutch Waters Badly Damaged by Gunfire --- More Gains Made by Land Forces---French Retake all Positions Lost Last Week.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

LONDON, April 17.—The Admiralty announces the capture of four German steamers by British destroyers in the North Sea.

The steamers are the Pell Worm, Brietz, Marie Horn and Heinz Blumberg, all from 1100 to 1500 tons burden. Six German steamers were sighted by the British war craft. Four were taken, and two escaped into Dutch waters, badly damaged by gunfire.

A Reuter despatch from Ymuiden says four German ships have been sunk by British destroyers in the North Sea, four captured, three stranded and three forced to return to Rotterdam.

BLOCKADE COMPLETE

London, July 17.—Suce Saturday seventeen German steamers have sailed from Rotterdam, three at one time and fourteen at another, says a despatch. Of the first group, one, the Gagdalena Bluementhal, fifteen hundred tons, was wrecked. Of the second group, owing to the action of the British estroyers, not one vessel was able to proceed, eight being captured or sunk, and three succeeding in putting back to Rotterdam.

VICTORY FOR RAIDERS.

London, July 17. — A war office statement says: "We gained ground slightly during the night northwest of Wirnemon. In the Nieuport sector one of our raiding parties encountered a large party of the enemy in front of the German positions. After a sharp fight our troops drove the enemy back to their lines and bombarded them in their trenches."

FRENCH REGAIN LOST GROUND.

Paris, July 17. — Intermittent cannonading occurred on the Aisne front, and was quite spirited in the regions of Cerny, Cavaliers and Courcy. In the Champagne the Germans made another serious effort on the Teton. Their assaulting waves, being caught under our fire, were compelled to return in disorder to their trenches, leaving a number of dead.

On the left bank of the Meuse our troops this morning made a spirited attack on Hill 304. According to news thus far received all our positions which have remained in the hands of the Germans following actions of June 28 and 29 were entirely reconquered by us. We captured prisoners, their number being as yet unkonwn. Enemy attacks in our small posts in the Argonne near Douaumont and in the Woevre near Regneville werew lthout result.

A WORD FROM BERLIN.

Berlin, July 17.—Russian forces, which recently captured the Galician town of Kalusz, the headquarters of the Austro-German army, evacuated that town yesterday, according to an official statement issued today by the German army headquarters staff.

AS RUSSIA TELLS IT.

Petrograd, July 17. — The war office announces that Russian troops have abandoned Kalusz in Eastern Galicia, but have secured the crossing of the Lomnica River. The Russians drove the enemy from the village of Novica.

CABINET UPHEAVAL

London, July 17.—A Reuter despatch from Petrograd says M. S. Lepanoff, acting Minister of Commerce, has resigned. Earlier despatches announced the resignation of Minister of Finance Shingaroff, Minister of Educaton Mannlloff, and Prince Shakovsky, head of the Department of Public Aid resulting from Cabinet disarrangement affecting the Province of the Ukraine.

GENERAL ELECTION MAY BE ANNOUNCED IN TWO DAYS

All Attempts at Coalition Are so Much Wasted Effort --- Both Parties Meet in Secret Conclave.

(Special to The Review)

Ottawa, July 17.—The inevitable is drawing near. When Sir Wilfred Laurier refused a coalition an da win-the-war campaign that settled it. No other attempt at a patch-up will be worth considering. It is the present Government against all its enemies and they are legion. Events are converging rapidly towards a federal election. It may be announced in two days' time, perhaps less.

LIBERALS CAUCUS.

Ottawa, July 17.—"See Pardee" was all a[illegible] of the win-the-war Liberals would say at the close of their three hour caucus. Mr. Fred Pardee, who had evidently been appointed official spokesman had nothing more to say than the rest of the conscription Liberals. "There is nothing to give out," was all Mr. Pardee would commit himself to.

"Will there be any announcement later?" Mr. Pardee was asked.

"Well, nothing today," was the only answer.

It is understood that the conscription Liberals organized and after a lengthy discussion over the whole situation decided to hold another meeting before coming to any decision as to an alliance with Sir Robert Borden in the formation of a union Government.

Reaching a Climax.

The crisis at Ottawa is rapidly reaching a climax. A peaceful political revolution is in progress, the import of which is not perhaps realized by the public at large. Out of the turmoil there is good reason to believe will emerge new political parties with a complete realignment of party lines. Partyism, however, is dying hard and there are elements on both sides within the conscription wings who are fighting to the last ditch.

"They are ruining our party," is the cry which is heard from the old line party men on both sides who apparently fail to realize that country is greater than party, and that the country is face to face with the most serious crisis since Confederation.

The conscription win-the-war Liberals held a caucus. They started early and sat late. It was attended by all the Liberals who voted for the Government's measure, including Mr. Frank B. Carvell, the aggressive New Brunswick member, who came to Ottawa especially to attend the caucus.

Last fall he enlisted with the Cobourg Heavy Battery and made rapid progress as a soldier. He is another of Peterborough's young men who will bring honor to the city.

RUSSIANS ARE KILLED IN RIOT

DEMONSTRATION WAS IN PROGRESS AGAINST NEW GOV'T.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Petrograd, July 17.—Two demonstrations against the Government resulted in firing of shots at midnight as a result of which a number of persons were killed or wounded. The firing apparently was the result of stray shots which brought on a panic in which the demonstrators turned rifles and machine guns on each other. Quiet was restored after a few minutes. The demonstrations were organized by the Bolspeviki, the majority faction of the Social Democratic Party.

NO CHANGE IN GERMAN POLICY

Rejected Lover Kills His Rival

Young Married Couple Were Shot by Man, Who Then Suicided.

Arnprior, July 17.—Bruce M. Leitch, aged twenty-five, a returned soldier of Montreal, is dead, his bride of a week is dying at a hotel in Sand Point, and William Bennett, aged twenty-five, of 375 Notre Dame street, Montreal, also a returned soldier, is dying in a Renfrew hospital. Leitch, who was on leave from a Toronto Convalescent Home, was spending his honeymoon with his bride at Sand Point, near here. Bennett, who had been rejected by the girl, who was a Miss Gertrude Lillian Standring of Montreal, learned of their whereabouts, and arriving in Arnpiror waylaid them on a lonely road and killed Leitch in cold blood, then shot Mrs. Leitch through the right lung and face, and himself through the head. The three were found lying dead in the roadway by a hotelkeeper of Sand Point, at whose place Mr. and Mrs. Leitch had been staying.

CHIEF THOMPSON IS ATTENDING CONVENTION

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Quebec, July 17.—The thirteenth annual convention of the Police Chiefs from all over Canada assembled here today. Among those attending is Chief Daniel Thompson of Peterborough.

EXTENSION BILL IS POSTPONED

SIR ROBERT DEFERS MEASURE AT REQUEST OF OPPOSITION.

Ottawa, July 17.—Extension of Parliament stands over. When, at the opening of Government business in the Commons this afternoon, Premier Borden formally moved the resolution standing in his name — a resolution to petition the Imperial Parliament to amend the British North America act by further extending the life of the present Canadian Parliament until October, 1918 —and rose to support it with a speech, Mr. A. K. Maclean (Halifax) caught the eye of the Speaker.

Mr. Maclean asked that the new bill be postponed until conscription is disposed of and Premier Borden granted this request.

Jitney Service for Ashburnham

ALD. SMITH PROPOSES RELIEF FOR HIS CONSTITUENTS.

The Ashburnham Aldermen were full of suggestions at last night's council meting.

Ald. Smith fathered a resolution asking the Hydro Electric Commission to instal a jitney service in connection with the street railway. The proposed jitney would run from Hunter and George Street to Hunter and Roger Street in East City. Transfers from jitney to street car and car to jitney would be accepted. This would give the residents of that section of the city a service and keep them in good humor until the advent of the street car service across the new bridge. The cost of a jitney and the operation of it would not be very great.

Ald. Worth thought the idea was a good one, and seconded the motion.

Acting-Mayor Duncan was quite sure that the commissioners would consider the suggestion, and it was not going to do any harm to ask.

The motion carried.

In proportion to population Europe's best lighted cities are Petrograd, Vienna, Paris, and London.

NO DISCREDIT IS CAST ON MATTHEWS-BLACKWELL CO. BY COMMISSIONER'S REPORT

Mr. O'Connor States in Letter to Firm That When Document is Published in Full it Will Show That His Statements Are Accurate and There is Nothing Amiss With Firm's Business Methods.

Food Commissioner O'Connor is still hedging on that famous report that has caused such a burst of feeling in the country. Yesterday he found it necessary to explain through the newspapers that the figures he submitted did not represent the profits made by the packing house companies, but the difference between the buying and the selling price, in other words, the margin, without regard to overhead or any other intermediary expenses.

From the following letter it will be seen that he states explicitly that the report will not in any manner cast discredit upon the Matthews-Blackwell Company. Here is his statement over his own signature, made in reply to a request by the local company for a copy of his report in full:

Matthews-Blackwell, Limited,
Packers,
Peterborough, Ontario:

Dear Sirs,—The Minister of Labor has asked me to attend to your communication to him of July 14th.

The report is expected to be in hand this week, and I will send you a number of copies forthwith upon its receipt. You will find upon reading the report that my statements therein which may affect your firm are accurate and are not such as in any manner to cast discredit upon you.

Yours truly,
W. L. O'CONNOR,
Acting Commissioner re Cost of Living.

It must be said in behalf of Commissioner O'Connor that the information now in possession of the public has been based, not on his actual report, but on newspaper versions, prepared in haste and more or less garbled. One Ottawa newspaper yesterday found it necessary to make a correction. At all events it is evidentthat when the report in full is published and placed in the hands of the people it will transpire that there is nothing in it to cast the slightest reflection upon the Matthews-Blackwell Company, the firm in which the people of Peterborough are most directly interested.

If the report as prepared by Mr. O'Connor bears out what he claims concerning it, then he has certainly been misrepresented.. If, as he claims, the figures are correct, then the Matthews-Blackwell Company have nothing to fear. They are not afraid of the facts and have asked for an investigation. Before that has been conducted, Commissioner O'Connor comes to the front with a signed statement to the effect that there is nothing in his report reflecting upon their methods.

Unfortunately the mischief has been done. The reports have gone out and the impression has been made that the packing house companies have made exorbitant profits out of the war. It is a difficult matter—impossible, in short—to head off a false rumor or to correct an erroneous impression once it has been created.

ARMY LEADER IS NOW PREMIER

EX-EMPEROR OF CHINA MAY BE RETAINED BY CABINET.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Peking, July 17.—Tuan Chi Jui, who commanded the republican forces which defeated the attempt to restore the monarchy has definitely assumed the premiership and taken over the war portfolio. President Li Yuan Hung has announced his decision not to resume office. He is in the hospital but his retirement was influenced not by illness but by an upset caused by one of his armed guards running amuck early Monday morning and killing a colonel and two soldiers and wounding several others with a sabre. Tuan has announced he will not demand the abdication of the Emperor and reports are being circulated in southern provinces that he intends to retain him.

Napoleon Barbeau, son of Mr. Archie Barbeau, was run over and severely injured by Curtis brick wagon on Hunter Street this afternoon. He was riding his wheel when the accident occurred, and was picked up and taken into Lynch's Drug Store and later taken to St. Joseph's Hospital in Father O'Brien's auto.

OPERATORS MAY WORK FOR STATE

UNLESS TERMS ARE ARRANGED BY G.N.W. COMPANY.

After deciding yesterday to apply for a Board of Conciliation under the Lemieux act, G.N.W. operators to the number of 3,000 resolved to place their services at the disposal of the Dominion Government for war service should it be found necessary to leave their keys in the company offices.

Government Control.

Operators are not allowed to enlist, and representations are to be made to the Government in the event of a strike to take over and operate the company under Government control unti lthe end of the war. Members of the committees said it was not the wish of the men to do anything to hamper the country in wartime.

CAPT. BURNHAM STANDS LOYAL TO PREMIER

REFUSES TO JOIN IN PROTEST AGAINST ABANDONING EXTENSION.

(Special to The Review.)

Ottawa, July 17.—A large number of Conservative members have signed a petition to the Prime Minister against his proposed abandonment of extension in case of substantial opposition, and requesting another caucus. Capt. Burnham, M.P. for West Peterborough, refused to sign and will remain loyal to the Prime Minister in the exercise of his prerogative.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

PETERBOROUGH TUESDAY, JULY 17, 1917

CONDEMNING ITSELF.

THE NEWSPAPER that calls on the Government to prohibit the use of grain for the manufacture of liquor should pause lest it undo itself. It should remember that alcohol is required in the making of munitions and of patent medicine that shows eighteen per cent. of "kick," a higher standard than that of champagne itself and three times the strength of liquors that the same paper makes a virtue of refusing to advertise. But the paper in question does not hesitate to open its advertising columns to the "medicine" the preparation of which has been designed to fill a want created by the temperance legislation that a paper we have in mind so hypocritically endorses.

ALD. SMITH AND STREET CARS.

WHEN ALD. SMITH was elected by the free and independent voters of Ashburnham, one of his ante-election pledges was that he would work to secure a street car service for that section of the city. It must be said that he has done everything possible in this direction. He was one of the foremost workers for an overhead bridge, something that is required before the dream of the Ashburnhamites for civic transportation can be realised. In the alderman's own subdivision there were only two votes cast against that improvement, and these were recorded by men who make it a matter of conscience to oppose all money bylaws.

But Ald. Smith's constituents are becoming impatient and are urging him into further action. At last night's meeting of Council he submitted a proposition that promises to solve the problem at least temporarily and to be the best in sight. Sir Adam Beck is to be asked to establish a jitney service from the corner of Hunter and George streets to the corner of Hunter and Roger streets in Ashburnham, a ticket on the jitney to be good for a transfer over any part of the street railway system and vice versa.

One jitney would suffice for this purpose and the cost would not be heavy. At all events the receipts of the street railway are sufficient to justify the extra outlay. Some kind of service is needed, and the residents of Ashburnham are entitled to some measure of consideration.

Fortunately for the citizens on the east side of the river, the street car system is now public property, with a man at the head of it who is always disposed to do anything in reason for the people. Ashburnham is likely to get the service asked for, and Ald. Smith will be able to add another to his already considerable list of fulfilled pledges.

PARKING THE AUTOS.

BUSINESS MEN who own autos have always felt the necessity for a place to park them while they are engaged during office hours. Leaving the cars indiscriminately on the streets causes serious obstruction to traffic, and the problem is a trying one with the police force. Chief Thompson would solve it by having all cars parked on the market square and this proposition met with aldermanic approval at the meeting of Council last night, but final consideration was postponed until the next session.

Here is an excelent oportunity for the aldermen to find a good position for some returned soldier who is no longer able to take up heavy work. The market square could be paved with asphalt and all cars parked there. Let a returned soldier be put in charge at a nominal salary in order to give him the required standing as a city official, and the fees which he would collect from the autoists for the care of their cars during their absence would make his compensation ample. A vexing question could thus be disposed of, order brought out of chaos, and one returned soldier provided for.

ALL KINDS OF PEOPLE.

(Chicago News.)

In the columns of a local weekly newspaper which is generally regarded as the organ of the Thompson city administration appears this gem: "Let us place an actual embargo, by congressional action, upon foodstuffs, limiting exportations to our surplus, if any, after American needs have been provided for." Questions of food conservation do not worry it. Let the rest of the world go hungry while Americans gorge their fill— that is its version of "American first." Here is another gem from the same source: "Let us keep our fighting men at home, at least until we are prepared to defend our land from invasion." By following the so called patriotic policy outlined in the sentences quoted the American nation would do more to help German autocracy win the war than has been or can be accomplished by Germany's ruthless submarine warfare.

It is a most extraordinary thing that practically the same purposes which have filled the seas with murderous U-boats should be openly advocated in the United States in the name of American partiotism!

MUST BE BORN AGAIN.

(Winnipeg Tribune.)

The Tribune has been asked why, when it is so continuously advocating Liberal or Radical policies, it shows frequently such hostility to the Canadian Liberal party and displays an ascerbity and acidity in reference to it which do not characterize its criticisms of the Tory party.

The answer seems so obvious that the query appears unnecessary. The Tribune believes that the Canadian "Liberal" party is not, and for twenty years has not been, a Liberal party. It has been, whilst using the Liberal name, a more reactionary body than the official or avowed Tory party. It has been a wolf in sheep's clothing, which is more dangerous to a betrayer, the Tribune will criticize the Tory policy and administration with as much politeness as it can command. But it cannot command enough to have any to spare for the "Liberal" rump. In the interest of real Liberalism and of the country, that must be born again.

THE GERMANS' submarine warfare at least accomplished one result. It made an active enemy of the United States.

Wit and Wisdom

Choosing His Weapons

She—Why not ask father now. There he goes to the billiard room.

He—Wait till he goes to the library—I'd rather be hit with a book than a billiard ball.

Her Reply

"Oh, shall I go to the war?" said he;
She looked at him and said:
"A spinster I would rather be
Who loved a soldier dead
Than be the wife of one who would Not serve his country when he could."

A Poor Counter

"He's an expert accountant."

"I don't believe it."

"Why not?"

"I played golf with him the other day and the scores he handed in convinced me that he had never studied arithmetic.

Stopped Him

"Does your husband grumble much about the meals?"

"He used to, but not any more. I stopped him."

"How?"

"I told him that when he earned money enough to have a regular beefsteak on the table he'd get it."

First Aid

There recently rushed into a police station a youngster very much out of breath who gasped out to the officer:

"You're wanted—down—down in—in our street—an' bring an ambulance!"

"Because," the kiddie explained when he had recovered his breath, "mother's found the lady that pinched our doormat!"

Usurping All Pleasures

Vexation and grief struggled for mastery in Gertrude's soul.

"Mother, do come out and speak to Freddy," she said. "He's treading on all the ants in the garden."

"How very unkind!" said mother.

"Yes, that's what I've told him," said Gertrude., "but he won't let me tread on a single one."

Mixed Orders

All day long they drilled him in the foot squad and his greatest difficulty came in the order, "Mark time; march!" Over and over for his special benefit the drill sergeant gave that order. In the evening he was put on patrol on officers' line and told to keep the walk clear of all but officers and their families, and to challenge everybody after a certain hour, also, to advance but one member of any party challenged for recognition. About 10.30 p.m. two figures showed up under electric light. The new sentry: "Halt! Who's there?" 'Officer of the day and daughter.' "Advance, officer of the day to, be be recognized. Mark time, daughter!"

Made Her Anxious

Jack Tar and his Sal were up in front of the parson. On being asked the usual question, "Wilt thou have this woman, etc?" Jack answered, "I 'ull." You must say 'I will,'" corrected the parson, and repeated the question.

"I 'ull," responded Jack, more firmly than ever.

The irate clergyman threatened to stop the service altogether if the response was not properly given. That was too much for Sally, who broke in quite savagely: "Look a-here! thee'll 'ave our Jack sayin" e won't in a minute if ye keep on badgering 'im."

The service was resumed.

The Bluff

"The late General Funston," said a magazine editor, " hated a bluffer. Bluffers, he claimed, always gave themselves away."

"He often told a story about a bluffer who applied for a vacancy as tutor to a broker's son.

"The broker was an enthusiastic stamp collector, and he thought he might perhaps put the tutor to work cataloguing his stamps, so he asked the man:

" 'One last question. Are you acquainted with philately?'

"The tutor smiled.

" 'My goodness, yes,' he said. 'I speak it like a native, sir.' "

Shakespeare, though no broker, furnished stock quotations.

HOW TO SPEND A GAY HALF HOUR

As the street car scurried along, Esterley surveyed the man who faced him. The person wore a black soft hat with a very wide brim, a turned down collar and a flowing bow tie, shell rimmed glasses big enough for auto headlights, and a soft silk shirt of turbulent color schemes. Under his arm was a portfolio from which the edges of sheets of foolscap protruded.

"I wonder just what kind of nut he is," thought Esterly. At Charlotte Street the unique individual rose and left the car. Esterly followed because t was Esterly's street. As the two men crossed over Esterly saw a sheet of paper slide out of the portfolio carried by the fellow ahead of him. The paper fluttered to the pavement below. Esterly called out, "Hey, there!" but the man kept on his way.

Esterly darted out into the traffic and rescued the sheet just as the heavy truck was about to run over it. The man who had dropped it had disappeared, and Esterly put the paper in his pocket. When he reached his office he unfolded the sheet. It was covered with very fine writing—the work of a careful penman. The title, heavily underscored at the top of the sheet, was as follows: "How to Spend a Pleasant Half Hour." Esterly began to read:

"Most people when unexpectedly confronted with a little spare time, sit down and try to figure out the best thing to do with it. Before they have mapped out a program, the period of pleasure has expired, and the hour strikes which summons them to bed or to sordid toil. How much more sensible it would be if everybody has always with him a list of things that may be done as opportunity presents. Here are a few suggestions for pleasantly passing a half-hour:

"See your dentist. Probably nothing is the mater with your teeth, but why not make sure?

"Compare your grocery slips, item by item, with your old slips of, say, four or five years ago. For clean, wholesome sport, nothing better has been devised.

"If you own a car, and can coax it to run, scoot out to the west side, or the south side, as the case may be, and notice how that section is all built up right where you were offered a tract of eighty acres for $300 ten years ago. If you are lucky, and do not own a car, you can very enjoyably put in a stray half-hour in a somewhat similar way by looking over the list of stocks in the daily newspaper, and figuring out your present net worth on the assumption that you had taken advantage of the tips you had four years ago. This pastime not only yield immediate happiness, but puts you in good humor for the rest of the week.

"Another highly edifying occupation for a random period of leisure will be found in computing the sums you have spent foolishly during the last twenty years.

"The foregoing list is not claimed to be exhaustive. It is designed merely to suggest some of the possibilities which lie in the neglected half-hour. To a person of normal imagination it is hoped these ideas will invite other schemes through the medium of which time may be pleasantly beguiled which otherwise would be lost."

Esterly laid the paper down on his desk. "And to thnk," he muttered, "that there is a law against carrying firearms!"

RED CROSS TENDER THANKS

No one will object if in tendering its most hearty thanks to all who helped to make our tag day a success the office bearers and executive head the list with the Press. Over and over again, both The Examiner and The Review have placed the society under a debt of deep gratitude for the kind and sympathetic way in which they have lent their generous aid. Of course, the Red Cross Society stands on a different footing to any other society endeavoring to serve its country and empire, and newspapers all over the continent have recognized this, but at the same time we doubt if any newspapers have given such generous support to its local Red Cross Society as the Peterborough papers have done. So once more we tender cordial and hearty thanks to them.

Others whom we wish to thank are the captains and ladies who helped in the various districts, one and all stuck to their posts in spite of rain and storm, and did not weary in well-doing.

To Mr. Peck, president of the Children's Aid Society, for lending collecting boxes.

Mr. Stenson, for the use of the Tix-It Theatre for headquarters.

To all those who so kindly lent their motors, and to Mr. John Edgar for twine, two dozen balls.

The Pig.

This pig went to market
While others stayed at home.
This one was sold for Red Cross
Oh! don't leave him alone.

We are not applying for the Poet Laureate's laurels, but in acknowledging the splendid and unique manner in which Mr. David Breckenridge, of Asphodel Township, Westwood, has shown his interest in our society, we felt we simply had to point the moral and involuntarily we burst forth into poetry.

This pig was christened the "Red Cross" one when selected by Mr. Breckenridge, and undoubtedly such a name added greatly to the pig's sense of importance. It would consider itself as of a higher caste than the other pigs and carry itself accordingly.

In the human race a feeling of importance and weight sustains one wonderfully and causes one to wax fat and flourish and the same applies to the pig race. This pig which brought $55.10 into the Red Cross exchequer had this sense and so became "some" pig. Will some others of our farmer friends follow Mr. Breckenridge's example. If they will pick one out for the Red Cross, not only will it flourish, but good luck will be with all the others and they would enjoy the privilege of helping a society which has practically no expenses and which works to restore the fallen, cheer the sick, and comfort the lonely men who are fighting our battles.

Who will be the next to follow the fine example set by Mr. Breckenridge?

CITY HAS AUTHORITY TO GO INTO COAL BUSINESS

Council Will Buy Fuel Direct From Mines for City Buidings as Well as for Civic Yards---Cost Will be About $9.25 a Ton Delivered Here.

The Municipal Coal Yard Bylaw has been approved of by the Ontario Railway Board and all that remains to be done is for the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to endorse it and the matter will be in the hands of the City Council to deal with as they see fit.

City Solicitor Gordon received the final order from the Railway Board and they approved of the bylaw in every particular and suggesting that the words "and the details of the gross cost" be added to the details of the accounting to be furnished by the City Treasurer. This was done at the special meeting of the Council last night.

Ald. Stratton would like to have had the words "Gross and net" added so that the people would know all the details in connection with the operation of the yard.

Ald. Weir thought the same way and was a seconder to Ald. Stratton's motion that the word "not" be added.

After the City Solicitor pointed out that all the particulars required would have to be furnished at any time, and that putting in the additional words would require the bylaw to be again submitted to the Railway Board, the amendment was withdrawn and the bylaw passed its second reading as amended.

People Must Know.

After the bylaw had been passed, it was made quite clear from the statements of several Aldermen that the taxpayer will be kept informed as to the expenses of running the coal yard in addition to the invoice cost of the coal at the mines.

Coal on the Way.

Ald. Dobbin informed the Council that he had received word that five of the cars of egg coal were nearing Toronto and asked if the Council would authorize its purchase. He was of the opinion that the city ought to get the coal for the city buildings from the local dealers at the price quoted in their letter to the Council. He would also like to know if the Council would be satisfied to order coal, when the bylaw was approved of so that it would cost less than $10.00 delivered in the bins of the consumer. He did not want it understood that the coal would cost that much but wanted that as a maximum figure for the committee to work on.

When every one was silent Ald. McIntyre broke the quietude and accused the aldermen of being nervous. They were afraid to take a chance.

Ald. Worth was of the opinion that as the city wanted two cars of egg coal for the city building that it be taken from the people that will supply the city yards. He so moved.

Ald. Taylor seconded the motion which passed.

Ald. Dobbin stated that the company had also informed him that they would have plenty of stove coal and that it would cost $6.00 per gross ton at the mine. This will bring the cost delivered to a little over $9[illegible] if the freight rates are not changed.

The City Clerk and Ald. Dobbin were given authority to send the necessary order.

TOOK CIDER TO GARDEN PARTY

YOUNG MAN IN OXFORD COUNTY LANDS IN THE POLICE COURT.

Woodstock, July 17.—A Temperance Act case of an unusual nature and with an element of distinct pathos in it was heard by Magistrate Ball when Roy Miles, of North Norwich, appeared on a charge of having liquor in a place other than his private residence.

The charge was laid as a result of numerous complaints received by County Constable Hill and Crown Attorney R. N. Ball of drunkenness at several garden parties in the township. The county constable investigated the matter and discovered that young Miles had taken a quantity of last year's cider to a particular garden party, and that several young men who partook of the beverage had become intoxicated. Miles, therefore, was summoned on the charge mentioned.

The case was adjourned.

Louis Riel was perhaps all that is said of him. Perhaps he was made mad by brooding over the very real wrongs of the redskins, as many prairie folk still say. Be either the case, Reil paid, with his life, for his mistakes or his crimes.

And his descendants moved in the wake of the setting sun. One of them, a grandson, named Charteris, was resident in the town of Merrit, British Columbia, when the great war began, a popular and especially active member of the local rifle club. He answered "here" to the first call for volunteers sounded in the Nicola valley, and when he went overseas the citizens of Merritt presented him with a handsome rifle with telescopic sights, which he took with him, by permission, even to sunny France. He had it and used it when he was assigned as a sniper to a difficult and extra-dangerous post. It was on the stock of his rifle that, impelled by the scalp-collecting blood-heritage in his veins, he cut a notch for every German who fell to his quick and certain aim.

Thirty-seven such notches there were when a Krag bullet found its billet in his forehead and he sent his last message to the Hun, a dying man's finger pressing the trigger—and got his thirty-eighth.

The Sweetheart of the Corn

THE SALVING OF A DERELICT

By MAURICE DRAKE

"Oh! what a perishing fool I have been. Will she have me? She's got to—the little brown darling. I'll make her, by gad!" He stood up and stretched himself, delighting in his strength. "I could pick her up in one hand—I'll do it yet, just to show her. And now to write Clement Harper, and then to take tea with Constance the inconstant. 'It's well to be off with the old love before you are on with the new.'"

He locked the little handbag away in his bedroom. In the drawer in which he placed it lay the fragment of stone he had declared should act as death's head at his feast, forgotten this last fortnight. "I'll take it with me now," he said to himself. "It'll remind me of what's taken its place in the drawer—if I want reminding."

He wrote to Harper, asking him to wire reply, and went downstairs, slamming his door behind him. "That young lady who called this morning left her purse behind, Ferguson," he told the hall porter. "If she calls, ask her to leave her address and I'll return it."

"Yessir. Are you expecting her to call, sir?"

"No. I don't know, though; she might." He reflected rapidly that in all probability she would call when her afternoon's work was done. "Here's my key. If she comes, show her in and ask her to wait. Mrs. Ferguson can make her a cup of tea. I shall be back about six." He went off to post his letter and make his adieux to his discarded fair.

But it is one thing to resolve to discard a woman and very much another thing to find the parting seriously discommoded by the presence of a third person. Moreover, if one is possessed by the firm idea that that third person only waits to step into one's own shoes, there is a tendency to delay the parting awhile. A Final Parting, to the male mind, should be a ceremony decently attended by regrets, even by tears—at least on the part of the deserted maiden; and it is an intensely irritating perversion of this order of things to find that, despite some polite expressions of sorrow, the said deserted maiden, so far from bursting into tears and clinging despondency, shows a disagreeable readiness to part good friends and to turn the light of her smiles on another man who, again, appears perfectly prepared to act as a willing substitute.

He found his Constance at tea with another admirer, a youth who held some obscure position in the Geological Survey. Laurence glowered at him sulkily, scarcely vouchsafing a word at their introduction.

"And now for tea, Mr. Bear," said the lady cheerfully. "You won't take sugar, of course."

"Always do," Laurence growled. "Why not now?"

"You look quite too perfectly sweet without it," was the reply, at which the hated rival laughed maliciously.

"And have you found my shoe?" she asked, a little nervously, to change the conversation. Not for nothing had she known and borne with Laurence's furious temper during the last three weeks.

"Yes, I have."

"Where is it?"

"If it's where I left it, it's in my fireplace," Laurence said coarsely. "That's where I chucked it when I found it."

"Very thoughtful of you, I'm sure. And what are you going to give me to replace it?"

"Nothing," said Laurence the brute. "You shouldn't leave your things about."

"I won't—in your rooms," the lady replied with meaning, and turned her conversation to the other man, thanking him gently for some present he had made her that afternoon before Laurence's arrival. For his greater chastening it was produced, and she held it up before him, inviting admiration.

It was a little pendant of good modern design, gold, set with a matrix turquoise and hanging opals. She dangled it before his nose and he leaned back to avoid it, pushing his thumbs into his waistcoat pockets as he did so. One of them came in contact with his fragment of Iceland stone, and he pulled it out and threw it on the little tea tray, greatly endangering the fragile china.

"I wouldn't give that stone for all the turquoises ever dug," he said—and was immediately ashamed at heart for the sentiment underlying his words. To think of her [illegible] in this place!

The young geologist picked it up, glanced at it, and replaced it.

"I wouldn't give much for your knowledge of stones, then," he said superciliously. "If you could trade malachite for turquoise, weight for weight, you'd make money."

"How much?" asked Laurence. "What do you call it?"

"[illegible]. Malachite."

"What's it worth?"

"I really couldn't tell you. I'm not a [illegible]."

Laurence sat upright in his chair. "What—the—deuce," he said, "has that stone got to do with Brummagem jewellery?"

"That's all it's fit for. You seem to have an exaggerated idea of its value."

"Perhaps so. What's it worth a ton?"

"A ton, eh?" He laughed. "You don't buy malachite by the ton, my dear sir. Might as well buy precious stones—really precious ones, I mean—by the pound instead of the carat."

"Look here"—Laurence began to get excited—"what is malachite, anyway?"

The young man entered into a learned disquisition on copper ores and their deposits—"Something after the manner in which stalagmites are formed," he concluded, emerging from a mist of technical terms.

Laurence looked at the woman sitting gracefully between them. Her face, turned towards the speaker, showed polite meaningless interest, but he could see that every word had passed unheeded.

"Is the stuff of any real value?" he asked.

"In large slabs—yes. The Emperor of Russia, I believe, presented a pair of doors to the late Queen that were considered priceless. In small pieces like that—no, not much. As I tell you, it's very largely used for cheap jewellery, being a fine green color with variegated surface. It polishes well, too. I can't tell you what it's worth. You must ask a practical jeweller."

Laurence [illegible] made his adieux with some incoherent promise to meet the pair at dinner that evening, had taken the staircase three steps at a time, and hailed a cab in Tottenham Court Road within three minutes of the youth's last words.

"Bond Street," he said excitedly. "No: first jeweller's you come to. Drive like mad!"

The cab drew up only a short way past the Tube station, and Laurence was across the pavement and into the shop almost before it had stopped. He placed his precious possession on the counter.

"What's that worth?" he demanded.

The assistant picked it up and looked at it curiously. "It's—it's—" he said, and looked at Laurence for information.

"Malachite, man! Malachite. I don't want you to tell me what it is, but what it's worth—by the pound, say."

The assistant really could not say. He would call the proprietor. Would Laurence have the goodness to take a seat?

No, he wouldn't. He preferred to pace the floor, to and fro, his brain spinning in the endeavor to see how far this had bearing on his new plans. One thing was certain—the jewellery suggested it. He would cover Marion—yes, Marion—the prospective owner of malachite mines, or quarries, or whatever they were, could call any woman by her Christian name—he would cover Marion with jewels, he promised himself. The little hands should be weighted down with their flashing burden; tiaras of great price should lie on the cloudy hair, even though all of them must dim with shame for their dulness whenever her eyes laughed or grew moist with tears.

His castles in the air were rudely shaken at the fussy entrance of the proprietor, annoyed at being disturbed from his afternoon of quiet.

"Malachite, sir!" he fumed. "This is a jeweller's establishment, sir—not a lapidary's. If you want to ascertain the value of such rubbish as that you had better go to a stone-mason, sir. Malachite, indeed! Good afternoon." He retreated furiously, and Laurence, somewhat subdued, sought his cab.

"This is not the class of crib I want," he told the driver. "I want a little cheap jeweller's and watch repairer's, where they sell Brummagem goods. And if it's kept by a Jew, so much the better. He won't exaggerate values if he thinks I want to sell," he added to himself.

The cabman reflected a moment. "Right O, sir!" he said. "I fancy I know the clawss o' plyce you mean. Jump in, sir."

He drove up Tottenham Court Road, turning to the left this time, and halting before just such a shop as Laurence had demanded. A score of shabby silver watches hung in its low-browed front, and the shelving slope beneath them was sparsely covered with little ornaments of the same metal, mostly cross-shaped brooches, with an occasional crucifix or two here and there among them.

Laurence entered. "Do you buy malachite?" he asked of a man seated behind the counter.

The shopman removed a watchmaker's glass from his eye and stood up carefully, gathering together the corners of his leather apron with one hands as he did so. He turned one ear towards Laurence.

"Eh? What sye?" he asked, with the purest Cockney accent.

"Do—you—buy—malachite?" Laurence almost shouted.

He shook his head. "Not much nowadays. There ain't no demand for it in the south. They sell more north—in the manufacturin' districks."

"What's its value?"

"I 'ardly know—'olesyle. In the old dyes, when it 'was all Russian malachite an' fash'nable, it used to be worth five-an'-twenty bob a pahnd. Nah they get it from Austryliar—and the price is gone dahn 'orrible. I wouldn't give yer more'n five shillin's a pahnd for it. 'Ow much 'ave yer got ter sell?"

Laurence extracted the fragment from his pocket and handed it over the counter.

"This all?" He threw it into a scales, where it just turned the quarter pound. "Give yer a tanner for it. Yer see, it'll lose 'arf its weight in cuttin' and polishin'—an' there ain't but little demand—"

"I wouldn't sell it for twenty pounds," Laurence cried.

"Then yer must be balmy," the man said calmly, sitting down and resuming his glass. "I don't mind springin' tuppence more, but—"

His voice died away into an incoherent whine behind Laurence's fleeing footsteps. He almost danced across the pavement to his cab.

"Cabby," he said, "this is an occasion. You drive me where I can get a great, long, beautiful drink. And you're to have one too. Forty, if you like."

The man grinned. "If I like, sir! Wotto! But 'oo'll look after my keb?"

"Never mind the cab. I'll buy it. Hurry up and drive me where I can get a decent drink. That's your job, Skip."

He drank a whisky and soda at a gulp and sent another out to the cabman, bidding him wait. On the back of an envelope he made a few rough calculations in pencil, and then ordered another drink whilst he checked his figures.

"Five bob a pound—call it four. Four bob a pound is a hundred and twelve times four bob for a hundredweight. P'raps it's Troy, though. A hundred times four bob—that's twenty quid. Twenty times twenty quid is four hundred. Saints above us! Four hundred quid a ton! Why didn't I live in the happy days before Australian goods spoiled the market—when it was twenty-five bob a pound? Never mind; enough's as good as a feast. Four hundred quid a ton, less expenses of quarrying and freight. Call it three hundred quid, just for fun. And perhaps this chap was bluffing. He sprung twopence more on his sixpence when I wouldn't sell, bless his heart. Here's to him. I must have one more drink whilst I make sure I'm not making a fool's paradise for myself. Oh ho! and not two hours ago I wrote Clement Harper to keep my place in the office open for a fortnight [illegible]. I'll wire him to go to blazes—I can't, though. If he hadn't [illegible] ground to my father, p'r'aps I [illegible] have gone to [illegible] [illegible] off this [illegible]. Besides I should never have got to sea at all.

"How am I to get hold of those shares? Don't suppose they're worth a cent, market price now. I must go slow—devilish slow. Mighty gay job for me if anybody smells a rat. And there'll be guinea-pig shares, too. Bought at a quid and chucked into the wastepaper basket, most likely. But I'll get them easily enough. Rich son of bankrupt father desires to make amends. The thieves! They'll grin, I bet. But they'll grin the wrong side of their mouths, when My dynamite has blown My lava to glory, and My winches are hoisting My malachite out on the quayside. My quayside too, perhaps, after a bit. And My Marion shall wear this My precious sample in the middle of a diamond tarara, as big as the Marble Arch . . . That rotten whisky's laying hold of me. I'll go home and dress for dinner and wire Pat to come. I shall be able to ask him questions about the shareholders. Must be careful, though. It won't do to give the show away, even to him."

He sent the wire, but on the way home an awful fear laid hold on him. Supposing the vein or lode, or whatever the deposit ought to be called were only a tiny patch? But the memory of the tumbled heap of fragments beneath Uthild rock somewhat re-assured him. There must be more below. A surface deposit would have crumbled into thinner pieces. He wished he had asked the geologist for his explanation all over again. He remembered something about "copper sulphates." That must mean a combination of copper and sulphur. Sulphur! What was it Harper had said at the inquiry two years ago? "Sulphur. Not a speck." Well—he was wrong, then. Where there were sulphates there must be sulphur to make 'em. But that was a geologist's affair anyway.

And even though the deposit should prove small, surely there might be a deal to be done in the shares, somehow. Worthless paper ought to jump to some sort of a price on the evidence he had before him. If he could corner the lot at a low price, and then go and have a look at the stuff with some practical men, whether it turned out well or no he surely could get the shares off his hands with profit. "Even if I have to salt the claim," he said to himself.

On reaching home he gave the cabman half a sovereign, and ascended the stairs. His heart leaped at the sight of his open door; and he ran in to find his luncheon guest seated by the open window, a table covered with empty tea-things standing beside her.

CHAPTER XIII.

She rose as he entered, a friendly smile upon her lips.

"You're more than punctual," she said. "The porter told me you'd be back by six, but it wants a quarter of an hour of that yet."

Though wisdom warned him to put a guard upon his feet and his tongue the excitement of the afternoon and the drinks he had so speedily absorbed betrayed him. His eyes were bright and his step light and careless as he came to the window. He took her hand and bent over her closely—too closely.

"I—I've had great news," he said. "Glorious news—a great stroke of luck!" and looked in her face for an answering smile.

She hardened into dignity at once. "I'm glad to hear it. And now, will you please let me have my purse. I am in a hurry."

He saw his mistake; and, fatal error! made a bad matter worse by remonstrating.

"But you can't be. Stay here awhile—you can't imagine how good it is to see you having tea in these rooms—and besides—"

"Will you kindly let me have my purse." Her face was impassive as a statue's.

"Yes, of course. In a minute; it's only in the next room. But do sit down. I want to talk to you. I—"

"My purse." Laurence himself could have given the order with no more of curt authority.

"But—"

"Will you get my purse, or shall I call the hall porter?" she demanded, flushed with anger, stamping her little foot.

Laurence turned and walked to the door. Perfectly sober as he was, he knew the girl's eyes were upon him and solely because he took care for every footstep he lurched as he passed the table. When he reached the bedroom he was in a state bordering on frenzy. Taking the bag from the drawer in which he had left it, he returned to the living room, placing it upon the table and crossing the [illegible]

UNCHARTED CASSIAR RICH IN MINERALS

Northern British Columbia Relied Upon by Veteran Prospector for Gold and Silver

A Vancouver journal says: "Jimmy" Moore, the veteran prospector of British Columbia, whose hills he roamed for 60 years, would like to see the Pacific Great Eastern extend from Vancouver to the northwestern point in this province. "I do so," he writes, "as I know the great mineral resources of this northern country in gold, copper silver, zinc, iron, coal and rare metals, as well as large stretches of bunch grass country, and I may say here that the Cassiar district, when once opened up with railway transportation, will be the great lode-mining district of British Columbia."

Experts Know Values

Mr. Moore writes: "In support of this view I may be allowed to call due attention to the report of such an eminent authority as Dr. G. M. Dawson, who visited the northern district in 1878. He gives in detail favorable opinions on the great potential wealth of the whole territory and remarkable finds of rich ore.

"Walker Creek is another unexplored territory for mineral. I have seen at Telegraph Creek some very rich samples of copper ore from this creek. If the government of British Columbia would get interested in opening up this rich and extensive mineral district of Cassiar with railroad transportation," continues Mr. Moore, "they would open up the richest and most extensive mineral district known in the province."

Many Kinds of Ores Seen

"There is an abundance of wood and water," says Mr. Moore, "matters of great importance in connection with mining. Means of railway transportation once provided, mine-operations should be carried on here at less cost than in dry, woodless regions such as are great portions of Arizona. On my last trip to the Cassiar district (1907), I met at Telegraph Creek a very intelligent prospector, W. P. Ball, one of the very few prospectors in the Cassiar district at that date, who said to me that 'east of Dease Lake and south of Haskin Mountain for 100 miles in extent the country is practically unexplored but what is known of it has shown surface croppings of copper, silver and gold ores.' Mr. Ball also said that the head of the Iskoot River he considered one of the best districts in Cassiar to prospect for copper, gold, silver, nickel and iron. The lower part of this river was formerly worked for placer gold. He also considers that in this section is a low pass that could be used for railway construction from Hazelton to the Stikine River."

When Pouring in Gasoline

A chamois skin will catch any water in gasoline while permitting the gasoline to flow freely into the tank of the automobile. In the days of gasoline costs it is wise to employ the chamois. Care should be taken to keep the funnel in direct contact with the metal of the tank at all times while gasoline is pouring through. It has been discovered that static electricity may be developed by the chamois, with a remote possibility of an explosion, if the funnel is held away from the tank opening.

See the Battery

Doctors and others who have occasion to make frequent stops and starts of the motor develop often what appears to be a defect in the electrical system. The probability is, when the car used under such circumstances fails to start with the starter, that the battery current has rapidly been used up while no fresh supply has been generated. Look first to your storage battery under such conditions. It is not likely there is anything seriously wrong.

Health and Beauty Aids

MAE MARTYN

Dearie: Yes, I believe men all recognize a "made" complexion. Throw away your powder and rouge, and use a plain spurmax lotion. Then you will have a complexion of which you can feel justly proud, because it will be real as well as beautiful. To prepare it dissolve four ounces spurmax (which you may get from your druggist) in one-half pint witch hazel or hot water. This lotion cannot be detected when on, and its regular use banishes lines, blotches, pimples, blackheads, and sallowness. The spurmax lotion is delightful for spring months, as it protects the skin from the winds.

Dora: You can make your eyes sparkling and clear by this simple home treatment: Dissolve an ounce of crystos (get at drug store) in a pint of water. One or two drops in each eye every day will be all that is necessary to make them feel strong and look bright. If the lids are red or inflamed, try soaking dabs of absorbent cotton in the tonic, and laying them on each eye.

Juanita: The sagginess of skin which you write about is disfiguring, and you will soon be wrinkled past help if you neglect it. But try this simple treatment, and I'm sure it will work wonders. Mix an ounce of almozoin (from the drug store) in one-half pint cold water, and add two teaspoonfuls glycerine. This cream jelly will cause the skin to contract slowly until the healthy firmness is restored. Keeps your complexion clear and free from blemishes. Also removes blackheads.

Eugenia: Your yellowness doubtless means that your liver requires a regulator, and I would suggest a plain kardene tonic. This will cleanse the blood and give tone and strength to the liver and kidneys, and when these organs are in a healthy condition you will be free from the bilious attacks, the obstinate headaches, and the pains in small of back and groin. To prepare this tonic I get one ounce kardene from druggist, and put it into one-half pint alcohol (never use whiskey), then add one-half cupful of sugar and hot water to make a quart. The dose is a tablespoonful before meals. The kardene tonic is excellent to clear the skin of pimples, blotches, and sallowness, and its timely use frequently saves doctor's bills.

Chloe: I have found the most beneficial shampoo for the scalp and hair can be made at home by dissolving a teaspoonful canthrox in a cup of hot water. This is unusually soothing and cleansing to the itchy, dandruff-laden scalp, and quickly corrects over-oiliness and other scalp-up-sets. My shampooing with canthrox has restored an even color, rich gloss, and soft fluff to my hair, which was becoming dull and brittle. It seems to have encouraged a vigorous and luxuriant growth.

P.S.: The styles point to a continuation of the slim figure effects, and as you show signs of an added waistline you should take steps to reduce your weight. Make this preparation at home, and before each meal take a tablespoonful: Get four ounces of parnotis from your druggist, and dissolve in one and one-half pints of hot water. Strain and cool the mixture before using. This is inexpensive, and will be welcome to the woman who does not want strenuous diet or exercise.

Lorraine: Your faded hair is not necessarily dying, though it is in danger. Here is a home-made hair tonic, costing little, which I know is of great value to scalp and hair: Into one-half pint alcohol put one ounce quinzoin (which I get from the druggist's), and add one-half pint water. This gives you a full pint. I have found it very soothing, and it banishes the dry, harsh, unhealthy condition of the scalp, invigorating the hair roots so a beautiful growth is certain to result.

IF SIR WILFRID IS RETURNED

PAPER IN HIS CONFIDENCE ATTEMPTS TO FORE-CAST POLICY.

Montreal, July 17.—L'Union des Canton de L'Est, of Arthabaska, which enjoys the distinction of being published in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's business home, announces that if the Liberal leader comes back to power, not only will he refuse to put the conscription measure into force, but will also refuse to take any Liberal into his Cabinet favoring the compulsory measure in question. In a word, Sir Wilfrid, his newspaper announces, will fall back to the volunteer system. The answer is given, so the Arthabaska paper says, to the "honest Conservatives" who are supporting Sir Wilfrid, and who naturally want to know what the leader will do if he came back to power.

"But," asks the paper, "what about the Liberals who may have voted for conscription and whom he may take into his Cabinet? Here, again," the Union says, "Sir Wilfrid Laurier will not select his colleagues blindly, and he knows well the men with whom he has to do, and will act as the circumstances dictate. Laurier will remain what he has always been—a Democrat working with the people, whose aspirations he shares and understands. Let us, therefore, have confidence in Laurier and the Liberal party, the party of tolerance, the union of races and of social, religious and moral progress."

In a second article the same paper refers to Blondin, Sevigny, Rainville, Chabot, Robidoux, and Champagne as "the six French-Canadian Judases."

Auto Owners Are Exempt From Tax

Immigration Officers Are Not Collecting $8 Per Head at the Border.

Seattle, Washington, July 17.— A more liberal interpretation of the federal law calling for the payment of a head tax of $8 for citizens crossing the Canadian border into the United States will be urged upon the Immigration Department. The border states are protesting that motorists were being forced to pay a tax which they declare is absolutely unnecessary, and this was depriving these states of money which had been spent in former years. A number of Canadians have complained that they have been held up and forced to pay the tax.

Ontario motorists don't seem to be up against this trouble, according to Mr. Robertson, secretary of the Ontario Motor League, and Mr. W. A. McLean, Deputy Minister of Highways.

"Mr. McLean and myself, with a large party of motorists, went through Prescott and on to Ogdensburg last week and we were not bothered with the head tax at all," said Mr. Robertson to The Telegram. "They don't seem to be imposing that tax on motorists and I don't think they will. If a man has a car, it is not likely that he is going to stay out of the country. Only last week I went through Lewiston in my car and the officers there didn't ask me for any head tax."

"Motorists who are going away on trips," said Mr. McLean, "should see that they have their passports before leaving Toronto. Then where they cross in the United States they should see the customs officials about their car so that they will not have to pay any duty when they return. If this is done they will not find any trouble crossing the border."

WILL DO MEN'S WORK

College Women Enter Electrical Office

Twenty women, graduates of universities and colleges, are engaged in engineering work in the Schenectady, New York, offices of the General Electric Company, equipping themselves to take over important work now done by men, if the latter are drafted into army service.

All the women were graduated from colleges or universities after following technical courses and most of them specialized in engineering subjects, which fit them for work in the big electric plant. All the women are engaged in the office, sharing much of the work that otherwise would be turned over to men.

GIRL RUN DOWN BY AUTOMOBILE

SADIE LAVINE HAD LEG BROKEN ON CHARLOTTE STREET.

Sadie Lavine, the little daughter of Samuel Lavine, 199 Charlotte Street, was run over by an auto yesterday afternoon and sustained a fracture of the right leg just above the knee.

The little girl was in front of the Snowden House, and attempted to run across the street, and, according to eye-witnesses, the car owner brought the machine to a stop, and just after he had started up again the little girl ran out in front of the car again, and the wheel passed over her leg.

She was picked up and taken into her father's store where, after medical aid had been called, she was removed to the hospital in the car that ran over her.

This is another instance where the parents should exercise more care over their small children, and prevent them from being on the street unattended, particularly on Charlotte Street, where so many autos are passing every hour.

LUMBER TRADE INJURED

British Embargo Prevents Normal Business

A prominent Canadian lumber merchant calls attention to the position in which lumber merchants in Ontario and Quebec have been placed since the placng of the embargo on lumber in Great Britain.

"Unless the war ends soon, or the embargo is lifted shortly," he says, "some of our plants will be completely disorganized. These will be the plants that were built and equipped principally for British trade."

He explained that stocks of lumber manufactured for British trade are accumulating, and predicts a disruption of manufacturing conditions if the war continues another year.

The embargo on lumber has been in effect since May 31. Under this edict from the British Government no lumber is to be shipped during the summer months to individuals in England unless a special license is obtained from the Government, and it is understood that the Government is not issuing any special licenses.

EMPLOYES SIGN PLEDGE

To Help Country Win The War By Dieting

Washington, July 17—The pledge being signed by Government employes at the suggestion of the Food Controller is:—

"Wshing to aid my country during the war, I promise:

"1. To eat one wheatless meal a day.

"2. To eat beef, mutton or pork not more than once a day.

"3. To economize in the use of butter.

"4. To cut my daily allowance of sugar in tea, and coffee and in other ways.

"5. To eat more vegetables, fruit and fish.

"6. To urge in my own home, or the restaurants which I frequent, the necessity of economy."

WOMEN DENIED PASSPORTS

Relatives Of Soldiers Cannot Go To France

The War Department of the United States has asked the State Department not to issue passports to wives and other female relatives of officers and soldiers at the front.

With the crossing of the sea by Pershing's expedition, the War Department was bombarded with petitions by the wives, mothers, and sweethearts of the men for information as to how best to proceed to be near them in France. Many hoped to live in Paris, so their relatives could visit them while on leave from the trenches.

The war department makes it plain that it disapproves of this practice and will do everything possible to prevent it. No person can enter any of the warring countries without passports to identify him, and the state department will be asked not to issue papers to persons going abroad merely to be near the troops.

The same rule will apply to the National Guard and draft forces when they go to France.

Medical statistics have shown that eight men die suddenly from disease to one woman.

QUEBEC PRESS IS BITTER IN COMMENTS ON CONSCRIPTION

One Leading Newspaper Makes Violent Assaults on Premier While Another Counsels Submission.

(Ottawa Journal-Press)

We are not anxious to advertise vicious utterances by some of the French-Canadian newspapers, Liberal or Nationalist, on the subject of conscription and the Borden Government, but it is worth while to remark that some of the Conservative papers in Quebec are doing a creditable and patriotic work in endeavoring to instil common-sense on the conscription question, and offset the mischief done by papers of the opposite party stripe. As examples of the two kinds of comment, we may take utterances last week in Le Bulletin, a Montreal weekly Liberal paper, and L'Evenement, the French-Conservative daily in Quebec City.

Says Le Bulletin:—

"Those who saw the wicked and brutal smile that distorted Borden's heavy face just after he had obtained a vote resultant from a carefully worked up race fanaticism that had been propagated among the English element, and a vote given by three French-Canadians which will always remain pilloried—those who saw the unwholesome look of satisfaction on the face of the Premier-by-charity—can understand what a chasm is yawning in Canada today between the two races and religions, between the democracy of which Sir Wilfrid Laurier is head, and the autocracy and plutocracy that has as leader the future Lord Borden. For Borden will draw his pay for blood. He was very near not drawing his price, however, for the future Baron Minotaur and his evil genius were very near not coming back from their last trip to Europe. If the censor's office, which still allows pro-German papers we could name to be circulated in Canada, had not worked os well on certain occasions, we would be surprised today to see Sir Robert speaking in the name of Canadian soldiers who are over there. All Canada's soldiers are not dead fighting Germans, and London prisons are not made for Englishmen only. Greetings to those who understand! History will prove that Borden is hated by our soldiers. There is no secret so well guarded but what it leaks out somewhere."

Such is the language used by a French-Canadian Liberal paper about the Conservative Prime Minister on account of a measure which found the support in Parliament of the great majority of English-speaking Liberals. It is worse than most; but it is not too much to say that all the French-Canadian papers which support Sir Wilfrid Laurier politically are doing that sort of work. And why not, when Sir Wilfrid himself could declare at a political meeting, as he did, that the Borden Government had been wilfully sending our men to Europe to be slaughtered?

On the other hand, as already said, the French-Canadian Conservative press is making some effort to stem the flood of lying and slander and foolishness which has been let loose on the other side. To quote L'Evenement:—

"We do not wish to be unduly pessimistic and we are not so. However our opinion of the situation is that unless there is greater effort, less intermittent and more co-ordinated it will yet require seven years of war on the part of the Allies to bring Germany to their terms. Under these conditions we believe that all the citizens subject to the authority of one or other of the Allied Govrenments, whether they be citizens of France, of England, of the United States, or of the colonies are bound in honor as in duty to submit themselves to the laws judged necessary, however harsh they appear to be, in order that by the sacred union and the common effort of all the democracies, the world may one day be delivered from the terrible Germna menace.

"It is for this reason that, when the Canadian Government imposes conscription upon us we submit ourselves to it without enthusiasm but with firmness, holding as cowards and criminals those who, by open opposition illegal and criminal, compromise the unity of sentiment and of action which our young country needs for the purpose of worthily playing its part as a faithful and loyal colony."

TO RECLAIM UNFIT MEN

Congress Asked To Authorize Special Treatment

Millions of men rejected for physical reasons will have a chance to enter the army or navy after going through a combined medical and military training, if the plan of Dr. John H. Quayle, of Cleveland, is adopted by the Government.

Dr. Quayle has seen Secretary of War Baker and Brigadier-General Gorgas, Sergeant-General of the army and both officials enthusiastically approve his plan. It is left to Congres to pass upon it.

According to Dr. Quayle it would cost $100 to reclaim each man for service, but would mean a saving of $1,000 addition of another fighter against the Kaiser and prevention of an inferior race after the war.

"According to statistics on the percentage of men accepted under the voluntary system, it would be impossible to get more than 2,000,000 from the 10,000,000 wen who have registered," says Dr. Quayle. "Between 5,000,000 and 7,000,000 would be barred for physical defects."

His plan is the appointment of a commission by the Government, which would organize a training camp in every state with suitable hospital facilities to reclaim rejected men. Each camp would be supervised by military officers who would carry out the recommendations of the medical men.

NO BACON MONOPOLY

Albert Matthews States the O'Connor Report Is Tissue of Inaccuraces

Montreal, July 17.—"An ignorant and malicious attempt to get political advantage to help the administration," was the way Albert Matthews, director of the Matthews-Blackwell, expressed himself in referring to the O'Connor report, charging his firm with having made huge profits from the supplying of foodstuffs to the entente combatants. Mr. Matthews qualified the whole report as a tissue of inaccuracies—he used the word 'fabrication'—this implying inaccuracies wilfully committed.

Mr. Matthews said the Prime Minister had been asked for an investigation. He denied Mr. O'Connor's statement that there was a bacon monopoly. The American packers' profits on a percentage basis were much larger than the Canadian firms, he argued.

PROBE FLOUR "CORNER"

Westerners Would Like Commissioner O'Connor To Get Busy

Winnipeg, July 17.—Westerners want to see the probe into the practical cornering of food carried further, especially as regards the price of flour. It is said here that some half a dozen men in Winnipeg allied to the milling "trust" made ten million dollars in 1916, not out of flour, but, by reason of their operations in the wheat market, made possible by a control of storage facilities, and an ability to put up the price of flour to even any losses that might be sustained by a manipulation of the wheat market.

WHERE CAN THE MAN WITH THE AUTO PARK HIS CAR?

Problem Considered at Last Night's Meeting of Council But Definite Action Deferred.

Alderman Weir intorduced a subject at the Council meeting last night that will sooner or later have to be attended to by the city, namely, providing a place where the cars of merchants and others may be parked during the business hours. He suggested along Simcoe street near the city hall as a good place.

The police are stopping the practise of autos being left in front of the business houses any great length of time, and some of the farmers and visitors to the city were leaving their cars on Water street and the people along that street were objecting.

Acting Mayor Duncan did not like the idea of parking cars near the city hall as that is a very busy place at all times. Some of the farmers already had started leaving their autos there much to the inconvenience of anyone who had business at the city offices and went there with their cars. He thought that the old carters' stand on Water street could be made into a good place. A man could be secured to look after the cars for a small consideration.

Chief Thompson has had the matter under advisement for some time and thought that the Market Square would be the proper place except on Saturday mornings.

The matter will be more fully discussed at the next meeting of the council.

Ald. Dobbin also asked the council to consider asking the G.T.R. to turn the garden at the station into a park for autos. The congested condition of the station yard at all trains was referred to as a necessity for action in providing a place for private cars.

1,500 EDISON DEALERS AT CONVENTION AND BANQUET

Mr. J. M. Greene, This City, Presents Canadian Interests in an Excellent Paper, Admirably Delivered

Mr. J. M. Greene, managing director of the J. M. Greene Music Co., Charlotte street, returned home last night from New York, where he has been attending the big convention of dealers in Thos. A. Edison's famous New Edison Disc and Cylinder Instruments. Mr. Greene reports an exceedingly interesting, instructive and happy trip, from home to home again. He returned through the beautiful Lehigh Valley, world-renowned for its ever-changing panorama of scenic attraction.

The Convention.

The convention proper was held in New York's biggest and most select hotel, the Waldorf-Astoria, on Thursday and Friday of last week. Edison dealers from all over the North-American continent were present. and the Province of Ontario was represented by 28 visitors. The business portion of the programme was of a varied nature, dealing with methods and propositions calculated to enhance the interests of the "Edison" trade generally under all local conditions. Many papers were submitted, and the one read by Mr. J. M. Greene on "How I Use Along Broadway," the only one in evidence from Canada, was enthusiastically received, and warmly endorsed as a credit to Canadian representation.

1500 At Banquet.

On Thursday night fifteen hundred dealers sat down to one of the most recherche and brilliant banquets they had ever attended. In fact, it was a revelation to most of those present as to what can be prepared an dconducted in the way of such entertainments, which usually form a fraternal annex to all conventions. An unusually pleasing feature of this portion of the programme was the opportunity offered to hear fourteen famous Edison artists unite in song. Among other numbers they, in company with all present, paid acceptable tribute to the Anglo-Saxon Allies by singing "The Star Spangled Banner," "The Maple Leaf" and "God Save the King."

The Trip to Orange.

On Saturday morning the visitors were conveyed by special train to Orange, the home of Edison inventions, were shown through the several big factories, and Mr. Greene, with others, had the pleasure of shaking hands with the great inventor, Thos. A. Edison, himself. While awaiting the return train to New York, the Edison band gave a musical entertainment. This famous Edison band is, without exception, the finest concert instrumental organization in the whole world.

Cosmopolitan Congregation.

Mr. Greene had an exceedingly pleasant time in visiting New York's central points of interest. On Sunday he and quite a few others dropped into the Broadway Tabernacle, and heard the great evangelist, Dr. Wilbur Chapman preach. This famous divine has travelled eight times around the world conducting evangelistic services, and he declares that so cosmopolitan are the congregations at Broadway Tabernacle that during six Sundays he had been filling its pulpit he recognized before him faces he had met in all parts of the globe.

Mr. Greene returns home delighted with American hospitality and courtesy.

SEAL ON BOTTLE NO PROTECTION

A MAN IS NOT ALLOWED TO CARRY LIQUOR TO HIS OWN HOME.

Niagara Falls Ont., July 17—Hugh McLean, aged 53, St. Catharines, was fined $200 for merely having a bottle of whiskey in his possession. The law says that persons may only have liquor legally in his own home, and he may not take it there himself. Magistrate Fraser told McLean liquor may only be carried by a common carrier duly registered. McLean paid. This is the first case of the kind here and Chief Welch says hereafter anybody caught with a bottle will be arrested. Hitherto if the bottle had an unbroken seal the man carrying it was allowed to go through.

Bear your troubles bravely, man, if you haven't got the means to hire a four dollar clerk to bear them for you.

Have a hobby, by all means, but don't keep it till its whiskers get so long that you step on them when you mount it.

LOOK OUT FOR THE DRAUGHT!
HOW LARGE?

Perhaps the disagreeableness of eight drafts is the reason why many people have developed a repugnance to drafts.

It takes a man at least twoscore years to get wise, and a woman can generally make a fool of him in twenty minutes.

People who make a specialty of having troubles of their own often manage to generate some of their associates.

Working at Its Trade.

Summer's here in all its grandeur,
All its beauty, all its heat,
Spreading sunshine like molasses
Over all the dusty street,
Melting collars that were lately
Very white and fresh and pure,
Raising sweat upon the wealthy,
And the faces of the poor.

For it loomed upon the landscape
Like a bakeshop overdone
We were sure it was the only
Cherished and anointed one.
In our bones we felt that never
Could a season be too hot
And that summer would be certain
Every day to touch the spot.

Now we have it as our steady,
Stopping with us all the while,
And at times we pause to wonder
If we really like its style,
If for it with more affection
Hearts would not in rapture throb
If the thing were not so very Conscientious on the job.

But since summer is in season
We must make the best of it.
Though at times we almost wonder
If it isn't a misfit.
It would surely be a beauty,
Like a shirt waist ready made,
If it wasn't so persistent
In the working of its trade.

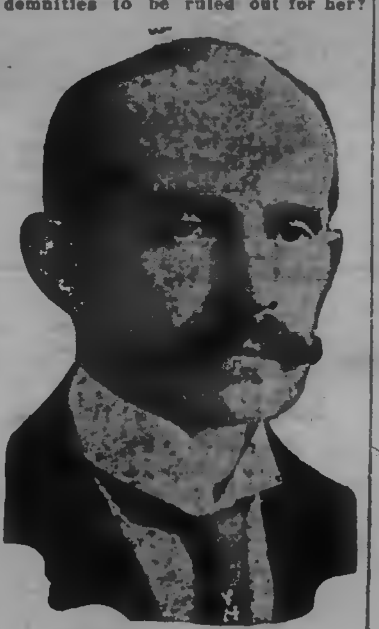
High Sounding Phrases Possess Little Meaning When Examined With Care

THE danger of ambiguous phrases has again been demonstrated by the enthusiasm that was first roused by the declaration that certain of the Allies wanted "no annexations or indemnities" and the analysis that came later of what this would really mean. The whole subject was the theme of an illuminating debate in the House of Commons. Mr. Snowden, the well-known Labor member, moved that the British Government respond to the proposals of the new democratic Government of Russia by declaring a similar purpose to repudiate all plans for "imperialistic conquest and aggrandizement." Already, it will be noted, we have got away from the apparently simple "no annexations and no indemnities." A vaguer phrase was substituted, to which, as Lord Robert Cecil stated for the Government, no nation would refuse to subscribe. But what is meant it would still be necessary to define, and in the definition no two nations might concur. Going back to the original question, Lord Robert put Mr. Snowden through a sort of examination. There was the case of Belgium. Were indemnities to be ruled out for her?



LORD ROBERT CECIL

Mr. Snowden replied that the Labor party had "always demanded the restoration to Belgium of its independence, and not only that, but the making good of all the damage that has been done." So we at once have a Belgian exception to the rule of "no indemnities." And the principle of no annexation began also to appear very like a broken reed when it came to be applied to Arabia, Armenia, Poland, Italy, Serbia, and France.

Mr. Asquith followed in a short but telling speech. He pointed out that there are at least four senses in which the word "annexation" has been employed in all these discussions. In the first place, "there may be and there will be annexation, if this war is to result in a durable and honorable peace, which consists in the emancipation of enthralled and oppressed populations." Another meaning of annexation is "the union of artificially separated nationalities." This obviously applies to Poland and, in part, to Italy and France. Then there was annexation, or the transfer of territory, "for the purpose of self protection and defence against future attack." This is dangerous ground, as Mr. Asquith admitted. So far as England is concerned, he probably had in mind only the German colonies. But he must be aware that this third sense of annexation is precisely the one which the Pan-Germans seize upon as an excuse for keeping Belgium and parts of France. Finally, there was the fourth sense of annexations purely for the expansion of territory and for the sake of political and economic aggrandizement. Against that kind of annexation the British Government was entirely ready to strike hands with the Russian. "I am certain," declared Mr. Asquith, "that there is no Power among the Allies prepared either to practice or to justify" annexation of that sort. And he added his belief that, "when the ground is explored and the ambiguities are removed," there was really no difference "between us and our friend, of the democracy of Russia" in regard to the question of annexations and "the general lines on which peace should be considered."

The City of Jeddah.

To reach Jeddah, the "gate of Mecca," one must thread one's way around and between and over the razor-edges of coral reef that stretch out for miles into the Red Sea. Jeddah is built of coral. Whenever a pious pilgrim provides a new resthouse in the town the contractor goes and hacks large lumps of coral from the reef. They dry white and are used with scanty ashlar work. The windows and "mashrabiyeh" work of the windows are of intricately-carved wood, iron gray from exposure to the sun. Here and there a minaret pokes itself up from among the many-storeyed houses; a tiny cluster of flagstaffs at the northern end of this densely overbuilt little square half-mile betrays the colony of foreign consuls, who almost alone represent Europe here.

Last night in the Five Pin League at the Water street Alleys the West Ends strengthened their hold for the league championship by taking all three games from the Can. Gen. Elec. team. Each team suffered the loss of a man, who was absent from the city and a dummy score had to be substituted. The three games were very close, the West Ends having a three-game total of 1832, while the total for the C.G.E. was 1730. Cocks was high man for the West Ends with a 446 total, while Early was high for the C.G.E. with a total of 407.

Old King Cole Up To Date.

"Old King Cole was a merry old soul,"
And the old ryhme tells us why—
"He called for his pipe and he called for his bowl,"
That was before the land went dry.

If Old King Cole lived nowadays
His lot would be most sad;
There'd be no bowl nor minstrel lays,
And wouldn't that make him mad!

Every once in a while the Athletics send a shiver through the other American League teams. That's when they play ball as they did several seasons ago. If they had some first-class pitchers there might be another story to tell in regard to their standing.

Wonder how that new "find" of McGraw's is going to act when he gets into the game next season. His name sounds good; it's Adam Swigler, and his record at the University of Pennsylvania is fine. McGraw usually knows how to pick winners, but—you can never tell.

There is nothing like optimism, and the Boston fans have enough of it to go round the country, giving everybody a big hunk. They are still confident that the Braves will play a prominent part in the flag race. They'd better tell George Stallings to start stoking the boilers and get under way at once.

Some of these ball players have an awfully long memory. Take Sherwood Magee, for instance. Every time he comes to New York he makes an angry face at Umpire Quigley. He simply can't get over a decision Quigley made some time last April when the Braves were in the big city. Before you know it, there'll be another fistic encounter on the ball lot between "Kid" Magee and "Young" Quigley.

"The greatest pinch-hitter in the world, General John J. Pershing, is about to step to the plate for the Allies. When he gets in his wallop, the kaiser and his men will be on their way home, after an unsuccessful series on the road."

Will Ray Caldwell ever learn from and breaks training rules, with the result that he is soaked with another result that he is osaked with another $100 fine. Hitting the pinnacles is an expensive pastime for ball players. In Caldwell's case it is particularly aggravating, for infraction of training rules cost that young man $3300 in fines last season. How is that for expensive "batting."

Joe Burnam, the Chicago bantamweight, has been one of the busiest little boxers in the game, and has decided to take a long rest. Joe has gone off to a farm, and will lead the simple life for a few months. He is one of the cleanest and best fighters in the game today.

Outfielder Robert Bescher is looking for a job. The former candidate for the Louisville club of the American Association has been turned down by the Louisville management, President O. H. Wathen having filled the gap in his team with "Bunny" Brief, from the Salt Lake City club of the Pacific Coast League and Claude Cooper, of the Philadelphia Nationals. Bescher will continue with the St. Louis Nationals.

A Little Baseball History.

Billy Sunday, the evangelist, once had the ambition to become a pitcher, and it was on July 16, 1890, that he got his chance, and—failed. It was the fifth inning of a game between the Phillies and the Pirates, when Billy tried his hand at twirling for the Pittsburg team. Hurd started the game, but was batted out of the box in the first inning. Then another pitcher, by the name of Baker, took up the work for three innings. He, too, suffered severely, and in the fifth Billy Sunday stepped into the box and took a hand at twirling. And it was sad! The first man who faced him walked; the second hit out for a three-bagger; the third for a double, and the next was hit by a pitched ball and took his base. That was enough. Sunday was gently but firmly removed from the mound, and he never tried to pitch again for the National League; the cure was permanent. "Sunday was a rattling good fielder," the records of the day say; but he demonstrated in that one inning that he wasn't a pitcher.

SCREENING GRAIN

It is certainly not economy to ship dirty grain, as the farmer hauls from thresher to his car at expense of his man loading and unloading and his team drawing; pays freight on same to the terminal elevator, and then gives it away. Those who get it must consider it valuable as they insure it. I noted some time ago that my insurance company's report showed an item $29,000 paid for loss on screenings by fire at terminal. How many others were on the risk? These screenings (dockings) are treated and used for feed by chopping, steaming or boiling. Wild oats chopped fine enough to destroy power of germination or boiled makes good feed. The smaller seeds, as pig and mustard, are also good when so treated, and when cooked are relished by animals which will not eat them when raw.

The up-to-date threshing machines are so equipped that these smaller seeds are left in a heap under the mill and paid for at threshing by estimating the number of bushels in the heap. The farmer might pay two prices and leave this dockings, so left rather than have to separate it from his grain before shipping. Threshing machines should be so equipped with separators to grade wheat, as to run off different screens or through a similar separator to "Jumbo" from elevator, and bag the screenings and small and broken grain, running the good into wagon boxes for the granary or elevator. If the machine does not do a clean job, then the farmer should certainly separate himself at home before teaming or run it through an elevator having a good cleaner, and use the screenings as stock feed.

Old Customs Explained

Ther[illegible] good reason nowadays why the [illegible] or other ornament on a man's hat should be confined, as it usually is, to the left side; but in the days when every man had to be prepared to battle for his life there was a very good reason for this custom. In those days long plumes took the place of bows as ornaments for hats, and if they had been on the right side there would have been serious danger of their getting in the way of the sword and thus causing the overthrow or even death of their wearer.

When Motor Misses

If motor persists in missing when only a light load is being carried, before resorting to adjustments of the carburetor try making spark gap a little wider, presuming, of course, that the magneto is being used. On the other hand, if the motor misses when there is a heavy load on board, it may possibly be obviated by closing the spark gap slightly.

Why Fowls Need So Much Air

Fowls are obliged to throw off much of the waste of the body through the lungs, they do not sweat in the sense that do other animals, but instead breathe several times faster than sweating animals when heated. To keep in good health a hen requires nearly seven times the amount of fresh air in proportion to its size as does a horse.

When You Market Consider Your Less Fortunate Neighbor.

"Every citizen who uses more in his household than his household actually needs is increasing the cost of living for those less fortunate, and he is hindering the prosecution of the war."
Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance.

THE well-to-do woman who sits at her phone and orders provisions lavishly, regardless of price, is abusing the power of money as a bully abuses brute strength!

No longer can we help ourselves as we see fit from an unlimited food supply—we are either limiting our buying to our own real needs or "hogging" someone else's share.

Extravagant buying by those who can afford it, with waste in some kitchens, and excess at some tables, will inevitably bring still greater hardships to those who cannot afford the prices, and hunger to those who must live on less.

Buy for your household as carefully and economically as your husband buys for his factory, store or office. Study food values as well as prices—make it a point to know just what you are getting—eliminate waste—and you'll find that you can feed your family well on far less than you spend now.

LIQUOR CASE IS AGAIN PUT OVER

NEW POINT OF LAW ARISES UNDER ONTARIO TEMPERANCE ACT.

County Langley this morning reserved judgment in the case of Inspector Stewart against Archie McIntyre, of Havelock.

The evidence in the case was taken at Havelock last Friday, and there were so many technical points involved that the court adjourned the argument until this morning.

The charge against McIntyre was having in his possession whiskey at a place other than his residence.

Mr. Gordon, for McIntyre, argued that just having another man's bottle in his hand for a second or so was not "having possession" under the meaning of the Ontario Temperance Act.

Magistrate Langley was ready to give judgment, but at the request of Crown Attorney Hatton, the magistrate reserved judgment until next Tuesday, so that the Crown may submit some legal authorities on the subject.

ALL PUPILS PASS AT PORT HOPE

PRINCIPAL GILLIES MAKES USUAL CLEAN SWEEP OF HONORS.

We told you the other day about Peterboro passing 85 per cent. of entrance candidates and Kingston having seventy-four failures. We told you also to wait to hear the results in Port Hope. They arrived to-day, and as usual, Mr. Gilles has made a clean sweep. Thirty-seven candidates wrote and thirty-seven were successful. The total marks obtainable was 650 and Mr. Gillies had nine pupils with over 500; fourteen with more than 450; and eleven with more than 400.

This is the seventeenth entrance class to write under Mr. Gillies in Port Hope. During the period 717 candidates had tried the examinations and 712 have been successful. This is a record that cannot be equalled in this Dominion. Hats off to Robert and the teaching staff of the Public School. It is regrettable indeed if Port Hope loses such an efficient principal and teacher as Mr. Gilles.

GERMANY GIVES UP ATTEMPT TO RUN BRITISH BLOCKADE

Thirty Vessels Loaded With Coal Will be Left at Rotterdam, the Disastrous Naval Engagement the Other Day Showing the Futility of Efforts to Get Them to Germany

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

London, July 18.—A despatch from Ymuiden, Holland, says the German merchantman Magdalena Blumenthal which ran aground off Zandovort while attempting to run the blockade from Rotterdam to Germany is a total wreck. The allegation by Dutch newspapers that part of Monday's encounter between British destroyers and German merchantmen occurred in Dutch territorial waters is generally discredited here. The shoals on the Dutch coast extend so far out that it is necessary for ships to steer a course well outside the territorial limits.

The attack, it is said, has occurred more than four miles from shore. As a result of Monday's skirmish it is now announced in Rotterdam that Germany has decided to lay up thirty coal steamers there instead of attempting to run them home.

NEW CHANCELLOR A STOP GAP

London, July 18.—The Exchange Telegraph Company announces that Chancellor Michaelis has asked president of the Reichstag to summon Thursday's afternoon session for a communication from the Government. An Amsterdam despatch says the belief in Liberal circles in Berlin is that Chancellor Michaelis is merely a stop gap who will prepare the way for something in the way of a dictatorship with General Ludendorff in supreme control.

London, July 18.—It is stated here today that the results of British recruiting in the United States have been very satisfactory and the quality of the recruits is high.

A LINDSAY MAN CASHED CHECK WAS FOUND N.G.

YOUNG MAN WHO ISSUED THE DOCUMENT LEFT FOR PETERBORO.

Lindsay, July 18.—A number of Lindsay merchants and other citizens are very anxious to receive information concerning the whereabouts of a smooth individual who worked at a plant, and who, it is said, left Saturday night, leaving many unpaid bills.

The young man drifted into town some weeks ago and secured employment. He secured rooms at a private residence, and took his meals at a hotel. He was of good appearance and a glib talker, and not always truthful, but played his cards so successfully that not the slightest suspicion was attached to his movements. Automobiling and companionship with the fair sex seemed to be his strong card, but his earnings failed to keep up with the pace, and he pan-handled his friends for loans, which all told amounted up to the three figures. He also played upon several local merchants, securing

FIRE MARSHALL WANTS A SHARE OF INSURANCE

FROM QUAKER OATS AND OTHERS CARRYING UNLICENSED INSURANCE.

Toronto, July 18.—Provincial Fire Marshal Heaton has failed to get a response from the Quaker Oats Co. at Peterboro in regard to his demand that they pay some $6,000 tax upon the unlicensed insurance which they carried upon their million dollar plant whch was almost completely destroyed by fire some time ago. Mr. Heaton is now sending a final notice, and if the company fails to respond the case will likely be aired in the courts. To date the tax on unlicensed insurance in the Province, where fires have occurred, amounts to over $15,000. Over $5,000 of this has already been collected and some $9,000 is outstanding. Included in this amount is about $1,300 owing to a result of the recent fires of the Domnion Canners.

A petition was presented by nearly 2,000 citizens asking the Stratford City Council to establish a civic coal and wood yard.

WIN-THE-WAR LIBERALS MEET AND DRAW UP PLATFORM

Believe That Canada's Paramount Duty is to Win the War—Clearly at Odds With Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Ottawa, July 18.—After a meeting of Win-the-war Liberals, Mr. Hugh Guthrie gave out this statement:

"At a meeting of Liberals who supported the military service act, it was resolved:

"That Canana's part in the war must continue to absorb the best energies of the country till the final anr complete vihtory of the allies is arhieved. This view is especially dear to all Liberals who have fought from time immemorial for democracy against autocracy and for the national and self-governing rights of small peoples. Canada's own frture safety is absolutely involved in such a fight.

"That we record our unbounded able debt to the four hundred thouadmiration of and our undischargeand gallant Canadian soldiers and nurses who have offered, and in rany cases given, their lives for the world's freedod.

"That we express our appreciation of the splendid patriotic gifts and service by which our people at home—men, women, children—have done their utmost to emulate the example of their sons and brotehrs in the trenches.

"That we endorse all necessary steps to secure the requisite number of men to fill the gaps in the Canadian ranks without delay, as anything short of this amounts to a betrayal of the living and the dead.

"That the organization of the man-power of the country must be accomplished by an immediate alteration of our system of taxation to meet war-time conditions, which will insure that those who do not fight will pay, and pay in proportion to their ability, as has been done in the motherland, in other British Dominions, in the United States and in other allied countries.

"That immediate steps be taken to eradicate war profiteering, whether in foodstuffs, munitions or other commodities."

IRISH CONVENTION TO MEET JULY 25th

Capt. Burnham Outlines the National Cleavage and Accepts the Issue as One Provoked by Other Than English Speaking Race---Speaks From Information Gathered on Visit to Quebec.

Capt. Burnham wires The Review as follows: The Goddess of Discord has arrived in Canada. No doubt about that. The speeches of Sir Wilfrid, Oliver and Clark last night were delivered with almost screaming force and bitterness. The French of both parties voted together, which accounts for the low Government majority on the Extension Bill. Wherever one goes, in the House or out of it, the Irish Catholics are blamed by the French for the fierce domestic turmoil. They point to Bishop Fallon, and to Rule 17, and demand with fury its repeal.

I was immensely amused to hear two French barbers the other day call the Irish Catholic an oppressor. The French really appear to think the English mere tools or instruments of tyranny in the hands of the Irish.

There will be an election at once, and it is not too much to say that the fate of Canada hangs in the balance. The truth is that after one hundred and fifty years we have arrived at the crossways. When people are going to be ill one can never tell what will be blamed for it, but it is usually the last lemon tart. It is so now. It is a fair line-up and free-for-all. Surely it cannot be said that the English-speaking are the aggressors. We certainly did not begin the fight. All other questions are all bluffs. This is the real one. I was down in Quebec lately.

ELECTION CERTAIN.

Ottawa, July 18.—We are to have a general election in Canada. Sir Robert Borden's resolution in favor of an extension passed by a vote of: Yeas, 82; nays, 62, and six conscription Liberals voted with the Government. Nevertheless, in view of the Prime Minister's speech, it is certain that the resolution will not be further proceeded with. It may or not be presented to the Senate, but in any event it will not be presented to the Imperial Parliament.

Graham Springs Surprise.

When Sir Robert concluded his speech a surprise was sprung on the House by Hon. George P. Graham. Mr. Graham proposed an amendment to the effect that the extension resolution be not further proceeded with at this time, but that the House declare in favor of conscription of wealth. He was supported by Mr. Pardee, another conscription Liberal, and when the House divided upon the Graham amendment the Liberals seemed to be again united under Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

The Prime Minister, in moving the resolution for an extension, made an able and conciliatory address. He offered a union government upon almost any terms to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and said he would not put through the resolution by a party majority, and that, unless the resolution was carried by a substantial unanimous vote, it would not be presented to the British Government.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier made his speech after the Graham amendment was disposed of. He accepted full responsibility for bringing on a general election. He declared that the Borden Government had wasted Canadian blood and treasure in the war and that he could not give it a vote of confidence. The apparent unanimity among the Liberals was badly shaken, however, when Dr. Clark of Red Deer delivered a savage ararignment of his former leader. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he charged, was actuated by ambitions to regain the seals of office and was unfit to stand in the shoes of Sir Robert Borden.

Break From Party.

The vote upon the extension resolution showed a Government majority of twenty. The following Liberals voted with the Government: Messrs. Clark, Guthrie, Champagne, Cruise, Turriff and Thomson.

The following Conservative-Nationalists voted against extension: Messrs. Barrette, Paquet, Descarries, Bellemare, Girard and Patenaude.

HENRY CUPITT DROWNED WHILE BATHING IN RIVER

Clothing Found on Bank But No Traces of Body---Deceased Was Employed by Leonard Construction Company.

Henry Cupitt, an employee of the Leonard Construction Co., is missing and the surmise is that he has met his death in the waters of the Otonabee.

Shortly after one o'clock a number of small boys were on their way for a swim at the Old Roger's Dam at the foot of Driscoll Terrace and Douro Street when attention was drawn to a pile of clothes lying on the stones just below the first pier of the dam. An investigation showed that there was no one in swimming, and upon further search it was seen that the outfit belonged to a working man. The police was notified, and P. C. Wigg was detailed to investigate.

A search of the clothing revealed the fact that his number was 36 and that he was in the employ of the Leonard Construction Co., and that he had not reported since the noon hour. The man's watch and chain and a sum of money were found in the pockets of the clothing.

The water at this point is not so deep that if he got beyond his depth for a moment, with any effort whatever, he could easily regain his footing. A number of boys looked the surrounding water well over very carefully but no sign of the body was revealed.

The chances are that the unfortunate man took a cramp, going into the water when very hot, and at once sank and was carried down the stream.

The only H. Cupitt in the city directory was living on Munro Avenue in East City. He was formerly employed by the Peterboro Canoe Co. and was about 21 years of age.

Constable Wigg brought the effects to the police station where they were identified as Cupitt's by Mr. Jos. Collins, 262 Munro Avenue, with whom the drowned man boarded.

Despatch From Switzerland Forecasts Important Announcement When Reichstag Meets Tomorrow—More Heavy Fighting on Russian Front—Germans Vainly Continue Assault on French Lines.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Basle, Switzerland, July 18.—The Neueiste Nachrichten of Munich says the declaration of new German Chancellor, Dr. Michaelis before the Reichstag tomorrow will be for peace, having the same general trend as the resolution prepared by the parties who favor peace.

HEAVY FIGHTING CONTINUES.

Petrograd, July 18.—Heavy fighting is continuing in the region of Novica and Kalusz in Eastern Galicia the war office announced today. The Russians were driven from Heights in this region by strong attack but afterwards by a counter thrust reoccupied the eminence.

STILL RIOTING IN PETROGRAD.

Petrograd, July 18.—Another manifestation of armed soldiers and sailors and working men and women in which shots were fired took place along Nevsky Prospect yesterday. Yesterday's disturbances were a repetition of those of Monday except that they occurred at two o'clock in the afternoon where as the first outbreak occurred around midnight.

GERMAN ASSAULTS FAIL.

Paris, July 18.—Artillery fighting became rather violent late at night east and west of the Viennale Chateau on the western border of Argonne. We took a number of prisoners. On the left bank of the Meuse after a violent bombardment, the Germans made several counter attacks on the positions we captured yesterday from Avocourt wood as far as the western slopes of Hill 304. All their efforts were defeated by the heroic resistance of our troops which inflicted sanguinary losses on the Germans without yielding to them the slightest part of the conquered ground. A German attack near Calonne trench was without result. The night elsewhere was calm.

BERLIN ADMITS REVERSE.

Berlin, Jily 18.—The trenches recently captnred by the Germans near Malancourt wood and on both sides of the Alencourt Esnes road were penetrated by the French yesterday, the war office announces. On the northern cart of the front from Yser to the Lys artillery fighting increased toward morning.

ON ROUMANIAN FRONT.

Berlin, July 18.—Increased activity on the Roumanian front is reported in today's official announcement. Artillery fighting was revived in the sectors of Archduke Joseph and Field Marshall Von Mackenzen. On northern end of the Russo-Galician front in the regions of Rige Divinsk and Smorgon, artillery engagements were more severe.

HEAVY INCREASE OF HUN FIRE ALL AROUND LENS

Enemy Attempt to Destroy Trenches and Houses in Which Canadians Are Sheltered No Infantry Attacks.

(By Stewart Lyon.)

Canadian Army Headquarters, July 18.—There has been a remarkable increase during the past forty-eight hours in the volume of the enemy's fire all around the Lens salient from Hill 70 on the north to Avion on the south. In some places enemy fire was of the nature formerly preceding an assault, but the enemy's object was the destruction of our trenches and positions in ruined houses in preparation for an attack.

Vimy, three miles from the nearest German battery was bombarded with high explosives, six hundred 5.9 shells falling in a relatively small space. Avion and points to the north almost as far up the line as Vermelles, were subjected to a fire of considerable intensity.

The Germans during the night put down a barrage along a large part of the front under the belief that an advance was imminent, but no infantry action followed.

Victoria Cross For Hamilton Man

Sank Sub. With Bombs and Brought Down Zeppelin.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Hamilton, July 18.—Word has been received by relatives in this city of Sub Flight Basil Hobbs that he recently sank a German submarine with bombs and a few days later brought down a Zeppelin in flames, the entire crew perishing. He received a congratulatory letter from Sir John Jellicoe and is said to have been recommended for the Victoria Cross.

FURTHER BRITISH GAINS.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

London, July 18.—A further British advance near Monchey le Preux is reported by the war office today. There was fighting of local character again last night east of Monchy le Preux, resulting in a further gain of ground by us and the capture of a few more German prisoners. Prisoners also were captured by us and many of the enemy were killed in the course of successful raids during night northeast of Oostiaverne and in the neighborhood of Boesinghe. A hostile raiding party was encountered and driven off by our patrols near Wieltje.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

PETERBOROUGH WEDNESDAY, JULY 18, 1917

AN ELECTION IN SIGHT.

THE EXTENSION BILL has been carried in Parliament by a majority of twenty, a vast difference in the sentiment of members of the House since a little over a year ago, when the life of Parliament was extended unanimously. Sir Robert Borden stated in his speech yesterday that if there was any considerable opposition to the proposition, the matter would not be pressed, but an appeal would be made to the country.

The Government failed to secure the support of even all its own followers, the Quebec Conservatives, who are opposed to conscription, voting against their party. There is only one conclusion possible. The words of Premier Borden are capable of but one interpretation. There is opposition, and considerable opposition, to another lease of life for the present Government. An election is inevitable, and an announcement to that effect is likely to be made in a few days.

The issue will be clear. The country will be divided along entirely new lines. Racial differences will be emphasized as they have never been before, and the province that has incited it, that is responsible for the present extraordinary conditions in this country, will be alone to blame for any compact that may be formed against it.

What chance will the Liberal candidate have in West Peterborough, for example? He will be following a leader who has been rejected by the better element in his own party, not only in Ontario, but in the progressive provinces of the West. If by any misfortune Sir Wilfrid Laurier should be returned to power, Canada would have a government in which would predominate the spirit that breeds disloyalty to the Empire, that would leave the Canadian soldiers unsupported in the trenches, that would send no further aid to the Allies.

Can the voters of West Peterborough be asked to support a man whose election would mean such a national cataclysm?

THE SEAL ON THE BOTTLE.

AT THE NEXT Federal election, whether held next month, next autumn, or next year, the temperance question is sure to be laid hold of again and ruthlessly dragged by the heels into the contest. The temperance party in West Peterborough have been preparing this issue for months past and have it all ready for parade. The local organ has lent its moral support, for political reasons alone, we are constrained to believe, and will further insist upon breeding prejudice against the Borden Government for its failure to do as the local element asks it to do, and would no doubt be, in a measure at least, despoiled of its partisan aim, if the Government really adopted its advice.

The temperance people and their organ insist that the Federal authorities should pass a general prohibition law, or at least prohibit the importation of liquor into dry provinces. They have been assured by constitutional authorities that the Dominion Government has no right to interfere with provincial temperance enactments, but who ever yet met a partisan who was willing to listen to reason?

With regard to interprovincial trade, the temperance people take the stand that the provinces lack authority to stop liquor importations. That contention has also been disposed of by the Doherty Act of 1916, which provides that importations into any dry province shall cease when the legislature of that province makes the use of liquor, in public or private, illegal.

The temperance people are pleased to doubt the expediency of such legislation. If it is inexpedient for the provinces, it should be more so for the Dominion Government, meaning as it really would an interference with provincial rights which the B. N. A. Act would not sanction, according to those versed in that document.

The other day a man at Niagara Falls was carrying a bottle of liquor from the express office to his home. His right to do so was challenged by the police, and, haled into court, he was fined $200 and costs. It was held that none but a licensed carrier had a right to transport liquor from a railway depot to a private residence. The fact that the bottle was sealed did not count as it formerly did when accepted as conclusive evidence that the contents had not been touched.

Any Government that can enact such a measure as that can surely go a step further and make it illegal for the citizen to keep or use liquor in his private home. The truth is that neither party in Ontario cares to go that length. Mr. Rowell and his followers have never even suggested such a policy, although, in the language of the street, they are willing to pass the buck to the Dominion Government.

The local agitators for a bone dry Ontario are known of old both for their activity in this department and for their unswerving political allegiance. Their present object is as plain as daylight, and their secret manipulation of the temperance question is as likely to meet with the same fate as has overtaken their efforts in the past.

THOSE O'CONNOR CHARGES.

THERE ARE at least two independent newspapers in Ontario, papers that are untrammeled in their opinions and are never open to the suspicion of trimming their sails to catch the breeze from this or that quarter. These papers are the Ottawa Citizen and the Weekly Sun of Toronto. When they discuss a question they are always assured of a considerate hearing.

Both these papers have regarded the report of Food Commissioner O'Connor on the bacon question and both counsel the public to withhold judgment until an official investigation is held and all the facts are before them. The packers themselves ask for nothing more.

The Citizen says editorially:

> The cold storage business is a complicated one. There are many aspects to such a business which may not occur to the individual who is not conversant with the actual handling of food products, their purchase, storage, sale, insurance, shipping and refrigerating. While the public feel every confidence in the honesty of purpose of Mr. O'Connor, his energy and his previous work in face of discouraging circumstances, his charges are of a very serious nature in the present instance, and require the fullest corroboration. It is no reflection on the commissioner to point this out. Mr. O'Connor is evidently prepared to stand by his guns, another good sign that his conclusions have not been hastily arrived at. On the other hand, the packers have an equally good right to be heard.

It is hard to believe, with the Citizen, that Mr. O'Connor is prepared to stand by his guns. If he is, it will transpire that his weapons have been manipulated by outsiders and made to mark mischief that Mr. O'Connor never designed. He has already been at pains to explain the wide difference between margins and profits and to assure the Matthews-Blackwell Company that the full text of his report will show nothing at all to their discredit.

The Weekly Sun says:

> It is now apparent that Commissioner O'Connors statement of the margins or differences between the average prices at which the packers bought and sold food does not add much to the public information. Interpreted hastily by the reporters as a statement of profits, it has added much to the public feeling. It is now announced that the statement is merely introductory to another, in course of preparation, which will show the profits of the packers. From that the public will be able to judge if the packers have been profiteering.
> It is interesting to note that Mr Flavelle assails the Department of Labor for the issue of a report which he terms an admixture of ignorance and malice. Is it possible that in the government of his own creation there are elements which seek to destroy his political influence?

When the investigation that the packing companies have demanded is held, the public, after the misinformation that has recently been fed them, are likely to be surprised at the showing made. There is a wide chasm between the "margins" in Mr. O'Connor's report and the actual profits. The marvel is how any public official, charged with a task of such grave responsibility, should so misunderstand the figures that were furnished him by the companies and on which his conclusions were based.

It may be possible to reduce the profits, but this would call for a reduction in the overhead charges, the price paid the farmer for his hogs, the wage scale, the shipping and other transportation schedules, and the insurance rates, the latter on ocean freight having increased over five hundred per cent. since the war broke out, and the other charges having at least doubled.

The coal situation in Peterborough has been sifted to the bottom. It is only a short time since the local dealers were accused of holding up the public, hoarding their stock for a rise in price, and the like. A thorough investigation proved that the dealers were in no sense to blame. It would be possible to reduce the cost of coal to the consumers—the margin—if the supply at the mines could be increased and transportation and other charges lowered. The dealers were sharing in these disadvantages to the same extent as the public.

An investigation as thorough of the packing business will probably make the same conditions apparent.

WHAT'S THE IDEA?

IT IS HARD to understand what object the Government had in mind when it decided to exempt divinity students from the operations of the Military Service Bill, a proposition which Capt. Burnham and other Conservatives opposed valiantly. The public, however, will not be slow to draw its own conclusions.

Men have been known to rush into matrimony in order to escape the draft. If the amendment referred to is not reconsidered, the theological colleges of the Dominion will be thronged with students whose aim is not to qualify themselves for holy orders so much as to escape military service.

These colleges should be the first to resent the reflection cast upon them by the amendment, and demand its repeal. Otherwise they will be regarded as a refuge for slackers and cowards.

NOTES AND COMMENT.

GERMANY may change heads, but the old barbarous heart remains the same.

IN THE MANTIME, while Parliament procrastinates, those German counter-attacks are renewed daily.

A VOTE for the Liberal candidate in West Peterborough will mean a vote for the mischief-makers in Quebec.

THE MEN at Ottawa who insist on playing politics should take up some harmless diversion like golf or lawn bowling if they really need the exercise.

The slacker's hand is on your throat,
Oh Canada, Oh Canada.
Then strike the slacker with your vote,
Oh Canada, Oh Canada.

THE EXAMINER can no doubt find forty thousand reasons, good and sufficient, to itself at least, for supporting the candidate its party is certain to nominate in the coming election.

OBJECTS TO CHEAP LIVING

"The Beldames' Budget has been printing some very helpful articles lately," said Mrs. Jamesworthy. "The current numbe tells how to live well and grow fat on 18 cents a day, and I think we'd be wise to try the experiment, and thus cut down expenses."

"You can live on nine cents a day if you want to," replied Jamesworthy, "but it will be a bitter cold day, with a blizzard brewing, when you see your toilworn husband feeding his face with fried alfalfa and turnip jam just because some magazine writer says it can be done.

"I'd be willing to bet my halidom, Mrs. Jamesworthy, that the faker who wrote that article lives in some expensive hotel and orders everything on the bill of fare when he sits down for refreshments. About a month ago I picked up a magazine and read an article which pointed out that the man who smokes is likely to cash in at any moment.

"I have read many such articles, and they never scared me, but this one was so ably written that it gave me cold feet. The writer gave a list of disorders caused by tobacco, and said that they all would vanish shortly after one quit the weed. I realized that I had all the disorders catalogued, and a few extra ones for good measure.

"So I decided to cut out tobacco.

"You will remember the occasion, Mrs. Jamesworthy. You will recall how I was smoking bran and tea leaves and all kinds of substitutes for tobacco, and how I walked the floor and groaned all night. I found it a bitter trial to do without my usual smokes, so after two or three days of suffering, I decided to give up the effort. But just then I noticed in the newspapers that the writer of the article was registered at one of the hotels and I determined to go and ask him, as man to man, how he managed to cut out tobacco.

"I was ushered into a gorgeously furnished room, where I found him lying on a couch, and smoking a black cigar as long as your arm. Such perfidy was more than I could endure. I recalled my long hours of suffering, the scare he threw into me, which whitened my hair and aged me ten years; so I seized him by the feet and pulled him off the lounge and used him as a carpet sweeper.

"It may be that the contributor to the Beldames' Budget believes in what she says; but even if she can demonstrate that one may grow fat on 18 cents a day I am not going to try it. A horse can fatten if you turn it loose in a pasture, but that does not argue that I should eat grass. When a man has toiled in the clanging mart until he has spavins on both limbs there is one thing in this world that soothes his savage breast. It is the idea of going home and having an interview with a large porterhouse steak or a roast or, peradventure, a boiled dinner, compounded in accordance wth the good old New England formula. The cost of these smoking viands when he sits down to eat them doesn't worry him any.

"The hard working man is willing to do without shoes or suspenders or collar buttons, but anybody who tries to feed him on 18 cents a day is a traitor to the flag."

A Carlyle View.

Carlyle compared the advance of the world to the progress of some drunken man who, reeling from one side of the street to the other, slowly and at the expense of much wasted effort finally arrives at his destination.

The Call of the Air.

When the woodlands are folded in opaline mist
And the clouds are of mother-of-pearl,
Then I long to go up in my swift aeroplane
With propeller blades madly a-whirl.
I yearn to ascend to the azure above,
Like a bird sweeping hither and yon,
Rising up with delight to a star peopled height,
Coasting down on a beam of the sun.

Oh, what joy to look down on the tower and the town,
The field and the river below,
The first glinting gold of the morn to behold
Or the last of the evening's red glow,
To float like a boat to the planets remote,
By moonlight alone in the sky,
With the wind out of space blowing cool in my face—
But the blamed old machine will not fly!

THE SALVING OF A DERELICT

By MAURICE DRAKE

"There's your purse," he said; and the deadly distinctness of his words only confirmed the girl's suspicions, so careful was he to avoid the slightest slip. "There's your purse, and there's the door, and here am I—on the other side of the room. If you wish, you can pick it up and walk straight down the stairs. Nobody'll interfere with you.

"But I beg of you to stay where you are and hear me out. My—my circumstances have changed entirely since I saw you at midday. And as they concern—as I hope they may concern you a little—I want you to hear what I have to say. It's—it's your business as well as my own—at least, I want to make it so."

She took a watch from her belt. "Providing you stand just where you are, I'll give you three minutes to tell your tale," she said coldly.

"It may take more than three minutes, but I'll promise to stay where I am"; and he looked at her appealingly.

"Go on," she said. "You've lost a quarter of a minute already."

Laurence laughed uneasily. "Very well, then. Here goes. Tell me if anything isn't clear.

"I told you I'd been in the North Sea fishery. That's true—nearly two years of it, worse luck. Last April my employer told me he intended to remove me from the fleet and put me into the office. I said I wouldn't go there—that I preferred the fleet. It's—it's a wretched life—a blackguardly life—but it seemed to me better than making any change. I had got into the groove and meant to stay there, you see.

"But he gave me no choice. He said I was growing into a blackguard and a brute—which was true—and that whether I went into the office or not he would discharge me from the trawler I was on. He would keep a place open in the office for me for a month—if I didn't choose to take it, then I could shift for myself. My father was a friend of his, and he said he'd let me go to the bad no longer.

"I had some money saved—about three hundred pounds—and I made up my mind to spend it as fast as I could, and go back to him broke to the world. If he couldn't let me go to the bad on the boats he couldn't very well let me go there ashore, and I reckoned he'd give in and let me go back to the fleet if I showed him plainly that I hadn't any money and wouldn't work ashore. Do you follow me?"

The girl nodded, and glanced at the watch lying in the hollow of her hand. "Half of the three minutes is gone," she said without emotion.

"So I came here and played the fool and spent the money—the best part of it, at all events. And only this morning I was thinking how sick I was of it all when you came into the room. Then we had lunch together; and when I came back I wrote Harper—that's my late employer—to keep the place open in the office for another month."

He paused, and she glanced at the watch again. "Well?" she said. Her tone was devoid of the slightest interest.

"Well—that was because—— But there's more before I come to that.

"This afternoon I've had good news. I'm rich, I believe. It may be just a few hundreds, or it may be thousands and thousands of pounds."

"A legacy?" Only a shadow of polite inquiry was in her voice—no trace of interest or curiosity.

"Yes. A legacy—of a sort. I haven't any particulars. Don't know in the least what it's worth. But anyhow there's the billet in Harper's office—that's a cert."

"I'm glad you've decided to accept it," she said gravely. "It seems a pity for a man to go to the bad. And I'm glad to hear of your legacy. I hope it may turn out to be a good one. And now, will you kindly tell me where this rigmarole concerns me?" She returned the watch to her belt and glanced at the purse on the table.

Laurence flushed to the roots of his hair, stammering like a schoolboy.

"I—I asked Harper to give me the extra month because—because I wanted opportunity to make your acquaintance."

"And why?" Her manner was perfectly composed and the little head was poised erect in slight scorn.

"I—I—— Oh d——n it all—I want to marry you," he said.

She picked up her purse and looked at him steadily.

"I have already made as much of your acquaintance as I desire," she said, very calmly. "You led off by insulting me in the street—a good beginning. You atoned for that—or I condoned it—when we lunched together. On the same day you take advantage of my carelessness in leaving my purse in your rooms to insult me again. I won't tell you what I think of you—indeed, I'm at a loss for words. 'Blackguard and brute,' you said your late employer called you. He chooses his language better than his servants.

"I had no right to lunch with you—fool that I was. But I've done nothing to deserve this drunken insult. If you ever had womenkind of your own, I hope when you are sober you will reflect what this has meant for me. Good-afternoon."

She turned to the door, but Laurence, maddened, was across the room in two strides and had her by the wrist.

"You—you shan't go like this," he cried. "I tell you I—I know your address, and I will see you again."

She looked up fearlessly, but her eyes dropped at the blaze in his own.

"How did you find that out?" she asked.

He released her. Knowing he was forfeiting the last faint claim to her favor, he yet told the truth.

"I opened your purse," he admitted.

"Ah!" She looked him up and down coldly and disdainfully, and turning to the table, emptied bag and purse on to the cloth, counting her poor change before his eyes. "Thirteen—fourteen and nine. Thank you," she said. "I'm glad to find you stop at petty theft."

Though raging at the imputation, Laurence noticed that her hand was steady as she swept back the coins into the bag, and admiration of her courage rushed over him like a wave. She curtseyed to him before reaching her hand to the door.

"Or—perhaps you were afraid," she said, with a little sneer. "Taking money is a matter for the police, you see. Insulting a woman isn't."

Furious anger—and something else; the light movements of her graceful figure, the curve of her cheek and neck as she had stooped over the table—drove him mad for the moment. As quick as lightning he had her again by the shoulder. "This is a punishable offence," he cried, choking, and kissed her fair upon the lips. "And now prosecute me. I shan't deny it."

Struggling, she struck him twice savagely upon the mouth with her little clenched hand; and then her [illegible] yielded to his strong arm and was drawn close to his breast.

"Oh, coward—coward!" she wailed softly. "And I alone. Oh! is there no man in you?—I thought you were a man." Her head was bowed and she was crying to herself in little lengthened sobs.

He placed her in a chair and returned to the mantelpiece, leaning his elbows on the shelf, his head between his hands. All his anger had given place to black shame—to despair. Fool—fool and beast! How could he ever hope to make amends for this?

The girl was the first to recover herself.

She sat upright and wiped her eyes before rising to her feet. Then—

"I'm sorry," she said. "I had no right to insult you about the money as I did"; and without another word she was gone.

Laurence took a step towards the closing door, but, on swift reflection stayed himself. He could do nothing further now that would help him, for certain; and as the memory of the whole unlucky interview returned to torture him he cursed his ill luck—his folly—aloud.

Not a quarter of an hour before he had come up the staircase full of joy and hope, and in that quarter of an hour had wrecked his own plans as fully and completely as though he had come there for the purpose. True, he knew her name and address, but what chance had he of ever getting on good terms—on even bare terms of acquaintance—with her again? He thought of their friendly parting at Rupert Street in the morning, and the memory moved him to more smothered blasphemy.

He raged ineffectually up and down the room, until the clock, striking seven, reminded him that though he had very successfully pulled his castle in Spain about his ears, he yet had an appointment with Dwyer at dinner. He dressed hastily and hurried off, his face calm enough, but his mind in a tumult of rage and despair.

Dwyer soon remarked upon it. "Cheerful bird you are to-night," he said. "What's wrong? Connie given you the go by? I notice young Farrant's been pretty much in evidence lately."

Laurence briefly consigned young Farrant and his inamorata to unspeakable depths. "As a matter of fact, I believe I promised to dine with the pair of 'em to-night," he concluded. "Forget where, though."

"And so you wired to me—as a pis aller, eh? Complimentary, I'm sure."

"Don't drivel," Laurence interrupted. "I wanted to see you—on business, in a way. I want to buy some shares, Pat; and I haven't much money to spare, and I want it done on the quiet—dead quiet, see?"

Dwyer nodded. "Not much money to spare, eh?" he remarked. "What about that pile you were retiring with?"

"My pile—all that's left of it—amounts to about a hundred and twenty quid, of which you've eighty in your care."

"A hundred," Dwyer corrected him.

"Less twenty for a month's rent. I shall leave the flat next week. And I've about forty quid besides. When I came to town my 'pile' amounted to about three-fifty, and I've blued more than half of it. I meant to get rid of the lot in evil living, but now I've changed my mind, and I'm going to devote the rest to good works."

"Go on. Expound."

"Do you remember a very shady bit of work of my father's—doing an old Somerset sea captain out of his savings with a bogus sulphur mining scheme?"

"In Iceland, was it? I fancy I do remember something of it."

"Any idea what shares were sold?"

Dwyer shook his head. "Only debentures, I believe. Nobody'd be fool enough to look at ordinaries in a wildcat scheme like that. Six per cent. debentures they were, I remember. That ought to have opened the guileless sailor-man's eyes."

"There must have been a few guinea-pig shares, I suppose?"

"Of course. I can easily find out all about that, if you want to know."

"I do. And I want to buy 'em. You know how I stand now, but your tale had better be that I've come into a pile, and being honest—you needn't grin, fool—being honest, I want to pay off some of my father's liabilities."

"And I want the debentures too—every scrap of shares in the Company. Can you manage it on a hundred and twenty quid?"

"Lord knows. Of course the stuff's worth nothing now. I remember your father's pal Harper went into the box and described the ground. But inquiries mean a jump in price immediately. Supposing I can't rope it all in for the sum you name?"

"Do your best. Remember, ordinaries first, and as many debentures as you can get afterwards. Shouldn't be surprised if the ordinary scrip's been used for lighting fires long ago. But you'll be able to work it somehow. Get the transfers—or what d'you call 'em—made clearly to me, and the scrip can look after itself."

"All right. Am I in this too?"

"That's as you please. I tell you straight, it's the wickedest gamble I ever put my money in. I can guarantee that— No, I can't guarantee anything. Only I'm broke, anyhow. As I've been going on I shall be on my uppers in a fortnight, and it simply means that I'm going to barter a fortnight's spree and I'm sick of spree, if you want to know—for the thinnest possible chance of something turning up on that land."

"Is it sulphur, Laurie?" Dwyer asked insinuatingly.

"No, it isn't sulphur; and if you guess for a month of Sundays you'll be none the wiser, for I'll lie even if you guess right. You go and spend my hundred and twenty quid on as many shares as you can get. If you can get the lot by a deposit now and full payment in twelve months' time, do it that way. In twelve months I shall either be broke to glory or shall be able to pay up. If you've got twenty quid lying idle, and you'd like to play ducks and drakes with it, you can put it in as well. But I warn you beforehand that I'm staking nothing—only a fortnight's spree I don't want—and likely you've better uses for your money. That's all."

"Thanks. I think I'll leave it alone. Give me a week to ask questions and find out what I can. This is Thursday. Come round to the office a week to-day, and in the meantime I'll find out the guinea-pigs and approach 'em warily, and I'll also see what information is available about the debentures. But, see you, I've eighty quid of yours in hand. I spend no more than that. Your ways are the least thing too erratic for me. What on earth prompted you to come and chuck away your little capital in this way?"

"I was sick of things, Pat, and I wanted a change. That's all. I'll tell you more about it some day."

"Please yourself. And now, what are we going to do? A theatre?"

"Not me. I'm going home to be good. I've had a tiring day, and a late night last night—and another the night before—and the night before that—and so on, ad infinitum. I'm going to bed to sleep till Thursday. Bye-bye."

"Good-night, my virtuous one. Sleep well," and the two men shook hands and parted.

CHAPTER XIV.

By ten next morning Laurence had finished his breakfast, declined two invitations, and burned another unanswered—this last written on grey paper with a demure white monogram on the envelope flap—and was on his way to West Kensington. Prompted by a new motive of economy he travelled by underground, and after a wait at Gloucester Road was delivered at West Kensington station just before eleven o'clock. Fate ordained that he should meet Marion Stewart at the entrance to the booking office, and the draughty entry straightway became a sunlit Fairyland.

He stopped to speak to her, hat in hand; but, deliberately looking through him, she passed on down the stairway with pink cheeks and head erect. Wickedly congratulating himself on her flushed face, he followed her to the platform, and there commenced a lame apology.

Very quietly and gravely she heard him out. Then, inclining her head, "And I owe you an apology too," she said. "I had no right to behave as I did. Please believe I am sorry—and now, good-bye."

"May I hope to see you again?" he asked, holding out his hand.

"I think not." She altogether disregarded his outstretched hand. "Here is my train. Good-morning"—and with a slammed door and the guard's whistle she was whirled away.

Laurence could have despaired at her impassive demeanor, and the sunlight on the platform turned cold and grey on the moment. "But the game's never lost till it's won—by somebody," he said to himself; and lighting a cigarette, he re-ascended the stairway, crossed the bridge, and made his way to her address in Baron's Court Road.

"Have you any rooms to let?" he asked of the diminutive servant who answered the door.

"I'll see, sir. What name, please?"

"Averil," mumbled Laurence, his cigarette between his lips, and then, seeing she still held the door open, threw it away and waited in the narrow hall.

The landlady, a cleanly, large-boned Scotswoman, admitted that she had a room vacant—a bed-sitting room on the second floor and showed it to him. Though plainly furnished, he was glad to find it as spotlessly clean as the landlady's own person; and, surprised, found himself none the less pleased because she saw fit to subject him to rigid scrutiny, and even to a catechism that in parts might have been deemed impertinent.

Such a severe examination before permission to reside beneath the same roof with his lady-love was all as it should be. Recognizing the Lowland accent in the woman's speech, he informed her that he was from Leith—had come to London for a month's holiday—and was rewarded for his candor by an immediate access of friendliness on her part, and after ten minutes' conversation was accepted as a lodger.

"I ha' to be careful, sir, ye see," she said. "I ha' ithers stayin' in the house—a young leddy forbye."

Laurence found himself audibly and cordially assenting to her careful selection, and promising to take possession of the room on the following Monday, he returned to New Cavendish Street.

That afternoon he bought a selection of women's papers in High Street Marylebone, and spent the remainder of the day until dusk turning over page after page dealing with the mysteries of the toilet and the nursery, in the insane hope of being able to recognize amid the columns of nonsense some approach to the bravely independent style in which he conceived Marion Stewart must write. He walked to Rupert Street to dinner, carrying one of the periodicals with him. During the meal he glanced at it from time to time, until the futility of this behavior was revealed to him, and he flung it under the table.

"Chiffon and dress patterns—titled brats and tomfoolery," he growled. "Lord! and she's in that—and how in the name of Heaven I'm to get her out of it He only knows." He thought of her coldly polite bearing at West Kensington that morning, and despaired. "If she only hated me," he groaned in spirit, with a too certain knowledge of her sex. "If only she hated me, I'd stand a chance. But now I'm just beneath her feet—she's as polite to me as she would be to a flunkey just the same. I'm a blackguard yokel, up in London for a drunken spree—that's all." He walked home through the lights and clamor of Regent Street in that fine state of soft melancholy peculiar to despairing lovers, and, cherishing his cares, had the benefit of a night's sleeplessness, for the first time since the wretched days when the inquiry into his father's affairs was taking place. He found this occasion no more enviable than those had been. As he tossed to and fro, or lay still, staring unwinking into the darkness, pictures came to torture him over and over again.

TWO WAYS TO ACQUIRE AN ESTATE

1—By saving, stinting, sacrificing; fighting the world at every turn, battling the blows of business competition; running the risk of fire, theft, embezzlement and misfortune; skimping your family, and yourself maybe, and standing only one chance in twenty of reaching Old Age without being dependent upon others for support.

2—By securing a Life Insurance Policy—A Policy which guarantees to pay your Beneficiary at your death, either a definite lump sum or an income every month as long as she lives—an income that is fixed, certain, regular, inalienable, unassailable, untaxable, and which cannot be lost, sold, dissipated, squandered or mortgaged.

Which is the EASIER and MORE SENSIBLE Way to Acquire an Estate?

TWO WAYS TO BEQUEATH AN ESTATE

1—By Testamentary Document: Requires an Executor. Must go through legal red tape at court. Requires court costs. May require months or years to settle. This kind of Will can be broken or set aside. Property is subject to attachment for debts of the deceased.

2—By Life Insurance (when the Beneficiary is named): Requires no executor or administrator—you are your own executor, your own administrator. No need of court proceedings—no expense of court costs. Does not require time to settle. This is a Will direct which no lawyer can break nor court set aside. Policy is not subject to attachment for debts of the deceased.

MACHINERY MAKES FAMINE IMPOSSIBLE

How Man's Productive Power Multiplies—Distribution is Important But Neglected

Dr. Scott Nearing writes: Carlyle remarked that without tools man is nothing; with tools he is everything. Man is the tool-making and the tool-using animal. The power of the tool is universal. In the last few years the type of tools has changed in the most remarkable manner. No longer does man throw his tools over his shoulder as he starts home. He leaves them. There you have the contrast between the tool and the machine. The tool was a thing that the man who used it could make—a thing he owned. It was simple, cheap, easy to handle and to transport. The modern machine is huge, costly, expensive, unwieldy and difficult to transport—so much a social force that no one can own it or make it.

The machine has made want and privation eternally unnecessary. It has vanquished that ancient foe of mankind—famine. In the leisure it has created, it has made ample room for the arts and sciences, for civilization and progress. The machine has made all this possible. These things are the possibilities of the machine, as opportunities, what it may do. The increased effectiveness of man-labor when aided by the use of machinery, varies from 150 per cent. in some cases to 224.4 per cent. in others.

The result of this machine creation is enormous increase in wealth. What has given us this new increase in wealth? The increase in population? Yes. But machinery is the basis of it. To-day we are richer than we ever were before and wealth is increasing. It means that we have mastered the problem of keeping famine away from the door; that we have mastered the problem of making enough clothing for all, of furnishing shelter for all, of producing economically all the things that man needs for health and comfort.

No man need be hungry, cold or shelterless to-day because there is not an ample supply ready for him of food, clothing or shelter, provided he has the money to buy them. Most of the things he needs can be secured for less money than ever before, thanks to machinery, co-operation and invention.

The great difficulty lies in the distribution of the wealth produced on an enormous scale and increasing at an enormous rate. In short, it is for no lack of ability to produce and for no shortage of wealth that we suffer. We make enough of both to go around, but we have not yet found the way to make it go around equitably. The science of wealth production is highly developed. The science of wealth distribution is our next problem.

GREAT FOREST FIRES

That in Ontario's Clay Belt Ranked as Third Most Destructive

The Northern Ontario forest fire of July, 1916, takes rank as the third most serious fire catastrophe in the history of this continent. The Hinckley fire in Minnesota, 1894, was responsible for 418 lives and the burning over of 160,000 acres. The famous Peshtigo fire in Wisconsin, 1871, killed 1,500 and devastated 1,200,000 acres of timber. In 1825 occurred the Miramichi fire of New Brunswick and Maine, with a loss of 160 lives, six towns, 1,000 head of cattle, and damage of 300,000 acres of forest. The Clay Belt fire in Ontario, with 262 lives lost and 500,000 acres fire-swept takes its place with the great disasters of history. The Porcupine fire in 1911 killed 84 persons.

It is noteworthy that Wisconsin Minnesota, Maine, and New Brunswick have taken comprehensive measures to prevent further disasters by organizing their forest patrol systems on modern lines, building trails, lookout towers, telephones, etc., as well as carefully supervising settlers' clearing fires, one of the worst sources of danger.

MUCH WAYSIDE FOOD

Nettle is Useful and Dandelion Much More So

Not every green thing good to eat grows in a market-garden. To the initiated the field and hedgeside are always sufficient for a delightful salad at least. The most wholesome and deliciously flavoured of these wild salad ingredients is the dandelion, the despised "weed" which we grub out of our lawns with such savage delight. A dandelion diet would be a little monotonous, but the young and tender shoots, either boiled as greens, or used with other things as a salad, are tip-top stuff.

Few farmers would object to any one armed with a sharp knife, with which to slice off the dandelion tops surveying his fields for a salad, and the result would be a basketful of tender greens, superior to those you buy at the shop. Next to the dandelion comes the nettle. Catch your nettle young, and it beats spinach all to nothing. The old and mature nettle, which flaunts itself in such quantities in hedgerows, is no use for a salad, or for a boiled green, either. But in Lancashire, England, tens of thousands of gallons of nettle beer are made.

BREAK UP BROODY HENS

A hen is one of the most jealous creatures and if placed in a wire-sided coop where she can see the rest of the flock ranging about the yard she is very restless, especially if there is a male with the flock frequently calling his mates to partake of a choice morsel of food, and if plenty of food and water are supplied she eats often, thereby keeping her body built up so she goes to laying again in a short time.

The plan followed is to place the hen in this kind of coop on the day after she remains on the nest and does not lay; she is kept in the coop four days, and then released. During the time she is left in the coop she is given all the feed and water she wants. About 4,000 hens are treated in this way each summer at one place. The records show that hens broken in this way begin laying again as follows: The time from the laying the last egg till the hen began laying again was 10 days in March, 8 days in April, 10 days in May, and 12 days in June. There were more broody hens in June than in April, but for practical purposes the average is 10 days. These coops can be easily built by any one out of scrap lumber and a little wire.

CANADA'S USEFUL TREES

Good Work of Forest Protective Bodies in East

One of the most essential features of a forest-protective organization is adequate supervision over the fire-ranging staff. Taking the country as a whole, there is no question but that a very great deal of money is being wasted through failure to provide enough supervision, and of the right kind, to ensure that a dollar's worth of protection is secured for each dollar expended on the fire-ranging staff. In this connection, the provincial governments of eastern Canada, and the great majority of limit-holders as well should take careful note of the admirable results that have been secured by the St. Maurice and the Lower Ottawa Forest Protective Associations, and should profit by their example. These two Associations have been able to secure the best degree of protection against fire that is to be found over any large area anywhere in eastern Canada. These results have been secured by the adoption of a thoroughly business-like administration, of which close supervision at all points is considered an absolutely essential feature.

FOUNDATIONS FOR ENGINE

Gasoline Engine Clamped Securely To Concrete Base

Varied service demanded of a gasoline engine required that it be mounted upon a truck so that it could be readily transported. This arrangement did not, however, render the engine stable enough for very heavy duty in a shop, and the concrete foundation and clamping device shown was arranged to secure the truck. The truck is drawn against the block B. and clamped in the hook and eye at A. The eye is fixed in the floor and swings on a rod imbedded in the concrete. The hook A is fastened by means of a nut at its upper end. The axle of the truck nearest the block B is clamped behind a pivoted wooden block, which is drawn up securely by the threaded bolt and crank C. If properly adjusted, this arrangement holds the engine firmly enough for heavy duty and long belt connection to the driving pulley.—Popular Mechanics.

WOMAN IN SOLDIER'S UNIFORM MAKES HER WAY TO FRANCE

Was Bride of Corporal From Arizona and Groom Smuggled Her on Board Transport.

An Atlantic Port, July 18. — A young woman attired in khaki and with her black hair cut short returned to the United States yesterday as a military prisoner after an unsuccessful attempt to pass as an American soldier. The woman is said to be the bride of a corporal who, having been married just before the first American army left for France, smuggled his wife aboard the vessel.

The woman left America with a regiment from Douglas, Ariz. The name of the pseudo-soldier was withheld. The corporal is said to have got his bride past the embarkation officers as a member of his squad. With her dark hair clipped short and somewhat masculine features it was difficult to detect her identity.

It was learned that the woman stowed away for three days after the transport sailed, and was discovered by the army surgeon when the corporal's squad, with others belonging to the same company, were paraded on the after-deck to have their throats examined. Early the same morning there had been rumors current among the soldiers and members of the crew of the transport that a woman had stowed away on board disguised as a soldier. The surgeons were notified of this, and requested by the commanding officers of the two regiments on the ship to keep a strict lookout.

As soon as the woman was detected she was placed under guard in one of the after-deck cabins, and no one was allowed to communicate with her. The woman will not be released until the federal authorities have decided what is to be done with her. It could not be ascertained today whether the fictitious soldier would be sent back to Douglas or whether she would be punished for impersonating a soldier and stowing away on the transport.

Army officers said that they could not understand how the disguised woman had travelled with the regiment from Arizona and was billeted for several days in the barracks at the port whence the transport sailed. It was evident, they said, that all the members of the corporal's squad must have been in the secret and assisted in screening her from detection.

The bride's travelling suit was of navy blue tafetta with large black hat.

The young couple have the best wishes of a large circle of friends.

INSPECTOR CAN DO AS HE LIKES

IS NOT SUBJECT TO WORKMEN'S RULES IN MUNITIONS PLANT.

Toronto, July 18.—"An inspector under the Imperial Munitions Board is not subject to the rules, regulations, or customs governing the employes of a munitions factory," was the judgment given to-day by Judge Morson in discussing the appeal of J. J. Scollon against a conviction of $5 or 10 days imposed on him by magistrate Kingsford on 15th June last for assaulting Owen Hurst.

Scollon is the general superintendent of the Canadian Allis-Chalmers Co., and Hurst is the inspector of munitions, and not an employe of the company. Hurst was reading a newspaper one day while work was proceeding and Scollon objected to this as being against the regulations. He ordered him out of the premises and finally had him ejected by force.

Judge Morson, in dismissing the appeal, said Hurst was not under the control of the appellant and so far as he was concerned the reading of a newspaper was not improper.

MR. GILLESPIE'S BEST BID ON CHEESE BOARD IS 20 7-8

Drop in Price Due to Lack of Ocean Transportation---3002 Cheeses Boarded.

Some of the salesmen on the Peterborough Cheese Board were a little disappointed this morning when the highest offer that was made was 20⅞c, a falling off in the two weeks of 7-16c. A few of the salesmen refused to sell when their factory was called on the first selection, but later sold when the buyers had explained the difficulty that confronted them.

Mr. Hawthorne, for Warsaw, had refused to sell to Mr. Gillespie on the first call on account of the low price, and stated so.

Mr. Gillespie stated that the firms in Montreal could not get steamers to ship the cheese on, and the last shipments were lying in the warehouses at Montreal awaiting an opportunity to be put on board, and there was nod guarantee of boats until the middle of August.

Mr. Morton stated that his firm was in the same predicament. He gave President Duff some circulars to read on the shipment of green cheese, and stated that in future factories shipping green cheese would be held responsible for the decline in price between the time the cheese were shipped and when they were graded by the Commission inspectors.

The cheese boarded were as follows:

Keene	110
Warminster	135
Shearer	140
Selwyn	175
Villiers	100
Missing Link	100
Westwood	200
Oakdale	110
Warsaw	200
Lakefield	100
Pine Grove	70
Young's Point	160
Myrtle	200
Ormonde	175
Lang	150
North Dummer	90
Stoney Lake	35
East Emily	138
Mount Pleasant	64
Norwood	213
Killarney	124
Fleetwood	133
Apsley	80
Total	3002

The Bidding.

Mr. Gillespie started the bidding at 20c, and was followed as noted: Morton, 20 1-16c; Thompson, 20⅛c, Morton, 20 3-16c; Thompson, 20¼c; Morton, 20 5-16c; Thompson, 20⅜c; Gillespie, 20½c; Morton, 20 9-16c; Thompson, 20⅝c; Gillespie, 20¾c; Morton, 20 13-16c; Gillespie, 20⅞c. This was the highest offer, and Mr. Gillespie called Warminster, Selwyn, East Emily, Myrtle, Young's Point, North Dummer, Stoney Lake, Apsley, Mt. Pleasant, Missing Link. All accepted. Warsaw and Shearer refused at that time.

Mr. Gillespie bid 20 13-16c for further selections, but was raised to 7-8c by Mr. Morton, who secured Ormonde, Pine Grove, Lakefield, Villiers, Westwood, Lang and Keene.

Mr. Thompson secured Killarney, Norwood, Oakdale, Warsaw, and Shearer at the same bid as the other factories, and the ones that had refused in the first place accepted Mr. Thompson's offer when the first bidder had stated that his order had been completed.

After some discussion the Board adjourned for three weeks.

One year ago the number of cheeses boarded was 2,609 and the price paid was 16½c.

TO FORM UNIONS IN STOCKYARDS

CHICAGO WHITE MEN ARE BEING REPLACED BY NEGROES.

New York, July 18.—A Chicago despatch to the World says:

A campaign to unionize all workare employed in the packing plants at the stockyards was launched at a meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

Resolutions characterizing the packers as "tyrannical," and charging them with maintaining conditions of "industrial slavery" in their establishments were adopted. The federation resolved:

Men Are Eploited

"That the president and secretary of the Chicago Federation of Labor call a conference as early as possible of representatives of all trade unions with jurisdiction over workers in the stockyards for the purpose of launching and carrying on a united and vigorous campaign to bring within the protecting ranks of organized labor the vast army of eploited men, women and children in the meat packing industries of Chicago."

Reason For Soldiers

Several delegates attacked the packing interests. One declared that a "stockade and a ring of soldiers had not been put around the stockyards to keep the plants from being blown up by Germans, but in order to impress organized labor that it wasn't wanted there.' Another delegate charged that white workers who demanded $2.50 a day had been replaced by negroes who would work for $1.60 a day. Plans to unionize the negroes are included in the campaign, it was indicated by statements.

CHIEF THOMPSON SPEAKS AT POLICE CONVENTION

Safe Rules to Follow in Discharge of Duty—No Third Degree, No Unfair Evidence and Truth Must be Spoken at All Times.

Chief Thompson, who is attending the convention of the Dominion Chief Constables in Quebec, delivered the following address before the members of that body at the session today;

In the few words I propose addressing to you, it is not my intention to define every duty of a police constable but rather to point out some matters which all who desire to become good officers ought constantly to bear in mind, for, by strict attention to them, every man may assuredly rise himself to a high position in the force, and by neglect of them he is equally sure to occupy a low one.

First of all, let me impress upon you the necessity of absolute obedience to all who are placed in authority over you, and rigid observance of every regulation made for your general conduct. Such obedience and observance I regard as essential to the effectiveness of a police force. Obey every order given you by your superior officer without a moment's questioning the propriety of it. You are not responsible for the order, but for obedience. In yielding obedience let the humblest member of the force feel that by good conduct and cheerful submission he may himself rise to be placed in authority to give these orders he is now called on to obey. As to the regulations, a single moment's reflection will teach you that when so many men of different classes and habits are enrolled in one service some rules applicable to all are necessary for the purpose of ensuring uniformity in discipline, action, conduct and appearance, therefore it is that there are regulations exacting sobriety, punctuality, cleanliness and many other matters to which I need not refer.

The slightest disobedience in one begets a bad example to others, and if this bad example is followed by a few, it will disorganize and bring discredit upon the whole body.

Singleness of Purpose.

Let me now say something to each police constable as to the mode in which your obligations to the public ought to be performed. Depend upon it to become a good and efficient officer you must, when on duty, allow nothing but your duty to occupy your thoughts. You must studiously avoid all gossiping, you must not lounge about as though your sole object was to amuse yourself and kill the hours in which the public has a right to your best service, and, during which, constant vigilance and attention to what is passing around you is expected from you. It is this gossiping, lounging habit which sometimes gives rise to the observations that a policeman is never to be found when he is most wanted. Moreover a man who gives way to such a habit never observes with so much accuracy that which occurs before his eyes as he who makes it his endeavor to fix his attention upon all that is passing about him. This is a habit not difficult to acquire if you are in earnest, and, when once acquired, you will find the cultivation of it a source of pleasure, and the hours of duty will be much less irksome. I may add, too, that the man who takes no pains to acquire it generally makes a very bad and inaccurate witness.

Prevention Better Than Cure.

I wish to point out the importance of a steady, constant endeavor by your vigilance to prevent crime as much as possible, and not by your negligence tempt persons to commit it, as you do if you fail in your attention to your duty. To my mind the constable who keeps his beat free from crime deserves more credit than the man who only counts up the number of convictions he has obtained for offences committed within it. It is true the latter makes more show than the former, but the former is the better officer.

The object of the law is to prevent crime; when many crimes are committed in any particular district one may justly suspect that there has been something defective in the amount of vigilence exercised over it.

No Abuse of Power.

Much power is invested in a police constable, and many opportunities are given him to be hard and oppressive, especially to those in his custody, I would advise the patrolman to avoid hardness and oppression; be firm but not brutal, make only discreet use of your powers. If one person wishes to give another into your custody for felony you are not absolutely bound to arrest, you ought to exercise your own discretion, having regard to the nature of the crime, the surrounding circumstances, and the condition and character of the accused and the accuser.

A constable should be very careful to distinguish between cases of illness and drunkenness. Many serious errors have been committeed for want of care in this respect.

Much discussion has on various occasions arisen touching the conduct of the police in listening to and repeating statements of accused persons. I will try therefore to point out what I think is the proper course for a constable to take with regards to such statements.

The Matter of Evidence.

When a crime has been committed and you are engaged in endeavoring to discover the author of it, there is no objections to you making enquiries of, or putting questions to any person from whom you think you can obtain useful information. It is your duty to discover the criminal if you can, and to do this you must make such enquiries, and if, in the course of them, you should chance to interrogate and to receive answers from a man who turns out to be the criminal himself, and who inculpates himself by these answers, they are nevertheless admissible in evidence, and may be used against him.

No Third Degree.

There is no objections to a constable listening to any voluntary statement which a prisoner desires to make, and repeating such statement in evidence; nor is there any objections to his repeating in evidence any conversation he may have heard between the prisoner and any other person. But he ought not, by anything he says or does, invite or encourage an accused person to make any statement without having first cautioned him that he is not bound to say anything tending to incriminate himself, and that anything he may say may be used in evidence against him. Perhaps the best maxim for a constable to bear in mind with respect to an accused person is—keep your eyes and your ears open, and your mouth shut, and by silent watchfulness you will hear all you ought to hear. Never act unfairly to a prisoner by causing him by words or conduct to divulge anything. If you do, you will assuredly be severely handled at the trial, and it is not unlikely your evidence will be discounted.

In detailing a conversation with an accused person, be sure to state the whole conversation from commencement to the end in the very words used; and in narrating facts, state every fact, whether you think it material or not, for you are not the judge of its materiality. Tell it in short, as well, that which is in favor of the accused as that which is against him, for your desire and anxiety must be to be fair and assist the innocent and not convict any man by unfair means, such as suppressing something that may tell in his favor, even though you feel certain of his guilt. Unfairness is sure to bring discredit upon those who are found guilty of it. If an accused in a conversation with you states any circumstances which you have the means of inquiring into, you ought to do so whether those circumstances are in favor or against the accused.

I cannot too strongly recommend every constable, however good he fancy his memory to be, to write down every word, every syllable of every conversation in which an accused has taken part, and of every statement made to him by an accused person, and to have that written memorandum with him at the trial.

The Whole Truth.

The last, but most important duty I would enjoin upon you is, on every occasion "Speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." Let no consideration, no anxiety to appear of importance in the case, no desire to procure a conviction or an acquittal, let no temptation of any sort induce you to swerve one hair's breadth from the truth, the bare, plain, simple truth; never exaggerate nor in repeating a conversation or a statement, add a tone of color to it.

Exaggeration is often more dangerous than direct falsehood, for it is something more than the truth and is more dangerous because it is difficult to detect and separate that which is exaggeration from that which is strictly true, and a man who exaggerates is very apt to be led on to say that which he knows to be false. On the other hand, suppress no part of a conversation or statement, nor any tone or action which accompanies it, for everything you suppress is short of the whole truth.

Remember always what reliance is of necessity placed in courts of justice upon the testimony of policemen and bear constantly in mind that in many cases the fate of an accused person, which is his life or his liberty, depends upon that testimony, and seriously reflect how fearful a thing it would be for any person to be convicted and put to death or condemmed to penal servitude or imprisonment on false testimony. Remember also when you are giving evidence that you are not the person appointed to determine the guilt or innocence of the person on trial, nor have you any right to express an opinion upon the subject. Your duty is a very simple and easy one, namely, to place the facts before the court. The responsibility of the verdict, whether guilty or not guilty, rests entirely with the jury, judge or magistrate and they have a right to expect from you everything within your knowledge to enable them to come to a just conclusion. Resolve then on every occasion to tell the plain "truth" in all things, even though it may for a moment expose you to censure or defeat. The object or expectations of those by whom you are called as a witness, depend upon it. Such censure will be nothing compared to the character you will earn for yourself as a truthful, reliable man, whose word can always be depended upon. I could write a great deal more on the subject I have touched, but then my address to you would be too long for its usefulness, which is intended as a guide.

I have only endeavored in a few friendly sentences to point out to you a line of conduct, the steady adoption of which will enable every man in the police service to feel that he is on the high road to all that he can desire, having regards to the important and very responsible calling he has selected for himself.

Yours respectfully.
D. THOMPSON,
Chief Constable.

BIG FOOD SHORTAGE WILL SLAUGHTER COWS

New York, July 18.—The World prints the following special despatch from The Hague: "While Holland already has felt the pinch of the allied blockade, she is preparing to undergo greater hardships, now that America has established an embargo in order to prevent foodstuffs and certain raw materials from reaching Germany.

"There is a good shortage of fodder, and because of the small chance of getting a supply from America, it has been decided that 500,000 cows must be slaughtered."

BIG MOUNTAIN TROUT CAUGHT IN DRAG LAKE

On Saturday a resident of Haliburton named Sipes landed a mountain trout at Drag Lake, which tipped the scales at 22 1-2 pounds. Sipes was nearly an hour landing the fish, and was finally forced to get out of his boat on the sand beach before being sure of his catch.

The trout was caught with a 300-foot line in deep water.

DOCTORS AFTER HIM IS FINED $25 AND COSTS

Professor Mulveney, of 167 Dundas street, Toronto, whose bottles relieve many minds, was fined $25 and costs or thirty day for a breach of the Medical Act. Robert Hamilton, a frail, elderly man, said he visited the professor, complained of pains in the ribs and back, was told it was rheumatism, and purchased medicine and liniment. He paid, altogether, $27.75 for treatment.

"He said the medicine would knock the ailment out of me," said the old fellow.

"And did it?" asked Mr. Corley.

"I'm not fit for work."

This is an episode of the Toronto police court and will be interesting to Peterborough people as the professor is well known here.

CLERGYMAN KILLED ON BATTLE FRONT

Word has been received in Lindsay that Rev. W. H. Gregory, B.A., a gentleman who was well known in Lindsay, had been killed in action on the western front.

The deceased, who was a son of Inspector Gregory, of the Morality Department, Toronto, assisted Rev. Canon Marsh as a student in 1913.

MUST PAY HEAD TAX.

Fifteen excursion parties left Toronto yesterday by boat for different points along the shores of Lake Ontario. The new immigration law is making it difficult for Canadians to enter the United States and for Americans to enter Canada. At some points, if it is only across the river, they make them pay the $8 head tax.

SNEAK THIEF TAKES FARMER'S BANK ROLL

While Mr. Dick English and family of Union Creek were away to Fenelon Falls on the 12th, some one broke into the house through a window and hunted all through the place, upsetting things in general until they found a roll of bills of about ninety dollars which Mr. English thought he had left safely hidden. The thief did not want to be too hard, so just helped himself to about twenty dollars and left the balance as he had found it, which proves out the old saying that there is honor even among thieves.

Hurrah for Cider.

There is an old-fashioned song about the "prettiest girl you ever saw, sucking cider through a straw, over the garden wall." In the period of the vintage of the song, sweet cider was a beverage in which the lads and lassies on the farm, rather than adults in the rural districts or in cities, took an interest, but with prohibition spreading throughout Canada the people of the Dominion will be singing the praises of cider as a supplanter of alcoholic beverages.

Cider is from all standpoints a most satisfactory irrigant of throats. It is to near beer what champagne is to ditchwater. It has flavor and bouquet, and the zippy tang that men, especially, require in a drink. To be sure, cider can be perverted to such baleful forms as applejack and Jersey lightning, and men can put it in their mouths to steal away their brains, as they did a while back with similarly corrupted extracts of rye and malt. But this sort of abuse of the apple's sweet juice advertises itself too easily. By its works ye shall know it, and so shall the officers of the law, and the heavy hand of justice shall smite the hardeners of soft cider.

Cider should never be served stingily. It should be lavished from large pitchers, poured into capacious flagons, and imbibed in hearty drafts. Cider partakes of the wholesale personality of brown October ale, and has the added virtue of not confusing the footsteps of the drinker. Whenever possible, cider should be consumed as it comes from the press. When it is watered by unscrupulous venders, or doctored with preservative compounds, it loses its distinctive charm.

The sale of cider as a popular beverage should serve to stimulate apple growing, and if an apple a day keeps the doctor away, a jug of cider should be the cheapest form of health insurance.

AN INDIAN LEGEND.

Story Gathered From the Folk Lore of Our Land.

Once in a forest there gushed from the hollow of a rock a wonderful spring known to the Red Men. It possessed mysterious power and was watched over by two spirits. From sunrise until noon, Ohaweda the Spirit of the Spruce Tree, was its guardian. And during those hours all who drank of its sparkling water were cured of sickness and felt a nameless joy. But when the slanting shadow of the afternoon touched the spring, Ochdoah the Bat swooped down on his leathery wings and brooded over its water. Then the sparkle died out of its tide, and a sluggish poison ran from the rock, killing all men and beasts who drank it.

One day Ahneah the Rose Flower, loveliest of Indian maids, went from her lodge to the spring to fetch water in her elmwood bowl. She set the bowl down by the rock, and resting in the cool shade of the trees, wove sweet-smelling grass into baskets. And while she braided the strands, she sang the firefly song of her people. She was as happy as she was beautiful, and forgot the passing hours. She did not see that the slanting shadow of afternoon was nearing the spring. It glinted on the rock just as she finished her weaving.

Then, leaning over the spring, she plunged the elmwood bowl into the sparkling water. But something held the bowl fast, and the beautiful face of a youth smiled up at her from the ripples. It smiled and nodded as it floated from side to side. Then it vanished for a moment only to return and with its enchanting smile woo the fast beating heart of the maid.

And while she was gazing entranced, lo, the slanting shadow of afternoon passed over the spring! The face of the youth faded away, and Ochdoah the Bat, who had been hovering in the shadow, swooped down and seized the trembling maid. He bore her swiftly upward, and, with fast wing, left even the wind behind. Onward he flew, then suddenly descended and plunged into a roaring cataract. Ahneah was nearly lost in the swirl of the mad torrent, and there she saw near her a face terrible and frowning. She turned from it with a shudder, and the fierce water cast her up on the shore.

Then the terrible face appeared again, and led her down beneath the ground. Into a cavern it led her, glaring with flames, around which danced many witches. Something pushed her into the circle of dancers, and she fell fainting to the ground. But suddenly she felt herself breathe fresh air, and she opened her eyes. And, lo, it was sunrise, and she stood by the spring in the hollow of the rock. And by her side was a young warrior dressed for the hunt. He bore in his hand a branch of the spruce tree, and on his head were two wings—one of the eagle and the other of the owl.

And as Ahneah gazed on the warrior, she saw his face was that of the beautiful youth who had smiled at her from the spring. He took her hand, and told her his story. He was Ohsweda, the Spirit of the Spruce Tree, who guarded the spring from sunrise to noon. With his eagle wing he could fly to the sun, and with his owl wing wander through all the forests in a night. He had seen the evil Ochdoah the Bat hovering in the shadow as he waited to seize the maiden. So Ihsweda had held fast her bowl, and tried to warn Ahneah the Rose Flower. But all too late! For the slanting shadow of afternoon had passed over the spring, and Ochdoah the Bat, swooping down, had borne away the trembling maid.

Then Ohsweda the Spirit of the Spruce Tree, on his eagle wing, had followed swiftly after. He had entered the cavern beneath the ground, and snatched Ahneah the Rose Flower from the Fire Dance of the Witches. In his arms he had carried her back to the spring and with healing water at sunrise he had caused her to open her eyes. All this did Ohsweda the Spirit of the Spruce Tree relate to the maid. Then with a happy heart she filled her elmwood bowl and sped quickly back to her lodge.

But as the days passed, Ahneah the Rose Flower faded away. And one summer morning, at the vanishing of the dew, her lodge was empty. When her people entered the door, thy heard the rustle of wings, then a strange silence filled the lodge. And by the side of the couch, where Ahneah the Rose Flower had lain, were two fallen feathers.

The Result of Waste.

A single slice of bread seems an unimportant thing. In many households one or more slices of bread daily are thrown away and not used as human food. Sometimes [illegible] quarter—or half—loaves are thrown out. Yet one good-sized slice of bread—such as a child likes to cut—weighs an ounce. It contains almost three-quarters of an ounce of flour.

If every one of the country's 2,000,000 homes wastes on the average only one such slice of bread a day, the country is throwing away daily over 1,500,000 ounces of flour or nearly enough flour for 95,000 one-pound loaves a day.

Fourteen and nine-tenths bushels of wheat on the average are raised per acre. It would take the fruit of some 47,000 acres just to provide a single slice of bread to be wasted daily in every home. To produce this much flour calls for an army of farmers, railway men, flour-mill people. To get the flour to the consumer calls for many freight cars and the use of many tons of coal.

But, some one says, a full slice of bread is not wasted in every home. Very well—make it a daily slice for every four or every ten or every thirty homes—make a weekly or a monthly slice in every home—or make the wasted slice thinner. The waste of flour involved is still appalling—altogether too great to be tolerated when wheat is scarce.

GROCERS OUT TO "BAG" LANTIC

One would imagine that after seven o'clock last night Peterboro Grocers would bid "good-bye" to sugar, but judging from the keen excitement at Solomon's Bowling Alleys, they seemed to be all intent on keeping up the "bagging" till a late hour.

It happens that the producers of Lantic sugar have offered substantial prizes to the winning members in a special five-pin tournament, and all contending parties know that any offering from such an aggressive concern like the Lantic people is worth going after.

-- SPORT PARAGRAPHS --

Poor old Larry Doyle! It isn't so long ago that he was doing handsprings on the diamond and catching the ball between his teeth. And now the Cubs want to get rid of him because he can no longer keep up the pace. Well, there's nothing like growing old gracefully, Larry.

Eddy Collins holds the record for playing in consecutive games. Up to a short time ago he had performed in 381 straight games, and by this time is nearing the four-hundred mark.

Batteries or artillery at the front in France will regret that Hank Gowdy won't become a soldier until the fall. But the Braves will be glad to call upon him to operate in connection with the batteries on the diamond. Hank, after enlisting, has returned for the season to his team mates. In the fall he will put on Uncle Sam's regalia and take up drilling with a gun.

Christie Mathewson has been weeding out a lot of players whom he can't use just at present. Bob Bescher and Fred Smith went to the minors recently, and others are likely to follow.

Grouchy Gus says: "A stitch in time saves nine; but all the stitches in the stitchery won't save the nines that are occupying cellar positions at this stage of the game."

Roy Caldwell the Yankee pitcher, who recently went off on a "toot," is "in dutch" with a lot of the fans. They have forgiven him his weakness many times and so have Colonel Ruppert and Captain Huston, owners of the team, but it seems that the big twirler just simply can't mend his ways. As far as he is personally concerned, it is recognised that he can do as he pleases, but he mustn't be permitted to retard the chances of the Yankees. Many are suggesting that Caldwell be exchanged for a heavy-hitting outfielder whom the Yankees need while the elimination of Caldwell will give the rest of their excellent pitching staff a chance to do more work Cleveland Detroit and St. Louis all need pitchers and there is a possibility that Caldwell may be exchanged for some good hitter now playing with one of those teams.

A young lady once said to her beau:
"Won't you please take me out to a sheau?"
The young man who was broke,
Put his watch into soke,
And smilingly answered "Let's geau."

Among betting men the Red Sox are being picked as the pennant winners in the American League. The considerable lead gained by the Giants some time ago is expected to be maintained, and so those who have a few extra pennies are placing bets e[illegible] on the Red Sox or Giants for the world's series. There are others, of course, who look to the White Sox to get away with bunting in the American League circuit, and the are just as enthusiastic in upholding that team as are the others in backing theirs with coin of the realm.

Lew McCarty is recuperating at his home in Catawissa, Pa. Lew has been in the hospital at Cincinnati ever since he broke his leg, and was recently removed, because "there's no place like home" to get well in. He is expected to report for duty in about a month from now.

PUGILISTIC ANNALS

1900.—Frank Erne and "Terrible Terry" McGovern fought their memorable featherweight championship battle in Madison Square Garden, New York. McGovern won by a knock-out in the third round. Erne had agreed to knock out Terry within ten rounds or lose the decision. Instead of that, he was knocked out himself.

1901. — Joe Gans defeated Dal Hawkins in three rounds in New York. Gans and Hawkins fought three of the most terrific ring battles in history. In the first meeting, Hawkins, who was a Californian, won the decision. In the second battle, after both men had been knocked down several times, Gans scored a knock-out in the second round.

SO THAT WAS IT

At last the secret of the Pirates' slump is explained. Jimmy Callahan says Barney Dreyfuss wouldn't give the players a free hand in the hotel dining rooms. How is a man to play ball if he can't tuck his napkin under his chin like a gentleman, point to the menu and say: "Bring me some o' that?"

To crown all Barney wouldn't get everybody a lower berth when the team was travelling. As a result the players have been doing their sleeping on the diamond. Bum headwork, Mr. Dreyfuss.

ROGERS—BAKER

A very prety summer wedding was solemnised in Lindsay yesterday, when Miss Dell. Baker, a popular Lindsay young lady, became the bride of Mr. Leo Rogers, son of Principal John Rogers, of the Separate School. The ceremny, which took place in St. Mary's R. C. Church, at 8 o'clock, was performed by the Rev. Wm. Rogers, brother of the groom, assisted by Monsignor Casey and Fr. Powers. The bride entered the church on the arm of her brother, Mr. W. E. Baker.

After the ceremony they repaired to the home of the bride, where a dainty wedding breakfast was served amid beautiful and lavish decorations of marguerites, palms and roses. A reception was then held on the verandah under a large floral bell. Immediately after this the happy couple left for Montreal and other eastern points.

The bride was beautifully attired in white crepe de chene and large picture hat, her travelling suit being of grey silk poplin, with shoes to match and a small chin-chin hat. Mr. Harold Rogers assisted the groom, while Miss Blandine Primeau, of Toronto, acted as bridesmaid.

The wedding presents were numerous and costly. The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful set of earrings, to the bridesmaid a fancy amethyst bar pin, and to the best man a tie pin.

Among the out-of-town guest were Mrs. H. C. Baker and Miss Norine Baker, Toronto; Miss Margaret Lynch, Montreal Mr. Frank Lynch, Peterboro; Mrs. J. D. O'Connell, Victoria, B.C.; Miss Blandina Primeau, Rochester, N. Y.

NO HELP FROM SOLDIERS.

Men in Training Will Not Be Allowed Harvest-Leave.

It is not likely that Sir Edward Kemp, Minister of Militia, will permit the soldiers in training in the various camps for overseas service to help garner the crops in Ontario this year. This was done last year. Owing to the shortage of farm help it was anticipated that possible action along these lines would be taken by the Minister of Militia, and thus relieve the situation to some extent.

ONE CENT A DAY CLUB

The contributions to the one cent a day club of the Ashburnham Red Cross Society for the month of June amounted to five thousand nine hundred and twenty-five (5925) cents, making a total to date of $1,374.57.

THE IMPROPER USE OF BRAIDS IS FORBIDDEN

BY MILITARY AUTHORITIES FOLLOWING MANY COMPLAINTS.

It has been brought to the attention of the military authorities that a number of officers, N.C.O's and men are making improper use of gold braid, and are wearing unauthorised silver braid indicating that they have returned from overseas on account of illness. The gold braid is to be worn by officers, N.C.O's and men whose names appear in the casualty list as "wounded." The term "wounded" refers only to those whose names have appeared, or may hereafter appear in the casualty lists given out by the Adjutant-General's office, or by the G.O.C. of any force engaged in active operations. Reports from hospitals lists are not to be regarded as authorative for these purposes. Officers and men reported "wounded-gas" or "wounded-shell-shock" are entitled to this distinction. Accidental or self-inflicted wounds or injuries do not qualify. The wearing of silver braid indicates the return on account of sickness or shock.

Anti-conscription speeches, picnic and high mass were interwoven in peculiar fashion on Sunday at the picnic organized by the parishioners of St. Eustache, Man.

EXPRESS BUSINESS GROWING.

The receipts at the customs house examining warehouse are increasing every day. Yesterday the monies received for duties on express parcels were the largest ever received in one day since the opening of the Water street office.

Poor tea that can be sold at a low price is most extravagant in use. A little good tea, like Salada, makes many more cups; hence its real economy.

AUTOISTS FINED.

D. Thompson and W. H. Baker took a chance and ran their autos without having the tail lights glimmering. At the police court this morning Police Magistrate Dumble assessed them $5.00 each.

wearing apparel from one, boots from another, and also rented a kodak from a third which he failed to return. The proprietor of the hotel is out three weeks' board, which together with the loss sustained by others who trusted him will total several hundred dollars.

The young man, it is said, passed a bogus cheque for the sum of $12.00 on a merchant, but before action could be taken he made his get-away. On Saturday he sent word to an employe of the plant where he was engaged that he was unwell and would not be in to work. He told others during the day that he intended motoring to Peterboro that evening to attend a social dance. He was seen at the G.T.R. station just before the 8.15 train pulled out, and it is believed he left for the Electric City. He had no valise or trunk when he came to Lindsay and left behind him a gray suit and a pair of boots.

The matter has been placed in the hands of County Crown Attorney Stinson and steps will be taken to try and locate the party whose name is Lubin.

In connection with the bogus cheque it appears that Lubin deposited $10 in the Standard Bank some time ago, but this was withdrawn. When the merchant went to the bank on Monday with the cheque it was found that Lubin had no account there. He had previously given the merchant a check for $8.00 which was cashed at the bank from the $10 which Lubin had deposited.

Lubin, it is said, came to Lindsay from Shawenegan Falls, Quebec.

Belleville, July 18.—This week Albert College celebrates the sixtieth anniversary of its opening. Opened as Belleville Seminary, it has for this period successfully carried out co-education. TORONTO YARDS FULL OF COAL

DEALERS SLOW IN UNLOADING CARS FREIGHTED WITH FUEL.

Toronto, July 18.—"Twelve hundred cars of coal and no takers."

This was the statement of Terminal Superintendent Farrell of the G. T. R., when asked how the coal situation was. "Coal is arriving here very freely, and we have plenty of coal in our yards but the local firms do not seem very anxious to move any of it. Out of the 1,200 cars of coal on hand only one hundred was moved.

"It would be a great advantage to the railway and the citizens if the dealers would assist in moving the coal and placing it in the cellars of citizens who say they have ordered their coal and can not get it. If they block our yards so that we cannot haul any more from the mines and frontier trains, then they must expect to experience the same difficulty they did last winter."

"How are the railways supplied for their own use?"

"We are stocking up freely, at London, Sarnia, Palmerston and Fort Erie."

"Then it won't be necessary to confiscate any coal this winter?"

"I don't think that will be necessary."

LAW AND ORDER AGAIN IN CONTROL AT RUSS. CAPITAL

Government Troops Have Another Clash With Rioters---German Agent at Work to Compromise Provisional Government---Army Again Victorious in Galicia.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Petrograd, July 19.—An extraordinary Cabinet Council is discussing a proposal for the transfer of the seat of Government to Moscow.

A letter from General Brusiloffs, chief of staff, states that Nikolai Lenine, the radical socialist leader, is agent for the German General staff. Evidence was traced through the confession of Lieut. Ermolenko that he was sent to the front of the Sixth Russian army to make a propaganda in favor of early peace with Germany.

Lenine's task of compromising provisional Government in every way possible was assisted by German money sent through the embassy at Stockholm.

The general feeling is that the decisive stage between the forces of order and disorder is rapidly approaching.

Military authorities sent two light guns to Tauride Palace to protect it against expected attack for the purpose of seising the Minister of Labor and Agriculture, posts and telegraphs. On the way to the Palace this artillery force encountered a machine gun regiment and shots were exchanged. A party of infantry stationed at Champa De Mars fired on Cossacks from Pavlosky.

Russian troops have again driven into the Galician Village of Novica south of Kalisz and now occupy the eastern end of that place.

The Government controls the city today as compeltely as Bolsheviki appeared to control it Tuesday.

Under Martial Law.

At a conference of ministers and workmen's and soldiers' delegates it was decided to place the city under martial control. Gen. Polovsteff, governor of the military district, was summoned and instructed to use all the loyal troops to put down the insurrection. As a result he ordered out the Cossacks and several companies of infantry to patrol the streets.

One of the first clashes between the opposing forces occurred on Troitsky Bridge, where the Cossacks met a body of armed demonstrants. The Cossacks were armed only with sabres. A brisk fire was opened by the insurrectionists, whereupon the Cossacks fled up Liteiny Prospect, many of them abandoning their horses. Several Cossacks and 12 horses were killed.

Later a brush between armed government troops and Maximalists occurred in the neighborhood of the Duma. The Maximalists were quickly dispersed, leaving behind seventeen wounded.

A majority of the regiments of the Petrograd garrison and most of the armed motor car detachments are supporting the government. A machine gun regiment stationed at Strielna has signified its wililngness to come to the government's aid.

A group of Maximalists were arrested by patrols on their way to take possession of the telegraph and cable office.

Following the series of clashes between patrolling forces of the government and Maximalists which occurred last night, the city this morning was quiet under a continuous downpour of rain. Yesterday's list of casualties, so far as ascertained, comprises six persons killed and 238 wounded.

PICTURES OF CITY LIFE

The Attempt to Get Bathing Beaches and the Tragedy of Yesterday.

PICTURE NO. 1.

Time, Winter, 1916-17.
Place, Peterborough, Ont.

Peterborough City, a lovely town, very modern in some ways, and not so modern in many more ways, with a beautiful river running through it; many death traps made by Government and the companies along its course.

A great agitation lasting several months; several citizens writing letters in the press; meetingse held; household conversations, and public gatherings, with the topic discussed thoroughly, that of having suitable supervised swimming places.

Employers of labor in factories taking or sending petitions to employes to sign; merchants, doctors and people in every walk of life signing a petition.

Three or four deputations being asked by our accommodating and obliging Conacil to meet them some evening.

A certain evening appointed, certain deputations other than the swimming beach petitioners all there together.

Other deputations heard first and were promised consideration, some of them with only a few hours of existence.

Swimming beach petitioners heard last, presenting their views and a largely signed petition.

They are also promised consideration.

One by one all the other deputations were granted consideration.

The swimming beach deputations were notified to have more meetings before committees of Council.

One afternoon the deputations met the specially selected Council committee, and at the same time two other citizens met the Council to block the grant as asked for to provide accommodations. Their argument was this:

It was not a patriotic movement, it was not a deputation composed of taxpayers entirely.

Argument from the petitioners was that it was the duty of the people at home to care for the absent soldiers' families. Also that all soldiers fighting were not taxpayers.

Meeting closed. Aldermen in attendance very nervous. Other business to attend to. Congenial goodbye. See you later.

Conclusion.

A proper swimming place with a caretaker would have prevented this fatality.

What was the value of this young man's life? What of others?

The Council not doing anything to recover the body of this poor friendless boy. You cannot expect them to do so when they have no interest in the living who go swimming.

The indecency of accusing another of the thing he himself is guilty of does not appear to have struck him yet.

GRAND LODGE SESSION.

In Ontario the Membership Has Increased by 2,650 In the Past Year.

Belleville, July 19.—The retiring Grand Master, S. A. Luke, of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Canada, in his address to the sixty-second annual communication today said: "The enemy has said: 'Canadians, they never retreat or surrender.' It is, therefore, up to us to fulfil our promise and send reinforcements. Compulsory service should be immediately enforced."

"To the English-speaking mind, soldier and citizen, the question occurs: Why should one portion of the community fight for the safety of another which comparatively refuses to fight for itself?

"Of the Ontario Masonic's membership of 63,500, an increase of 2,650 over last year's, there is an honor roll of about 12,000 names, and many Masons have been wounded, and the supreme sacrifice has claimed a saddening but inspiring toll of useful lives."

Grits Cheer at Prospect of Election

Outburst Was Speedily Answered by the Members on the Other Side.

EXTENSION IS SHELVED.

Senate Will Not Pass on the Bill, and an Election Is Certain.

Ottawa, July 19. — Immediately on the opening of the House of Commons Wednesday the Prime Minister made a definite statement that it was the intention of the Government not to proceed with the resolution regarding the extension of the term of Parliament in view of the other side of the House.

Sir Robert said it might have been noticed that he had not made any motion to have the resolution sent with a message to the Senate for the purpose of having concurrent action there.

"My failure to do this," said Sir Robert, "was due to the reason I set forth in moving the resolution. I then declared that I did not think it should be acted upon unless there was unanimity, or practical unanimity in the House with regard to it."

"The result in the House showed something very much short of unanimity, or practical unanimity, as the vote stood 83 in favor of it with 62 against it. In the circumstances, therefore, having regard to the course which I laid down in moving the resolution, I merely desire to announce what must already be apparent to every hon. gentleman in the House, that the Government does not propose taking any further action on the resolution, although it was carried by a majority int he House."

This statement was greeted with Opposition cheers, speedily answered by cheers from the Government side.

British Make Successful Raid and Capture Prisoners---Positions Lost Last Week Are Again Taken and Re-established---French Inflict Serious Losses.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

London, July 19.—A a result of recent fighting east of Monchy Le Freux advanced posts, from which our troops were compelled to fall back by the enemy's attack on July 11, have now been re-established, says today's official statement. Hostile raiding parties were repulsed last night west of Cherisy before reaching our trenches. We made successful raids north and east of Ypres and secured prisoners. A few other prisoners were captured by us in an unsuccessful hostile attack upon one of our advanced positions east of Ooosttaverne. There was considerable artillery activity on both sides in the night.

THE TIRELESS ARTILLERY.

Paris, July 19.—Our artillery and the enemy's were active over whole front. There was especially violent fire between Somme and Aisne in the region of Vauclerc and Craonne and on the left bank of the Meuse.

South of St. Quentin the Germans after a violent bombardment, deilvered an attack at about nine o'clock yesterday evening on a front of eight hundred metres east of Gauchy against the hillock of the Mill of All Winds. The enemy succeeded in gaining a footing in our first trench line but was driven out of the greater part of the occupied positions by counter attack.

After a very intense bombardment last night the Germans made a counter attack on our new positions at Avocourt Wood but were checked by our fire before they were able to reach our lines. The attacks on our trenches at Pantheon southeast of Sapigneul and in the region of Douaumont were repulsed completely. One of our detachments in an operation east of Badonviller succeeded in inflicting serious losses on the enemy and in making prisoners.

BERLIN CLAIMS GAIN.

Berlin, July 19.—The capture of French positions on a front of a kilometre southwest of St. Quentine is announced by the war office. Artillery fighting in Flanders continues. Heavy artillery fighting continues on the northern end of the Russo-Galician front near Dvinska and Smorgeon, the report says.

The remains were taken in charge by Lane and Eano and removed to their undertaking parlor.

NO CONFERENCE FOR UNCLE SAM

DECLINES TO TAKE PART IN ALLIES' MEETING AT PARIS.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, July 19.—The United States has been officially invited by the Allied Governments to participate in an inter-allies conference to be held in Paris some time this month but has decided that for the present it will not be necessary to take part in such meetings not directly affecting this country's part in the war. It was officially explained at the State Department that while this course will be followed at present it was not to be taken as an indication of a permanent policy.

RUSSIAN CAPITAL LOOKS LIKE CAMP WITH TROOPS EVERYWHERE

Government Has Sitnation Well in Hand But Every Precaution is Taken to Prevent Further Trouble---Anarchists Say Their Ambition is Satisfied.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Petrograd, July 19. — Since early morning Cossacks and other mounted troops have patrolled the streets and all thoroughfares are guarded by infantry. As an additional precaution, Troitski bridge, which leads most directly to the factory district, and Nicholas bridge, connecting with the Vasiliostrov district, where originated much of the disorder of recent days, were held by troops. The remaining bridge, leading to the business section, also was under a heavy guard, and only those possessing proper credentials were permitted to cross it.

Autoists Suspected.

Particular attention was given to automobiles. All over the city they were subjected to scrutiny and any suspects arrested. One automobile early to-day attempted to dodge the patrols. It was caught and found to be occupied by persons who were distributing anarchistic hand bills. The occupants showed fight and were beaten soundly by the Cossacks and then taken into custody.

In a big circle in front of the windows of the winter palace half a dozen armored cars were held in readiness for an emergency, and in the barracks nearby several thousand troops were kept under arms. Similar preparations were made in other quarters of the city. Only in districts beyond the Neuv have the disturbing elements the semblance of control, but thus far they have been inactive. They are reported to have announced that they were waiting for reinforcements from Kronstadt.

On the other hand, a circular distributed in the streets purporting to have been issued by Bolsheviki, declares they have held the city in their power for two days, and that they are content with this state of affairs, having no further ambitions.

In the vicinity of the parliament buildings, which is occupied by government troops, quiet prevails.

Russians in Novica.

The Russians entered Novica as a result of a night attack but suffering heavy losses, withdrew to the east end of the village. Two enemy attacks were repulsed by our fire. In an engagement near Novica Tuesday the Russians captured three machine guns, eight officers and 220 men.

Fusialdes have occurred on the Roumanian front.

221 MEMBERS OF REICHSTAG WILL VOTE FOR EARLY PEACE

Majority of Deputies Are Now in Perfect Accord---Text of Resolution in Favor of Ending War.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Amsterdam July 19.—The Berlin Tageblatt says a committee of the majority parties in the German Reichstag has unanimously agreed to move the peace resolution. Previously the committee was divided, three members disagreeing with the majority. The Tageblatt says in the Rechstag 221 deputes will vote for the peace resolution. The text of the resolution is as follows:—

"On August 4th, 1914, the following words were spoken from the throne: 'We are impelled by no thoughts of conquest.' On this platform the German people stand today as they did when the words were spoken. Germany has taken up arms only in the defence of her liberty and independence and for the protection of her territorial possessions.

"The Reichstag aspires to a peace by negotiation and a perpetual reconciliation among nations. With a peace such as this, all annexation of force and all political, industrial and financial measures undertaken by volence are incompatible.

"The Reichstag disapproves all plans which lead to empty isolation and emnity among the peoples after the war The freedom of the seas must be secured. Only an industrial peace will pave the way for a friendly intercourse among nations.

"However so long as the enemy's Governments refuse peace on this basis so long as they threaten Germany and her allies with conquest and force of arms just so long will the German people stand together as one man fighting and persevering steadfastly until her own and her allies' right to live and develop shall be assured.

"In its unity the German people stands unconquerable. The Reichstag feels itself to be one with the men who in battle have so heroically guarded the fronts. The imperishable thanks of the entre people is their portion."

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

PETERBOROUGH THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1917

WATER POWER TO SAVE COAL

Canada depends upon the United States for a large portion of her coal supply both for domestic and industrial purposes; she is therefore much interested in the coal conditions obtaining there. A recent communication from Secretary F. K. Lane of the U. S. Dept. of the Interior shows how acute the situation has been made by the entrance of our neighbors into the war. One of the remedies urged, particularly applicable to Canada, is the immediate conservation of fuel by the efficient use of all available water-power. Elimination of unnecessary consumption of coal is considered a problem of national interest and of immediate concern. New power requirements should therefore be met, so far as practicable by utilization of hydro-electric energy; this would also apply to present steam generating energy consuming coal or oil in its production. Thus, all water available at water-power plants should be utilized to produce energy up to the capacity of the works and the requirements of the population and industries within transmission distance of the site; every facility should also be given for the efficient development of new sites. In regions where water-power can be made available steam-power plants should be operated only to carry loads in excess of those that can be carried by water-power plants. The adoption of this course, in many cases, would mean cheaper operation, particularly in view of the rapidly increasing price of coal.

Every additional hydro-electric horse-power used in Canada means the yearly liberation of from 10 to 12 tons of coal for domestic heating or other purposes where hydro-electric energy cannot be so effectively substituted.

THE LIBERALS' AIM.

"For clearness of motive, determination in carrying on the war, and vigor in working for victory in season and out of season, there is no man in Canada fit to stand in the same company as Sir Robert Borden.

"There is only one possible issue, winning the election. Analyze the question to the bottom and one cannot but be compelled with all charity to the belief that the aim is not to help win the war, but to change those in the Government for those out of it, with a view to securing the sweets of office. Those who are notorious for doing the least to win the war are forcing the turmoil of an election.

"When the world is animated by a spirit of selfishness and self-sacrifice, we are forced into an election for the most selfish of all reasons—petty, personal ambitions. I hesitate to stand as one of a group of the only thoroughly-selfish men in the British Empire." — Michael Clark, Liberal, in speech in Parliament.

THE ISSUE.

THERE WILL BE only one issue at the next Federal election, that gravest of all problems, the winning of the war. Sir Wilfrid Laurier stands before the country as a leader who is opposed to conscription, and has the all but solid support of the people of his own province, whose spirit of indifference to the fate of the Empire has been developed by his teachings, the promise of immunity from military effort that he has always held out to them in the event of his return to power.

The voters of Canada who are opposed to conscription are still at home ready to cast their ballots against the policy of the Government even though that policy is supported by the best elements in the Opposition. The soldiers in the trenches are naturally conscriptionists but they will be unable to record their verdict on polling day. The Government will go into the contest clearly at a disadvantage, with a large percentage of their supporters in actual service.

After a visit to the battle front, Sir Robert Borden has been convinced of the futility of attempting to take a vote of the soldiers. When an election was in prospect two years ago, preparations were made to take the soldiers' vote, and ballot boxes were sent to Europe for the purpose, although the Liberals protested that nothing like a fair expression of opinion could be secured. Conditions have changed in the past two years. In 1915 the majority of Canada's military forces were in training camps either at home or in England. Today this situation is reversed, and the most of them are in the battle line. To take the vote of soldiers in training would be easy compared to that of circulating the ballots among the men at he front.

If the Borden Government is defeated there will be no conscription. The country has been drained dry of the young men willing to enlist. All the work of winning the war will be stopped, and vacancies in the ranks will never be filled, but the men now in France will be left to their own resources.

Capt. Burnham, in his statement in The Review yesterday, clearly defines the issue. The voters of Ontario will not fail to realize their duty. The election, when it comes, will not be fought along the old political lines, but the Borden Government can rely upon the support of the other side whose sentiments were represented by the win-the-war Liberals when they voted for the Conscription Bill in Parliament. The win-the-war Liberals no longer recognise Sir Wilfrid Laurier as their leader. In eight of the nine provinces of the Dominion the voters will concern themselves rather with the attitude of the candidates with regard to the war than with their previous records in politics.

Michael Clark of Red Deer has been from the first a consistent supporter of any policy designed to help win the war. He is the one man on the Opposition side who has had the courage to place country above party even though on all other questions than the war he is still as much of a Liberal as ever.

And in the prospect of an election, what does Michael Clark say? That Sir Wilfrid Laurier's aim is not to help the war work, but to secure again the sweets of office, and that he is not worthy to stand in the shoes of Sir Robert Borden, who for the past three years has had but a single purpose, which he has unselfishly and fearlessly pursued.

THE LETTER CARRIERS' PAY.

ALL WAGE EARNERS have received higher pay since the war broke out, and the cost of living has more than doubled. Even the laborer now finds himself surrounded on all sides with opportunities to work, but the wages he gets today are something like twice as high as they were away back in 1914. A man skilled in the use of a shovel gets 35 cents an hour, and even at that there is an ocacsional strike for a higher rate.

In the meantime government officials are expected to worry along at the old rate. None of them are, even in normal times, excessively salaried. Under war conditions the situation of some of them is little short of desperate. The letter carriers, for example, are still toiling in heat and cold, in all kinds of weather, for their $3 a day, or really $2.85 a day when their dues are paid. That is the maximum compensation, and the scale runs from $2 a day for extra and relief men, increasing by 25 cents a day each year until the top figure is reached.

The carriers have been led to believe for some time that their compensation would be increased, but the pay cheques remain the same. It is little wonder that their thoughts turn to other lines of endeavor when they hear of some of the wages paid unskilled laborers and mechanics. It is hardly fair for any government to ask its employes these days to attempt the task of raising a family on $2 or even $2.85 a day.

BE NATURAL.

THE AMATEURISH politician who is temporarily running riot in the editorial columns of The Examiner these days should not over-exert himself in an effort to be funny at the expense of his contemporaries or on general principles. Any man makes himself ridiculous in essaying that role when nature has gifted him rather for the part of a mute at a funeral. He should be chary, too, in drawing on his limited fund of information to give tips. Better pursue the safer course so popular in that quarter, of watching the feline with an eye open for the direction when the animal makes its jump.

THE CHIEF'S ADDRESS.

CHIEF THOMPSON has always been regarded as one of the most efficient administrators of a police department in Canada, and he has placed the one over which he presides among the best in Ontario. The Chief's ability is recognized among the profession, and at their annual conventions he always takes a leading part. His addresses have become test books on police work, and Peterborough has always enjoyed the distinction of having one of the foremost representatives at these gatherings.

The able address which the Chief delivered at the convention in Quebec yesterday proves that he preaches nothing but what he practises. His aim has always been to prevent crime and the light criminal records of this city are the best proof of his success. The third degree barbarity has never had a place in his professional creed, and in evidence collected against a defendant a spirit of fairness has always been a distinguishing feature.

No man on earth really possesses so much power as a police officer. He has the liberty of his fellowmen in his hands. Too often that power has been abused, but if the rules so clearly laid down by Chief Thompson in his address yesterday are faithfully followed there can be no cause for complaint on this score.

Many a young man has been saved from a life of crime when on committing his first offence he was warned instead of punished. The day of the police tyrant is over, and Chief Thompson is a leading apostle of the new methods of dealing with the erring.

One of the best advertisements a city can receive is to have one of its officials take a prominent part in national gatherings as Chief Thompson has done at Quebec.

NOTES AND COMMENT.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER is in wrong, with posterity as well as the present generation.

* * *

AMATEUR GARDENING, with peanut politics as the main crop, seems to be growing in favor at Ottawa.

* * *

HOLLAND needs German coal and Germany needs the Dutch dairy supplies, but the British blockade has stopped this traffic.

* * *

NO MAN CAN RUN as a win-the-war candidate in West Peterborough so long as he acknowledges Sir Wilfrid Laurier as a leader.

* * *

THE WAR cannot be won by the adoption of resolutions by party factions, no matter how high-sounding such resolutions may be.

* * *

FRENCH-CANADIANS in the United States are among the first to enlist, not being under the influence of Laurierism and Bourassaism.

* * *

HON. GEORGE P. GRAHAM, it seems, is still unable to play the game without stacking the deck and hiding an ace or two up his sleeves.

* * *

GERMANY is now said to favor general disarmament. So far as the Teutons are concerned the Allies will see to it that they carry out their share of the proposition.

AN ELECTION may clear the air, but excessive optimists say the same of thunderstorms and the present war. There are better methods of disinfecting a house than burning it down.

Wit and Wisdom

Why He Failed.

Five young men trooped into a shop, each to buy a new hat. Scenting fun, the man behind the counter waxed jocular.

"Are you all married?" he enquired.

"Yes," they chorused.

"Then I will give a hat to the man who can truthfully say that he has not kissed any woman but his own wife since he was married."

"Hand over the hat," said one of the party, "I was married yesterday."

One of the others was spinning the yarn to his wife, when his laughter gave way to fear.

"I say, John," she said, "how was it you did not bring one?"

One Women's Way.

The young hopeful of four years had been a source of continual vexation and trouble all through the meal, and at its finish a lady friend turned to the child's mother and said:

"If your boy belonged to me I shouldn't stand so much of his nonsense at meal times. I should give him a thrashing."

"But," said the mother, "you can't smack the poor little fellow on a full stomach."

"No," said her friend, "but you can turn him over."

No Trade.

A lank Missourian walked into a woman's exchange in St. Louis. A cantankerous middle-aged woman stepped up and asked him what he wanted. "Be this the woman's exchange?" he inquired. "It is!" she snapped. "An' be ye the woman?" he persisted. "I am!" she replied in no gentler tones. He looked around thoughtfully, transferred his tobacco from one cheek to the other, edged toward the door, then remarked casually. "Wall, I reckon I'll keep Sal!"

What is a Model?

Mr. Jinkworthy had become greatly puffed up over the fact that his wife was telling the neighbors that she had a model husband. He bored his colleagues in the office about it until one of them called him to one side and suggested that he should look up the definition of the word "model."

Mr. Jinkworthy took down the dictionary and read:

"Model—a small imitation of the real thing!"

Vain Regrets.

"I could have bought farm land once in what is now the center of Peterborough."

"Cheap, I'll bet."

"Yes. If I had done it I'd be rich now."

"We all have those vain regrets," opined the grocer. "If I had every potato I've stuck on the spout of a kerosene can I'd be wealthy beyond the dreams of avarice."

At Manvers.

The Manvers District celebrated the 227th anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne right loyally at Pontypool, on Thursday, July 12th. A grand parade took place at 1.30 to Pond Park, where a splendid program of sports was held, consisting of tug of war between the several lodges, foot races, putting the shot, etc. A football match, Tyrone vs. Enniskillen, but unfortunately one of the players on the Tyrone team had his leg broken and the game, which promised to be a good one, was called off.

The Red Cross served dinner and tea, and they were kept busy. All were satisfied with the excellent reports provided. The big concert in the Orange Hall was thoroughly enjoyable. The hall was packed to the doors and hundreds were unable to obtain admission. Robert Wilson and Fred Perrin, comedians, of Toronto, delighted the audience, as also did Miss Grace Bonnick, pianist, and Miss Belma Greenwood, elocutionist, of Douro.

Celebration At Omemee.

The Loyal Orange district of Emily held a big picnic in Magee's beautiful grove just west of the village of Omemee. The Orangemen met at their hall about 10 a.m. and paraded the principal streets of the town and then to the grove, accompanied by hundreds of the people of the village and surrounding district.

The good ladies of the district provided ample provisions for all who desired to dine at the grounds. The ladies of Omemee and Emily are noted for their splendid cooking and on this occasion they outdid all their previous efforts; there were dainties galore, and the delicious homemade bread and butter, and the salads, etc., made a hungry man's heart glad. Those who desired to have meals down town had the privilege of securing them at the Commercial House or Presbyterian Church and many patronized both. The program of sports was quite interesting and great enthusiasm was shown. A list of the prize winners follows:

Boys under 16, 100 yd. race—L. James, E. Pogue.

Boys under 14, 100 yd. race — C. Kennedy, A. Pogue.

For largest lodge in parade— 114 won.

For best dressed lodge in parade—113 won.

Baseball—Mt. Horeb vs. Omemee, former winning by score of 20-16.

Two booths run by the Orangemen of the district did a land office business, we understand, and the proceeds amounted to $175.00. Bro. Walter Magee, D.M., took the chair at 3 p.m. and after a brief address in which he thanked the Brethren and their friends for turning out in such large numbers, he called on Rev. J. G. Lewis to speak. Mr. Lewis seemed quite at home, and his stirring, patriotic address was listened to with appreciation by the big crowd. He was fully aware of the great and good work the Orange Order had done and is doing. The next speaker was Bros. Sergt. J. P. McInnes, who on rising was greeted with great applause. He gave a brief history of the work of the Orange Order. He was proud to be an Orangeman and proud to belong to Emily district, in which so many loyal brethren reside, and from which district many gallant and heoric brothers had answered the call of King and Empire. It was sincerely regretted that Sir Sam Hughes and Rev. E. R. James and Dr. Wood were unable to attend, owing to previous engagements.

EDITOR'S MAIL

Editor Review:—It is hard to conceive of anything more grossly unfair than your editorial yesterday when you state that "A vote for the Liberal candidate for West Peterborough will mean a vote for the mischief-makers in Quebec."

The Liberal candidate has not yet been chosen here and no pronouncement has been made either by the local Liberal organization or the Liberals of Ontario generally. What connection is there between the Liberals of West Peterborough and the "mischief makers in Quebec" who are certainly not confined to any one party? The Liberals of West Peterborough are win-the-war Liberals first, last, and all the time.

Yours truly,
JOSEPH WEARING.

Of course no Liberal candidate has been yet chosen for West Peterborough, but no matter upon whom the chance may fall such candidate must acknowledge Sir Wilfrid Laurier as his leader, and if by any chance he were elected he would find himself seated in Parliament with the mischief-makers of Quebec who will support Sir Wilfrid to a man.

As to the self-assumed title of win-the-war Liberals any candidate or party may select a name but the trouble will be to live down association. Tray failed, for instance, to convince the vengful [illegible] that he was of a peaceful disposition, on account of the company in which they found him.

THE SALVING OF A DERELICT

By MAURICE DRAKE

Marion, her hand in some unknown man's, her eyes looking into his as they had never looked into his own; Marion, being kissed by another man—or sitting, wife, on another man's knee. And then the knowledge of this great hungry city came on him, bringing cold perspiration to his forehead. A lonely woman—worse, a lonely pretty woman—and temptation on every side of her. Of course, that couldn't hurt her—he pictured her calm eyes as she rebuked him in Chancery Lane the day before—but she might fall ill, or get into some other man's hands. Black shame was added to sickening fear as he remembered her, struggling, in his own arms.

"This'll never do," he decided aloud, and paddling into the other room on his bare feet, he switched on the light to look for something to read. On the table lay the women's papers, and he took a bundle of them with him back to bed for re-reading, reason, preternaturally alert in the restless stillness of the night, crying "Fool!" at every step. He dozed off to sleep about five, and rose in the morning haggard and unrested, more than half angry with the impulse that had prompted him to litter his bed with the nonsensical magazines.

All the morning he mooned about idly, but in the afternoon restlessness and the fear of another wakeful night sent him to the river to seek comfort. He sailed on a steamer as far down the Thames as it would take him, returning on another to Chelsea. The motion of the boat, the fresh air, and sight of the mighty ocean-going traffic of the lower reaches calmed him somewhat, and he returned to his rooms and slept well and heavily.

On Sunday he went to church. Remembering a red brick Gothic erection at the end of Baron's Court Road, he arrayed himself gorgeously and went there, cherishing vain hopes. His landlady passed him as he stood waiting in the porch after service, but there was no sign of the face he looked for. On the way home he reflected that the landlady might mention that she had seen him in such godly surroundings, and derived some pleasure from the idea until he recalled that Marion did not as yet know he was to be her fellow-lodger. By nightfall he was again in a grievous state of depression, and the pavement of Oxford Street—desiring music and lights, he went to Frascati's for dinner—did little towards cheering him. It brought back his first impression of a roaring torrent flowing through the streets—this evening of the Day of Rest. Brave he knew Marion was, and fearless, but who could say where such a straw might be swept unconsidered in this flood of life? Evidences of the broken debris of the stream were plain in view at every step he took. Accident of cataract and shoal everywhere beset the course of the current, and who was she—though she was Queen of all the world—that she should be immune from accident? And he—the one that was strong enough to float by her side, fighting the waters for her sake—he had himself put gulfs between them by his own cursed folly.

He went home sweating and shaking, but having some fragments of common-sense still remaining, reflected that his fears for her could help her little, and ensured a good night's sleep by bottled beer and a pipe of sailor's cake tobacco, a fragment of which he found in the coat which he had worn on his arrival in London.

The next day he quitted the flat for good, and was installed amid the poorer surroundings of Baron's Court Road. Though anticipating tribulation, he yet embarked upon his course methodically. Timing his departure with care, he was fortunate enough to meet her at the door as she left the house in the morning, and her face showed unbounded astonishment.

"I'm lodging with Mrs. Jardine," he explained, discarding the conventional "Good-morning."

"You!" Her tone told nothing.

"Yes. You know how I got your address. Will—will you try and forget that? I want to see more of you."

"But this—this amounts to persecution."

"Before Heaven, I mean no such thing," Laurence said earnestly. "But I must and will see more of you, if you'll allow me. You haven't encouraged me, you know well enough. You needn't reproach yourself with that. Can't you try and think that circumstances have been against me, up to know?"

"Circumstances?" was all she said.

"Yes, circumstances. I wasn't drunk; I hadn't been drinking—at least, only a very little—when you called the other afternoon for your purse. You maddened me. . . . No; for Heaven's sake don't start apologising again for what you said. I richly deserved it, and it makes me hot and ashamed to hear you say you're sorry for it."

"Perhaps I was responsible—of course, I know I was—for the whole unlucky business; but I could have kicked myself when you'd gone. I told you how things were—how I'd been playing the fool—" He caught a glimpse of her face as she walked beside him, and was warned, if only by the flutter of an eyelid, that he was on dangerous ground—"I didn't know you then. And now, please, believe me, I want to pull up, and you can help me, if you will."

"How?"

"By forgetting all I said or did in that unlucky quarter of an hour, and allowing me to—to be a friend of yours."

"Am I to forget all you said?"

"Yes—no. I'll sail under no false colors. I said I wanted to marry you. I want to be a friend of yours now with that end in view."

"But how ridiculous! I don't even know you—and you don't know me."

"I don't want——"

"[illegible] of course you don't. There's a man all over. You don't want to know more of me—only to marry me. Oh, you're mad!"

"I am—a bit."

"I'm glad you've the grace to admit it. Now, listen to me." She turned on the pavement outside the suburban station, and held up a finger admonishingly. "I met you for the first time five days ago. Our first meeting was accidental. Then—I don't want to rub it in—you showed your respect and admiration for me by stopping me in Chancery Lane and asking me to lunch. I accepted because it saved the price of a lunch. No; I won't tell stories either. I accepted because I was sorry for you—your eyes looked tired and sad—and, besides, I'm a writer, and all types of people are interesting, and you had a brown, healthy skin, and looked like a strong man who had lived in the open air. It seemed strange that you should be idling as you were, and so I thought perhaps you would be useful material. I'll admit I congratulated myself on that lunch. Your stories of the North Sea were very interesting; you told them well, and I liked you.

"Then—forgive me for recalling it—came that dreadful time in your rooms, and I was shocked beyond measure. You had been drinking—I don't know how much, and I don't care—and you treated me—— How did you treat me? Do you want me to remind you?"

Laurence looked at his boots. "No," he said shortly.

"Now I put it to you. If anyone had served you so, and then came seeking your further acquaintance, how would you feel? Remember all I know of you is that you were a fisherman; that you've come into money; that you have been living a life of folly—and perhaps worse; and that you've grievously insulted me. That you are obviously an educated man only makes matters worse. And now, can you blame me for wishing to see no more of you?"

"Lord knows I can't," Laurence said humbly. "You think that I'm just a drunken, vicious brute of the lower orders who has come to London to spend money he would be better without. I know that, and it's true, worse luck. That's pretty much what I am. But, see here, I wasn't always a fisherman or a brute either. It was no fault of mine that I had to take to the life and live among brutes that have left their stamp on me. And now I want—I really do want to reform. And you can help me—nobody else can."

"But how? Why should I? You've talked of marrying me. If I allow you to be friendly with me you'll have that idea at the back of your head all the time, and when you find out the truth you'll only go back to your bad ways again."

"The truth?" Laurence asked.

"Yes, the truth. I don't want to marry you. I don't want to marry anybody, as far as that goes. But you—great heavens! man, I wouldn't marry you if you were the last man on earth. A man who has behaved as you have—a man who gives the impression of being strong, and yet can't cut himself adrift from a horribly unclean life without the help of a woman he hasn't known for five days! . . . Oh, I know what you're going to say! That it shows the strength of your feelings. It doesn't. It shows your weak—your babyish—want of self-control. If ever I marry it will be a man who could be my master—not one I have to lead. And besides," she finished lamely, with a little nervous, womanly laugh, "you're dark, and I prefer fair men. I'm dark myself, you see. So please put the idea out of your head. I could never marry you. Never—never—never!"

Laurence's self-conceit was returning. He congratulated himself on arriving at the dignity of so lengthy, so temperate a reprimand, but his tongue was bitted as he answered.

"Then we'll say no more about it. But now, marrying and giving in marriage being tabooed, may I repeat my first request? I still have nearly a month to spend in town, and I should like to see more of you. Will you allow me to be on friendly terms with you—always understanding that it leads to nothing else? You spoke of persecution just now. If you feel that, you have only to beckon the nearest policeman."

She looked up, and there was a faint suspicion of a smile in her eyes and about the corners of her lips.

"We've met three times, and have suggested calling in the police on two of them," she replied. "That looks promising, doesn't it?"

Laurence laughed. "Unlucky circumstances, as I told you. Now, please, your answer."

"Very well. I go up West generally on Mondays and Fridays. On those days you may see me this far. On other days I won't promise, but providing that you behave—I beg your pardon. I'm sure you will now. Won't you?" Laurence contented himself with a nod—"I won't promise, but Mrs. Jardine has a season ticket at Earl's Court, and we go there to listen to the band in the evenings. If she has no objection, you may come as well—sometimes. And now I must go. You've nearly made me lose my train as it is. Good-bye." She held out her hand, and Laurence took it, echoing her farewell, and went back to his room, walking on air.

CHAPTER XV.

For the next three blissful days Laurence saw his divinity at least once in every twenty-four hours, and his heart sang paeans. On two occasions he was privileged to go with [illegible] promenade in the Exhibition grounds, once in the company of Mrs. Jardine, the landlady, and once alone. Fired with the determination to please, he behaved excellently, and the roughness and curtness once shorn from his manner, he proved a delightful companion. Some of the gentle breeding of early years took form again, and the obvious strength of the man, as marked in his cheery egotism as in his mighty shoulders, did something towards modifying Marion Stewart's first opinions. She watched him covertly, noting his manner, his carriage, his firm light footstep, rendered sure and agile by two years of cramped surroundings, of moving on rolling decks, and the more she saw the more she approved of him. To see him swing back a chair with one easy motion of arm and body and seat himself in the requisite pose for conversation without shufflings of feet, or uneasy fidgeting into position, was a pleasure to her eye, and she found herself mentally stringing words, writer fashion, to describe the light quick strength of his muscular frame.

He spoke well, too, and this, being a matter within her own province, met with due appreciation. For all that his early education had been relegated to oblivion, the greatest benefit the classics have to bestow still remained to him—the clear, free use of an untrammelled vocabulary. To have the root-stocks of modern tongues well grounded at childhood and in youth is to lay the foundation-stone of the fabric of language well and truly. That he had upon it acquired the broad strength of the rough-hewn Northland speech was a benefit for which, being ignorant of its value, he gave no thanks to Providence. And yet, to the girl, striving at an apprenticeship in her native tongue, his swift answers, his ready repartee, and the forceful strength of words in which he clothed strongly held opinions, came as lesson on lesson. She began to put cases to him, to demand explanations of the scheme of things as it appeared to her, less with the desire of gaining his opinion for its own value, than for the sheer pleasure of hearing the decisive and powerful construction of the sentences in which he expressed it.

A woman with any other training would have admired the man himself as seen looming behind the compelling words; but Marion Stewart, prepossessed by an idea of his weakness of character, always explained away any feeling he might excite in her by the same formula.

"He's a speaker," she decided, with a sage nod of her little head. "Just a speaker. That's all. If only I had the man's words to use—and they're no use to him, not a bit—I could do something with them. A good education, and the need since to speak and give orders clearly and distinctly without waste of words or time. What a training! I shall have to wait twenty years before I shall have the right word instinctively at command as he has. That's a man's education. Why can't we all be trained alike?"

She dimly resented Laurence's gift of tongues; but her analysis left one important point out of the question. Her words, written never so carefully, could never be more than so many black and white symbols, whilst Laurence's tongue was backed by his eyes and hands, and—though of this she stood self-blinded—by a strong individuality. Even had she been told this very thing by the most admired of her fellow-craftsmen, she would have rejected the idea with scorn, so sure was she, in her singleness of mind, that the man's words and not his personality were the influencing factors in her thoughts.

As for Laurence, he walked precariously, although, fortunately for himself, he had no fear of disillusioning his lady's eyes. The ice once broken, he progressed rapidly in her favor, and, conscious that unrestrained speech and action could hurt him but little in her opinion since that evil beginning of acquaintance, spoke almost as freely to her as he would have done to another man. Once or twice, indeed, he slipped into such a careless oath as men commonly use in nearer intercourse, receiving no further reprimand than an uplifted finger and disapproving shake of her head. Fearing to put restrictions on his speech, she made no further objection; but Laurence, appreciating her leniency, swore no more, though his criticisms and comments in ordinary conversation lost nothing of their freedom and caustic point.

On Thursday he went to call on Dwyer according to appointment. To his delight, his friend was able to report some progress.

"There were six guinea-pigs, and I think I've got 'em all," he said. "All that are alive and at large, that is. Dewhurst blew his brains out last year—best thing he ever did in his life, I should say. I've written to his executors, and that'll be all right, for certain. Poultney, chairman of directors—Sir Thomas George Evelyn Poultney, of Middlemarsh Hall, Berks—has changed his address. Virginia Water's his country house now—though why they wanted to lock up that poor water-headed softy, Lord knows. I've written to his man of business as well. Mortimer & Reingold held a share apiece, the pretty dears, and the other two were a shirt merchant in the city and his head clerk. Well-sounding suburban addresses they had, and they'd done business with your father before. How the deuce any man could have been fooled with such a palpable fraud, I'm dashed if I know."

"Never mind about the fraud," Laurence interrupted. "Have you got the shares?"

"All except Poultney's and Dewhurst's, and there won't be any bother with them. I didn't dare go to M. & R. for the purpose, so I met 'em accidentally—I know where they're to be found at midday—and had a drink with 'em. Whilst we were chatting I mentioned that I'd seen you a few days before, and that you were in fair raiment, beautiful to behold, and fatted and sleek. I also mentioned that you'd been breaking hearts, and mentioned the fair Constance. D'you mind?"

"I don't see why you need have dragged that in," Laurence grumbled. "Go on."

"Don't you? Well, I do. Your being back here amounts to nothing, but if you've been hanging around that description of shop window, it's possible you've money to spend. Anyhow, that sheeny, Reingold, pricked [illegible]

DISGUISES ASSUMED BY WILD CREATURES

Nature Helps to Conceal the Helpless, But Aids the Savage Beast in His Quest of Prey

The colorings and markings which Nature has given to animals are very important to them in their daily struggle for existence.

The protective coloring of an animal will often allow him to creep close to his prey without detection before making the final spring. An animal that is being hunted tries to deceive his enemy by cowering against a protective tree or undergrowth, with which the color pattern of his skin harmonizes. Animals are thus continually playing hide-and-seek with each other, and the one most adept in deception has greatest success.

The pattern of the animal's coloring depends on the prey he has to seek for food and the enemy he has to avoid. The polar bear, for instance, has to make his dinner principally on seals, which are very intelligent animals, and so even with his deceptive white coat the polar bear finds it hard to make a living.

The jaguar, whose mottled black and gold covering harmonizes with the light and shadow of leaves in sunlight in his native jungle; the striped zebra, who slides into the thicket and instantly becomes a part of it, and the lion, in his khaki suit, who cannot be seen against the sand of the desert, are other examples of protective coloring.

But Nature does better than this. Many deer, for instance, are gray and spotted in youth and plain in later years—a state of things which is not unknown among ourselves. The spots disguise the helpless doe crouching in the undergrowth, and the plain brown coat of the parents harmonizes with the shadows of the forest.

There are other animals whose power of dissimulation depends not on a color pattern on their skin, but on the absence of it; whose outer covering is made up of formless blotches, as in the case of the penguin, which fades away against the background of rocks, and the black and red skunk, which disappears against the sky line so that misguided rats and mice blunder right into him.

One of the most curious forms of disguise is that assumed by the maule or African ant-eater. It not only deceives his enemies, but serves as a protection against them in case he is discovered. At the first sign of danger the ant-eater bends himself double and wraps himself in his tail. The agglutinated hairs which cover the tail form a protective armor of horny plates and they look so little like a part of any living thing that the ant-eater is often able to pass himself off as the bark of a tree.

But although the general rule in the animal world is to hide, there are some members of it which do not seek to disguise themselves.

There are caterpillars, for instance, which are very disagreeable to the taste, and they realize that their protection lies in advertising this fact. So they adopt the most flaunting colors possible. An unwise bird just out of the nest may gobble up one of these highly-colored creatures, but the taste is so bad that the next time he sees a caterpillar he will recognize the flamboyant colors and, remembering the bad taste, will keep away.

TIPS ON TROUT FISHING

Instinct Helps, But Equipment is Important

In rapid, troubled water trout lose much of their caution, and also on dark and windy days, or in jungles, writes a veteran angler. It is averted by many anglers, and I believe with truth, that the trout in a stream that is being constantly whipped grow wise and sophisticated in flies and are harder to deceive than the trout in a new stream. At times trout will hang out in unlikely shallows and byplaces along a stream, and the wise angler will secure great rewards by assiduously cultivating these nooks and corners.

I have seen a few anglers who seemed to possess an almost unerring judgment as to where to look for trout. When I have taken such a one to a stream that was new to him I have often found him en rapport with the best habitats of trout. I call this angling instinct.

And further upon flies: I prefer to have them mounted upon No. 10 hooks, but do always carry with me a goodly number of flies mounted on No. 8 hooks, and a few on No. 12 hooks, in order to satisfy whatever demand may arise. A hook smaller than No. 10 is not so efficient in securing trout as the larger hooks.

GREATEST BALL PLAYER

Five Wizards of Attack Are Discussed—Name Them!

Ever and anon comes the question: Who was the greatest offensive player the diamond game has produced? Was it the fiery, whirlwind Cobb, the wonderfully scientific Keeler, the slugging Lajoie, the amazing Wagner or that first real star—Anson?

The figures show many things. They establish the fact that Keeler, playing with Baltimore in 1897, compiled a batting average of .432—a mark beyond that of any of his four rivals. They show also that Keeler, in 18 years as a big leaguer, assembled a grand clubbing record second only to Cobb's ten year mark.

Wonderful as Lajoie, Anson and Keeler were, they did not win many batting championships. Anson led only four times in 22 years, Keeler twice in eighteen and Lajoie only four times over a 20-year sweep. Cobb and Wagner are tied as concerns pilfering. Each has led in stealing on four occasions. Wagner led his league in batting eight times. Cobb, in ten years as a big leaguer, has been the real leader on eight occasions. In 1908 "Dode" Criss, of the Browns, outbatted Cobb 17 points playing in 64 games, but Cobb has been voted the championship for that year.

Are The Four Fruits Used in Making "Fruit-a-tives

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" is the only medicine in the world that is made from the juices of fresh ripe fruits. Thus, it is manifestly unfair to say, "I won't take Fruit-a-tives because I have tried other remedies and they did me no good". On the other hand, the fact that "Fruit-a-tives" is entirely different from any other preparation in the world, is just why you should give it a fair trial, in any trouble of the Stomach, Liver, Bowels, Kidneys or Skin. SOME HOG LORE

A wet pen will make a lame hog.

The boar counts for half, and a big half.

Fatten the rattle-headed sow that lies on her pigs. Try another.

Small pigs grow rapidly in a cold rain: that is, rapidly smaller.

The cheapest kind of experience is other people's experience.

It sounds contradiction, but it is good advice to fatten the hogs lean.

Quickly grown hogs are by any odds the most profitable.

Be merciful even toward the pig about to be killed.

The hog is a machine for converting golden grain into golden coin.

Beware of the scrub pure-bred pig. Blood without quality is worse than quality without blood.

The best breed is the one that will rear most pigs and make the most and best bacon on the cheapest food.

When pigs are low in price it is the time to increase the number of breeders.

There is nothing more convincing than success, but even success can be improved upon.

Study the difference between a growing ration and a fattening ration in hogs.

Pigs consume two pounds of water with every pound of grain, if they can get the water.

Put the hogs on the platform scales occasionally. You will learn something.

Avoid scours in pigs by keeping things clean about troughs and swill tubs.

Aim for a daily gain of one and a half pounds per pig. If you do not work for it you will probably not get it.

A larger increase of weight in pigs is obtained for the amount of food consumed in the early stages of fattening than in the later stages.

For a profitable sow, lay more stress on good bone, good constitution and big litters than on a number in the herd book.

Save the best sows for breeders. Do not breed young, immature sows. Do not kill good breeding stock too early. Keep a record of the performance of each sow.

Profit comes not in how little we can keep the pig on, but in how much we can get him to eat of a balanced ration. The younger the animal the more thoroughly it digests its food. Therefore, mature pigs early. The six months 200 pound pig costs one half the 200 pound 18 months pig.

FOREST FIRE SUICIDE

Settlers Started Fires Which Cost Their Children's Lives

Between 600,000 and 700,000 acres of forests were burned in the Northern Ontario bush fires of 1916, nearly 300 lives were lost, about $6,000,000 of timber destroyed and several million dollars worth of improved property was ruined, according to Mr. Clyde Leavitt, forester of the Commission of Conservation and chief fire inspector for the Railway Commission, who with Mr. Robson Black, secretary of the Canadian Forestry Association, made an inspection of the devastated country.

"Our visit to the burned area," said Mr. Leavitt, "only confirmed the opinions we had already formed of the disaster and also the need of some better system in Ontario of forest protection. The cause of the fire was settlers' clearing operations. Settlers were clearing the woods and made clearing fires. There was no restriction as to place and time as in other provinces and these fires were burning all over the country. It was during a prolonged hot spell, when everything was dry. Then came the wind which swept everything before it."

AGRICULTURE IS VITAL

Support to Other Great Industries—Cropping vs. Mining

Agriculture must not only be self-supporting, but, in large degree, agriculture must support our other great industries. Without agriculture, the coal and iron would be left in the earth, the forest would be left uncut, the railroads would be abandoned, the cities depopulated, and the wooded land and waterways would again be need only for hunting and fishing. Shall we not remember, for example, that the coal mine yields a single harvest—one crop—and is then forever abandoned; while the soil must yield a hundred—yes, a thousand crops, and even then it must be richer and more productive than at the beginning, if those who come after us are to continue to multiply and replenish the earth.

CANADA MUST ECONOMIZE

Depression Will Come With Peace—Economy Imperative

Economy is not being practised extensively in Canada. We are sharing the prosperity which war has brought to the American continent. Prosperity is infectious. It does not always conduce to thrift. Men frequently save more when money is tight and the outlook is uncertain than they do when money is plentiful and the future assured. To-day the position here is the existence of temporary good times, dependent largely upon war orders. Peace will bring a jolt. How serious it will be, none can tell. Nor can we say what favorable factors will relieve the depression which must come with the strain of economic re-adjustment. These facts make economy imperative. Yet even although their patriotism be undoubted, nevertheless many Canadians are aiding the enemy by thoughtlessly frittering away the profits and earnings due to a prosperity which may be suddenly arrested by the advent of peace. The trade returns continue to furnish evidence of the importation of many unnecessary articles and, to the extent that this is the case, our financial ability to resist the enemy is lessened. The words of Sir Charles Addis, in his address on "The Means of War Finance," apply to Canada as much as to the United Kingdom, when he says that people "do not understand that by the manner of their personal expenditure they may be determining whether the horrors of the conflict are to be prolonged or the blessings of peace anticipated. There does not appear to be as yet any general or adequate recognition of the special responsibility for the right use of war earnings attaching to those whose prosperity depends upon the continued sacrifice of life and limb by their fellow-countrymen in the field. It is surely a small thing to ask of those who are restrained from joining the fighting line by the disabilities of age, or infirmity, or sex to make some sacrifice for those who are fighting their battles for them. Sacrifice! let us call it what it is—a privilege, perhaps the only privilege left to us."

FARM DON'TS

Don't forget that flock of sheep. If given half a chance they will return more clear profit than any branch of farming you can engage in.

Don't forget to give the stock plenty of water. Water is as essential as feed.

Don't forget that a good cream separator is a valuable machine to have on any farm on which there are two or more cows.

Don't forget to shelter your machinery when you are done with it. Under a tree or in a fence corner is a very poor place to leave a machine. Rust and decay ruin a machine sooner than use.

Don't forget that a small gasoline engine will do small jobs more quickly and easily than you can do them.

Don't forget to use plenty of good oil on any machine you use. Oil reduces friction and friction means wear. A properly oiled machine will run longer and easier than a poorly oiled one. Oil is cheaper than new machinery or repairs.

Don't forget to see that your tires are properly inflated before you run your car. Too much pressure is likely to cause the tire to stretch or blow out, while too little pressure will cause rim cuts and the tire walls to crack.

Don't forget that an open well or cistern, or one with a poor top on it; or one close to a barn or cesspool, is a source of never-ending danger.

Don't forget that every weed which is allowed to go to seed means several weeds next year.

Don't forget the birds. If you will be a friend to them they will be both friend and helper to you.

FEED'S EFFECT ON MILK

This is a much discussed question and one on which many farmers do not have a clear understanding. It is thought by many that the amount and quality of the feed given to a cow will influence the quality as well as the quantity of the milk. Generally speaking the percentage of fat in a cow's milk is not influenced by the food consumed. A change from an unnutritive poorly balanced ration to one well balanced and highly nutritious would probably result in a slightly higher test for a short time only. The quantity of milk given can be and is influenced considerably by feeding, but the test will be about the same. Towards the end of the milking period the test will in all probability be a little higher than when a cow is in full flow. Breed and individuality are the determining factors in percentage of fat. A Holstein cow, for instance, with a test of three per cent. fat can not be made to give a five per cent. milk by any known method of feeding. Quality in milk production is an inherent characteristic born in the cow, which can only be improved by selective breeding. Judicious feeding and general good care increase the quantity and selective breeding, the use of a good sire and the weeding out of unprofitable cows, improves the quality.

SOUR VS. SWEET CREAM

Sour Cream Tests no Higher Than Sweet Cream

The impression among many cream producers appears to be that sour cream contains more butter fat and yields a higher test than sweet cream. For this reason some farmers purposely keep their cream until it sours, and often store it in a warm place to hasten the souring. This impression is entirely erroneous. The acidity or sweetness of cream has no effect on its fat content, nor on the resulting test. On the other hand, this practice of causing the cream to become extremely sour spoils its chances to make good butter and renders difficult the taking of a representative sample, and thereby lessens the reliability of the test, for the accuracy of the test depends above all things on the accuracy of the sample.

Brakes That Drag

Almost as bad as motor brakes which slip are brakes which drag all the time. The mere loss of power and pickup this occasions is not the most serious effect. The fact that as long as the brakes are dragging they are being made less efficient for the future is the most objectionable result. The dragging wears the friction surfaces so that it is impossible to adjust properly after a time.

SCOUT MEETING.

A meeting of the Boy Scouts was held on Monday evening in the vacant store owned by Mr. W. H. Casement, formerly the drill hall for C. Company of the 93rd Battalion. It was attended by a large and enthusiastic band of boys. Two patrols were formed. At the business meeting, and following the Scout ruling, it was decided to invite several of our leading citizens, the resident ministers and the fathers of the boys interested in the movement to the next meeting, to be held on Monday evening next at 7:30. Anyone else interested is cordially invited. It is expected that Mr. Hammond, provincial secretary of the Boy Scouts Association, will be present at the next meeting. As he is coming from Toronto especially for this occasion it is hoped that the meeting will be representative and enthusiastic. The scout master will probably be elected at this meeting.

THAT SKINNER BOY.

Sent to Cobbler's by His Mother and Told to Hurry.

A WOMAN STOPS THE LAD.

Offers Him Money to Take a Parrot and Gocart to Her New Home—Gets Into Trouble and Ends With a Licking.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

"HUMPY," said Mrs. Skinner the other Saturday morning to her firstborn, "I want you to take my shoes to the cobbler and have all the missing buttons put on. Tell him I want a good job of it. Here's 15 cents to pay with. Do you think you can possibly find your way here and back without getting lost?"

"Why don't you leave it till next week?" asked the boy.

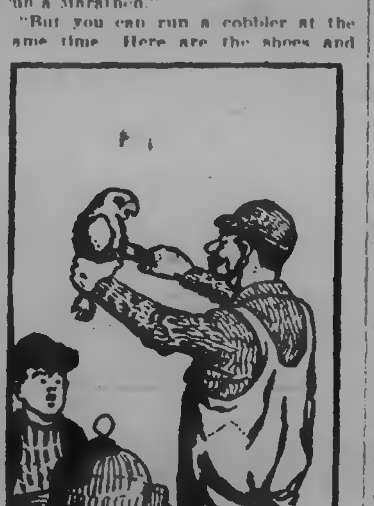
"Because I want the shoes this very afternoon. You take 'em and go right along."

"They have got a new giraffe up at the zoo."

"Well, he won't bite you if you keep away from him."

"And some of the boys are going to run a Marathon."

"But you can run a cobbler at the same time. Here are the shoes and money, and you get right along. Tell the cobbler you must have them within an hour."



"YOU'LL HAVE A BIRD WORTH EVERY CENT OF $25."

Humpy started out with a scuff to his feet and a weary look on his face, and he had walked a block in ten minutes when a bustling woman approached him and asked:

"Have you seen a red headed boy go along here?"

"No'm."

"That's just like you boys. He promised to be here on time, but he won't show up at all, and I do need some one so bad."

"What is it, ma'am?" asked Humpy.

"I'm moving today. I've got a gocart and a parrot that I don't want em to load on the van. I want a careful trusty boy to take them to 16 Green street and I'll give him 10 cents."

"I'm careful and trusty, ma'am, and I'll take 'em. You can't find a more trusty boy. Let me take these shoes to the cobbler, and"—

"You come on and bring the shoes with you. You can go to the cobbler afterward."

"My mother said"—

"Yes, but your mother don't know that I am moving and have got a thousand things to see to. If she did she'd tell you it was all right to come with me. I wish I had that red headed boy by the topknot!"

Humpy made no further objections, but trotted along with the woman for three blocks. The gocart and parrot were ready for him. A cloth was tied around the bird's cage, and as the woman placed it in the cart and tied it fast she said:

"Remember, 16 Green street. Wait for me there. It's just seven blocks from here."

"Yes'm."

"You'll meet lots of people on the way, and some of 'em will want to uncover Polly and look at her. Don't you permit it. Tell them you are in a hurry. Tell 'em she don't talk. Tell 'em it's a case of life and death. If any one should hurt Polly's feelings they would be hurting mine. If any one should separate us we'd both die within a month."

Humpy promised to watch out for that parrot as he would for a bag of gold, and all went well for the first block. Then a carpenter who was coming out of his shop halted the outfit to say:

"Look here, boy, I had a lot of tools stolen the other day."

"But I didn't steal 'em," was the reply.

An Honest Boy.

"I don't say you did, but I want to look at that package. If you're an honest boy you won't object."

"It's a parrot that I am taking to Green street for a woman. If she would get out of the cage"—

"Oh, I've seen parrots before. Yes, this is one. Hello, Polly."

"Don't excite her, please," cautioned Humpy.

"Don't talk to me as if I were a child," replied the carpenter. "You seem to be confused and in a hurry to get on. I don't find any of my missing tools here, but you are a suspicious acting boy. I shall keep an eye on you."

The bird had been disturbed, and she was mad about it. As the cart was pushed along she began chattering and jabbering, and the attention of every pedestrian was attracted. Humpy was giving them short answers and bustling along when a woman with a basket on her arm reached out and grabbed him and demanded:

"Young man, have you got my stolen dog in there?"

"It's no dog, but a parrot," was replied.

"I'll see about that for myself. You look like the boy who stole Flossie from the gate yesterday. Yes, it is a parrot, and a good thing for you that it is, though I have no doubt you stole her somewhere."

"Stole what?" asked a policeman who had lounged around the corner. "If there's been any stealing going on I'd like to know about it."

Humpy entered into explanations again, and the cloth was removed from the cage. As Polly began scolding away the officer stepped back and cocked his eye at her and mused:

"Is she a stolen bird or not? If she is, then my jooty is plain; if she isn't then the boy may have stolen the gocart; if he hasn't stolen the gocart, then how do we know that he didn't commit a burglary last week? You see, ma'am, we have got to look at many things in being an officer of the law?"

"You has that, and if there is any crime I has no doubt that you will find it," replied the woman as she deftly lifted up Mrs. Skinner's shoes and placed them in her basket and walked off.

Officer Detains Him.

The officer detained Humpy ten minutes longer to inquire the age of the gocart, who made the cage and whether the bird belonged to a fat or a lean woman. Then he told him he could go on, but warned him that he was surely walking in the path that led to the gallows. Humpy was within a block of 16 Green street and the bird had ceased her chattering when a house painter came along, with his brushes and paints, and halted to say:

"Well, well, but what have we here in the cage?"

"It's a parrot, sir," replied Humpy, "and I'm in a great hurry to get along."

"A parrot, eh, and in a great hurry, are you? Boy, this is a matter to be investigated. You may have a parrot here or it may be an eagle. I am not a man who takes the word of a boy unquestioned. Let us see. Ah, it really is a parrot, though I really expected to find an eagle. What is your price for the bird?"

"She isn't mine, sir. I'm only taking her to No. 16."

"I might give you a dollar for her."

"No, sir."

"Then you are a very avaricious boy. If you wanted to do me a good turn you could as well as not. I won't be as mean as you are, though. I'll make an eagle of her. Bring her out of the cage, and I'll do a bit of artistic work on her."

"But you mustn't—you mustn't!" shouted Humpy as he danced around.

"Easy, boy, easy. First a little blue on her for the groundwork, then a little yellow for the gold. Now we tie the wings with this bright red, and you have a bird worth every cent of $25."

The painter hadn't used his brushes without vigorous protests from both Poll and Humpy, and he was only finished when a whirlwind came along and knocked him over, and the gocart and cage followed suit. The whirlwind was the woman who owned the parrot. Humpy made sure of this and fled for home. That evening as he stood at the gate a boy friend of his came along and queried:

"Did yer mother lick ye fur it?"

"Yes, sunthin' awful."

"Did ye holler much?"

"As loud as I could."

"But she kept a-lickin'?"

"Yes."

"Glad of it. Good night."

HOW TO KEEP WELL

BY JOHN W. S. McCULLOUGH, M.D., D.P.H., CHIEF OFFICER OF THE PROVINCIAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

LESSONS IN EUGENICS.

IN 1815 William and Mary Dack and their young son, Samuel, came from Ireland and settled in western Pennsylvania. William was a peculiar, silly old fellow, who drank a good deal, stole sheep and other valuables. Mary his wife, and also his cousin, was ignorant, quarrelsome, and would become angry at her husband and leave him for days at a time.

This pair proved a bad investment for the United States, and particularly for Pennsylvania. Mrs. Annie Finlayson, investigating for the Warren State hospital, got track of 754 names of descendants or persons who married descendants. Taking out all persons dying at less than 20 years of age, all persons marrying into the family, and all who moved away and were entirely lost track of, Mrs. Finlayson had left 153 descendants of William and Mary, concerning whom she was able to secure fairly complete data.

Of the lot no one was a distinctly good citizen or a force for good in the community. Forty, although mostly of a low order of intelligence, are capable of controlling their emotions and have not been a burden on society.

In the second group are seventy-two individuals. The members of this group show various evidences of degeneracy, such as shiftlessness, illiteracy, lack of average judgment, sexual irregularity, heavy drinking, quick and violent tempers, and inability to control their emotions.

In the third group are forty-one individuals. Some of these have been in insane asylums, some in penitentiaries, some in jails, and some in poorhouses. Most of the insane have had some form of emotional insanity. They are quarrelsome, quick tempered, violent, and given to sulking. The disposition to leave their marital mates is very marked.

Twenty-five were insane, twenty are described as lazy and shiftless, thirty-nine are below the average of intelligence, and thirty-four are described as ugly and quarrelsome. Thirty were alcoholics, twenty-seven were notoriously sexually irregular, eighteen had a habit of leaving their husbands or wives as the case was.

Of the nine children of William and Mary, Jane and Curtis founded the two worst family trees. Jane married her cousin, a bad man. Curtis married a defective woman from defective stock. The traceable cost to the state for caring for worthless descendants of this pair is $28,354. The actual cost to society has been infinitely greater than that. There is no way of knowing the cost to the state or the value to the state of the members of the family who have moved far away, but the state of Pennsylvania laid up trouble for itself when it allowed William and Mary to move in and unrestrainedly to spawn out a worthless brood.

Two of the eugenic lessons Mrs. Finlayson draws from this family are: The marriage of cousins of defective stock produces a large proportion of defective offspring. Highly defective strains ought to be investigated and registered.

The foregoing is an example of what we should endeavor to avoid in Ontario. How are we profiting by lessons of this kind? Everyone knows of some feeble-minded, vicious, drunken father or mother, or perchance some unfortunate half-silly girl in a community, either of whom are propagating their kind and laying the foundation for such a record as that of the Dack family. There are many of the class referred to in this Province. They are steadily adding to our population of undesirable people. Our loose system of immigration helps in the same direction just as in the Dack case. A census of our insane asylums, institution for the feeble-minded, and jails show a large element of foreign population which should never have been received in Canada. A strict medical examination of all immigrants would prevent a lot of this and segregation of the undesirable classes we have so as to prevent marriage and the propagation of such species would tend to keep our people mentally strong and save the country a lot of money. Think about it! Is it not worth while?

No medical examination of immigrants at the port of entry or on shipboard, especially if the latter is carried on by the ship doctor, is of much value, because the first is too hurried, and for the reason that the second is made by the official of the steamship company, whose object is to land as many immigrants as possible. The only satisfactory medical examination of immigrants is one made by a thoroughly qualified medical examiner or medical board in the employ of the Federal Government before embarkation, and preferably at certain centres in the native country of the proposed immigrant. In this way only will this country be saved the unloading of defective and diseased people, which has been the curse of the United States. Let us profit by their mistakes.

NEW YORK MARRIAGE LAW NOW REGARDED AS JOKE

New Act Designed to Insist on Clean Bills of Health From Contracting Parties.

New York, July 19.—A new problem in medical jurisprudence to which lawyers and physicians alike of this State are just awakening is the recently enacted amendment to the marriage license laws by which the contracting parties must make affidavit to clean bills of health.

According to the law if either the man or woman applying for a license to wed admits that either has been the victim of a communicable disease and has been treated or inoculated for the same the clerk is compelled to withhold the license. The law says that neither can wed within five years after the date of the disappearance of the disease—and that is the clause which was generally overlooked.

One of the attaches of the Marriage License Bureau said last night that at first it caused considerable confusion and embarrassment in the bureau due to the failure of the arrival of the new forms of affidavits which carried this clause. At that time it was the duty of the clerks to inquire orally if either of the applicants ever had been affected.

Must Sign Affidavits.

But when the new affidavit forms arrived," this deputy went on to say, "our task was materially lightened. Now the questions stand out in bold print and when the applicants sign their names to the affidavit, after swearing to it, we take it for granted that they have read every question, and so issue the license. I might add that there hasn't been a single case since the law was enacted wherein a license was withheld."

Physicians take the ground that the law is not drastic enough and is a farce as it stands. Several of these said yesterday that if the eugenics principle is to be adhered to strictly it should be obligatory for applicants for marriage licenses to go to the bureau armed with health certificates from the family physicians. In this way, they said, the law would accomplish what it is intended to do, whereas in its present shape it makes many a man approach the atlar with a lie on his conscience.

A Joke, Lawyers Say.

Lawyers regard it more in the light of a joke. If the law was made as drastic as physicians would like, they say, it would naturally make good business for the doctor. They also contend that no man would admit having been the victim of a communicable disease, especially in the presence of his bride-elect. Therefore as it stands it does not accomplish the ends striven for.

Disciples of eugenics maintain that it is a step in the right direction, and while they regret that couples about to wed are not required to bring certificates of health with them to the marriage license bureau yet they believe this will come in time. The present amendment they look upon as an entering wedge and are sure that the next Legislature will go further and make the law as drastic and sweeping as they would like to see it. Then, they say, the world will be made safer, there will be less suffering and misery and in consequence a better and sturdier race will spring up.

WOMEN AS DELEGATES TO LOCAL TRADES COUNCIL

Union of Textile Workers Likely to Send Representatives to Take Part in Deliberations.

The women of Peterborough are certainly coming to the front, what with the franchise and other perquisites conferred upon them by legisaltive enactment. Over one hundred of the girls employed in local factories have joined the Textile Union. Now they are to elect delegates to the Trades and Labor Council and that body will genially welcome them to its deliberations, convinced that a new element of interest will be added to the debates.

At the regular meeting of the Trades Council last night communications were received from Capt. Burnham, M.P., and President Watters of the Dominion Trades Congress regarding the protest recently registered against the bringing of aliens to this city to take the places of those British subjects likely to be drafted for military service, the new comers not being subject to conscription. Both communications asked for further details and the matter was postponed until the next meeting. Capt. Burnham wrote that he had laid the case before Minister of Labor Crothers who told him that the Department was powerless to act if the terms of the immigration laws had been complied with.

Railways and Injunction.

A resolution of protest against further public aid to railways was unanimously adopted. Another resolution was aimed at Government by injunction, or the arbitrary interference of courts in disputes between capital and Labor, a step that was taken in response to a request from organized labor in Winnipeg.

The matter of electing a delegate to attend the next session of the Dominion Trades Congress which meets in Ottawa in September was deferred until the next meeting.

Delegates from the South end of the city complained that the Grand Trunk Railway still runs trains at a high rate of speed through that section and that any action the city council may have taken has availed nothing.

Renewed efforts will be made for a celebration, including a parade on Labor Day at Exhibition Park, and the Greater Peterborough Association will be asked to cooperate.

One delegate complained of the lack of up-to-date literature dealing with questions of current interest at the Public Library and proposed that Labor Unions establish a library of technical works in a central point. He also suggested that an educational campaign be inaugurated to explain to the working people what is meant by the conscription of wealth, what constitutes a free country and the like. This matter will be considered further.

TOMB OF MANY KINGS.

Bones of Sixty Monarchs Lie in Isle of Iona.

On the little misty, storm swept island of Iona in the Hebrides to the west of Scotland, lie the ruins of the monastery whence came the men who Christianized the British Isles. The island has changed but little from what it must have been in those remote times. The same dense fogs still veil it, rising from the warm gulf stream; the same westerly gales howl over it, and in the little sheltered grassy hollows the simple people live and till the soil as they did in the days of St. Columba, who founded the monastery. Their implements may be more modern, but they are the same silent, kindly Celts.

Iona is the most fertile and beautiful of the Hebrides, of which there are some 500 scattered about the waters to the west of Scotland. Only about 100 of these islands are inhabited at all, and the greater part of these latter support less than a dozen people each. It is a region of rain and mist, with rare clear days that are like the infrequent laugh of a sad but kindly nature-god. The atmosphere of the archipelago is made for dreams and silence. It seems out of the modern world.

Iona has been a sacred spot time out of mind. Long before the earliest missionary came to Britain, it was a place consecrated to the early Druidic ceremonies. After St. Columba founded his colony, the ground was held so holy that kings bade their subjects bury them there. The bones of sixty monarchs, Irish, English, and Norse, lie under the sod of Iona to-day. One spit, known as the Tomb of the Kings, is still marked by a row of monuments, fenced in by an incongruous modern iron railing. It lies in a bare plain, whose surface is dotted with other stones and monuments, half covered with grass, leaning sadly awry. It is a long time since those stones were raised.

In spite of a gloomy climate, Iona is beautiful. The soil is so fertile that for centuries its fertility was regarded as miraculous, due to the atmosphere of holiness rather than the soil. Behind its sea cliffs, the swale rises and falls in dimpled green hollows, and the beaches are white with shell and sand. The sixty kings have chosen a fair resting place.

Noted in History.

Kopenick is a manufacturing centre near Berlin where a disastrous fire is reported to have destroyed one of the principal airplane factories of Germany recently. The town of Kopenick, situated ten miles southeast of the German capital, is built on an island formed by the confluence of the rivers Dahme and Spree. Its 30,000 inhabitants are largely engaged in industrial pursuits, the chief articles of manufacture being inks, glass, linoleum, dyes, and sawmill machinery. The city's airplane factory, which was destroyed by fire a few days ago, was a recent addition to the manufacturing activities of the community.

The history of Kopenick goes back to the Middle Ages. It is said to have been the residence of the Slavic prince Jaczo in the twelfth century, and 100 years later came into the possession of the margrave of Brandenburg.

Kopenick has been the scene of two unique events—one tragic and the other highly farcical, but both having a military setting. The first was the trial of Frederick the Great, then crown prince, in 1730, and the other the laughable escapade of "the captain of Kopenick."

It was in the royal palace of the electors of Brandenburg that the unhappy Frederick was court-martialed by order of his father, King Frederick William I. His offense was his attempt to escape from the malevolent persecution of the king.

Lieut. Katte, one of the two Prussian officers who had tried to assist the prince in reaching the English court, was condemned to two years' imprisonment, but the irate father, in order to set an example to his son, had the sentence changed to the death penalty, and the unhappy officer was beheaded before the window of the 18-year-old royal youth. After this tragic spectacle the boy's spirit was broken for a time, whereupon his own death sentence was commuted to a period of nominal imprisonment for more than a year.

The "captain of Kopenick" episode is in pleasing contrast to the forégoing grim incident. Eleven years ago a daring young shoemaker, Voight, secured the uniform of a Prussian captain, put it on, went to the barracks and commanded a company of soldiers to follow him to the office of the mayor, declaring that he (Voight) had been ordered to arrest the magistrate for malfeasance in office.

The funds of the city were seized by the sham army officer, who quickly escaped with his booty. He was caught, however, and paid for his practical joke on the Prussian army with a long term of imprisonment.

Trade Secrets.

For many years in Hong Kong the industry of vermilion making, entirely in the hands of the Chinese, has been an important one. The factories at Hong Kong have inviolate trade secrets. The manufacture of this pigment is among the foremost of the colony's industries. There are something like one hundred small plants for the manufacture of vermilion in Hong Kong and Kowloon. The raw material comes from Australia, and the vermilion is prepared altogether by what is known as the wet method. The Chinese made artificial cinnabar long before Europe was a civilized country, and to this day there are trade secrets in the vermilion industry.

Peat in Europe.

Professor A. H. Gibson, of St. Andrews University, Dundee, in his book, "Natural Sources of Energy," estimates the peat in Europe as equal to about 100,000 million tons of coal.

HOT AFTER HIM LUBIN WAS HERE ON SUNDAY EVE

BUT LEFT ON THE MIDNIGHT C.P.R. EXPRESS FOR POINTS EAST.

Chief of Police Short of Lindsay is hot on the trail of the man Lubin who mulcted several Lindsay people by bogus checks and unpaid board bills. Descriptions of the man have been sent to all the police departments. Lubin's movements in the interval have been pretty well accounted for and the news of his arrest may be expected any moment.

Lubin took the 8.15 G.T.R. train out of Lindsay on Saturday evening, and went as far as Peterborough. He put up at the Munro House and spent Sunday in the city. A Lindsay man, who was registered at the hotel Sunday, states that Lubin went to his room about 11 o'clock, but when the Lindsay man went to call him Monday morning it was found that his bed was not disturbed. He had taken the midnight C.P.R. train on Sunday for the East, and it is believed to have headed for Montreal.

Some of those from whom Lubin borrowed money totalled up the loans on Tuesday and it was shown that he had secured over $200 by this means. One man was "touched" for $35.00, and another for $27.00. Lubin was an entire stranger to the Quebeckers in town and was not known in the citadel city.

LICENSE BOARD GETS QUEER REQUEST

A letter was received by the Ontario License Board asking what was the best way for the writer to get a couple of barrels of whiskey to his home for private use. The board are still pondering what answer they shall give.

The investigation made by the board regarding the shipments by express companies showed that many 5-gallon and 10-gallon lots were being shipped in. Where there seemed to be too great a number there were investigations and some prosecutions made.

EVERYBODY MUST WORK.

New Law Becomes Effective in West Virginia.

Charleston, W. Va., July 19.—Everybody is working in West Virginia. Each consumer is a producer as well—or a law violator.

Under a State law now effective every able bodied man in this State between the ages of 16 and 60 must work thirty-six hours a week in some recognized occupation, profession or employment and contribute to the support of himself and his dependents, or he is liable to a fine of $100 and hard labor on the streets for sixty days.

Rich and poor alike are affected. Clipping coupons isn't listed among the legitimate occupations. The law was passed at the suggestion of the State of the national council as a war measure.

DELIGHTFULLY COOL ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Port McNicoll, a short, pleasant journey via the Canadian Pacific Ry., is the Gateway to the Great Lakes. Steamship Express leaves Toronto 2 p.m. each Wednesday and Saturday, making direct connection at Port McNicoll with either steamship Keewatin or Assiniboia for Sault Ste. Marie, Port Arthur or Fort William. Particulars from C. P. R. ticket agents or W. B. Howard, D. P. A., Toronto.

PRIVATES AND OFFICERS NOW TREATED ALIKE

London, July 19.—The new order abolishing private parcels to officer prisoners in Germany, placing them on the same footing as privates, permits, however, in addition to regulation parcels sent by the Red Cross, two luxury parcels to each officer each month, which must be sent through an authorized agency, and for which special permits are required.

Some 1,700 acknowledgments of parcels were received yesterday from Canadian prisoners.

Chose Delegates to Food Convention

Mesdames Morris, Stevenson and Neal to Represent This City.

A sub-committee of the local branch of the organization of Resources Committee, composed of G. A. Gillespie, M.L.A., F. D. Kerr, Joseph Wearing, R. B. Rogers, R. R. Hall and W. H. Dunsford, yesterday appointed Mrs. W. R. Morris, Mrs. A. Stevenson and Mrs. (Dr.) Neal to attend the provincial convention of Food Conservation at Toronto next week, at which women from every part of the province will attend.

On their return the delegates will organize for food conservation throughout the city and country in order that full preparation may be made for the coming winter.

If a man is a coward he is scorned and abused, if a woman is a coward she is petted and encouraged.

LOTS OF COAL IN TORONTO YARDS

NEARLY SIX HUNDRED CARS ON SIDINGS AT MIMICO.

Toronto, July 19.—The local railway officials both G.T.R. and C.P.R. complain that loaded cars of coal arriving in the Toronto terminals are not unloaded as fast as they should be by local dealers. The Grand Trunk figures showed for Monday in the Mimico yards 569 cars, with orders to place out of this number 176. On Tuesday they had 505 cars in the Mimico yards and had orders to place 160.

"We have," said a local official, "cars from as far back as May 28th for which we have received no orders. There are many in yards from the month of June, and some since the beginning of July. In addition to this there are 12 or 15 cars on the track unloaded."

The local dealers have been written to, advising them of the number of cars billed to them and how long they have been waiting to have them unloaded.

The officials hope by this to have the cars released as soon as possible, so that they might be despatched to frontier to be reloaded.

QUITE RIGHT, BROTHER, WATCH YOUR STEPS

There are two sides to the automobile accident question. The primary duty, according to law, is that the driver shall watch where he is going, but common sense tells us that the pedestrian should also watch where he goes and not dart out suddenly and unexpectedly on the roadway between crossings or do similar things. Children particularly need to be instructed in this phase of the "safety first" idea.

ESCAPED FROM GERMANY.

Experiences of a Youth Who Would Be Free.

How a Canadian prisoner of war made attempt after attempt till he finally reached Holland and freedom is told in the letter of Peter Nelson to a friend in Vancouver. He says, writing January 20th, 1917: You must think me a very ungrateful sort of a fellow for not writing so long, but I really almost went mad with the excitement of having my liberty after the long confinement and harsh treatment of German Straf Camps. To a great extent it was you who helped me to escape, as your food parcels greatly helped to give me the strength, determination, and energy required for sustenance.

I had escaped twice before this last summer, namely the 29th of April, caught by mounted police, sentence 21 days bread and water, dark cells. Again on the 15th of July, away two days, caught by game wardens, transferred with other escapes and fellows who had refused to work, all sent to a punishment camp. On the train I studied the map the whole way and found out the new camp was only 28 kilometres (24 miles) from Holland boundary. Life in this last camp was unbearable. There were extra disciplinary measures taken with us, and we were compelled to dig drainage canals in water up to the knees out in the big swamps, and believe me, it was no place for a minister's son. I wasn't long here until I paid another visit to the dark cells. We were starved all the time, but for you good people of Canada and England sending us parcels, we would all have gone under.

Well, I made up my mind to beat it and make another bid for liberty (and ham and eggs) at first opportunity. We were packed like sardines in miserable huts, and these huts were inside a twelve-foot barbed wire fence, with four carbide search lights playing on each side, and always four sentries on duty. My chance came on the evening of the 12th of November. The lights would not burn properly and the sentries were trying to fix them, so on the spur of the moment I climbed over the wire as quick as a wild cat. The sentries, however, had heard the noise and opened fire in the semi-darkness. I fled for my life into the pine woods, only 50 yards off. Darkness now came on quickly and I got into the big swamps before the camp bloodhounds could get on my trail. A strong wind was blowing from the west and helped me to navigate. I also had in my possession a homemade compass. Late in the evening a large body of soldiers passed me and I had to lay down flat in a turnip field.

In the morning, before daybreak, I spotted a soldier guarding a bridge, so had to make a swim for it. I crossed the boundary in a trice, swimming in water to the waist. Finally, as day broke, and I saw young men going to their work, I knew it was Holland, and marched still further west on the main highway. I was, of course, very rough-looking. My Canadian Red Cross uniform being covered with mud and running with water, the police came along and arrested me as a suspicious character. I was taken before two Holland Dutch Army officers, one of them spoke English, and asked me from which camp I had escaped, and complimented me on my smart escape. He then took me to breakfast (ham and eggs at last), and later on furnished me with transportation to Rotterdam, where I got a royal reception in the British Consulate. Here I received brand new civilian clothes, hot bath, hotel to stop in, and also whatever money I wanted. I was here for three days awaiting our Government boat.

They must be hard up for sailors in Holland, for walking along the waterfront I was continually asked to sign on ships to different parts of the world. I met a lot of our interned sailors and we had a jolly good time. The steamer to England was a fast one, as we had to dodge that nest of German submarines off the Hook of Holland. In ten hours we were in dear old England. I am not sentimental, but I almost kneeled down and kissed the ground. I was in London for eleven days making my report to the Government, and was complimented by some of the biggest generals. I have now got a staff job, but this life is too quiet and as I mustn't go to France any more, I am considering to join the navy. I have signed on for the duration of the war, and may as well see the finish.

Premier Used a Knife.

An interesting story has been sent in a letter just received from Capt. Fred Smith, formerly physical director of Toronto Y. M. C. A., in which he enclosed a letter from one of the Y.M.C.A. secretaries describing a visit paid by Sir Robert Borden to a Bramshott hut. The Premier was inspecting some troops of the 6th Brigade and while the review was on "one of the staff officers came over and asked us if we could serve some of the party with tea if they should come in. We said 'right away,' and so they filed in and we thought the line would never end. There were twenty or more—Sir Robert Borden, General Turner, General Meighan, Lord Beaverbrook, Colonel De Salls, Colonel Rattray, and other Staff Officers. By-and-by, we had just bad the mess rooms newly papered, washed, and new curtains put up a few days before. We were a little short of teaspoons, however, so at the suggestion of General Turner, Sir Robert stirred his tea with his knife."

Widows for Canada.

Thousands of British war widows and their children are to be transported to Canada, with the expectation that many of the women will be married to Canadian farmers. The movement is to be carried out according to the plans of Commissioner David Lamb, of the International Emigration Society of the Salvation Army.

So Happily Married.

"You know, George, this is my birthday," said the wife.

"Oh, is it, dear?"

"Yes, and, do you know, I never can remember how old I am."

"Well, dear, when we were married you know you were just twenty-eight."

"Oh, yes, so I was, George. That's near enough."

"Precisely, dear. It doesn't really seem any time at all since we were married."—Yonkers Statesman.

A Compromise.

"Well, Geraldine," said the theatrical manager, "what do you want now?"

"Now is right!" answered the actress. "I want a raise, and now is when!"

"Aw, now look here, Jerry," soothed the boss, "I'm willing to meet you half way. How'd it be if I'd raise you another hundred a week in the press stories and only reduce your real pay $2.50 instead of $5?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Asking Too Much.

Vicar—You know, Thomas, you set the younger men of the parish a bad example by going into public houses on Sunday. Why don't you take your gallon of beer home on Saturday nights?

Thomas—Ay, sir. A couldna gang t' sleep wi' a gallon o' beer in the house. —London Tatler.

Icebergs.

The icebergs of the two hemispheres are entirely different in shape. The Arctic bergs are irregular in form, with lofty pinnacles and glittering domes, while the Antarctic ones are flat-topped and solid-looking.

WHY
Does
Your Head Ache?

Headaches, sick or other kinds, don't happen to people whose livers are busy and whose bowels are as regular as a clock.

Thousands of folks who used to have headaches say this is the way they removed the cause:

One pill at bedtime, regularly. Largerdose if there's a suspicion of biliousness or constipation.

GREAT OLD TOWN.

Johnny Evers, who was threatened with a nervous breakdown, has gone to Philadelphia to take the rest cure.

Philadelphia is such a sleepy town that the St. Louis Browns caught the Athletics napping and pushed them out of last place.

It may be, though, that Fielder Jones has just taken his team back to get a fresh start. The boys have got away on the wrong foot last spring.

Form is everything in sport. If a ball team gets away on the wrong foot every other team in the league hands it a beating.

MORE WET STUFF.

A headline in a St. Louis paper says Ray Caldwell is in hot water again. Just so he isn't in liquor, it's all right.

Sam McVey went down to our big ditch in Panama and knocked out Jeff Clark with a rain of blows.

Of course, it isn't sport for the Kaiser, but it looks as if the reign of that gentleman might be about over. When it is, the situation in Europe will clear up some.

OR IN PHILADELPHIA.

Frank Baker is reported to have left the Yankees to play semi-pro ball when he could have played it when the Yankees were in St. Louis or the Browns in New York.

Ban Johnson took a trip to St. Louis over Sunday to find out what is the matter with the Browns. If he can figure it out he is worth that $25,000 a year the American League pays him.

Miss Margaret Hughes, aged 17, niece of Lieut. Hughes, Kingston, was run over by an automobile and seriously hurt.

The workman who turns out a poor job is an improvement on the one who does nothing but stand around and make remarks.

Charles Stephenson, twelve years old, of Ingersoll, was instantly killed when he was hit by a train while carrying his father's dinner.

On June 30, 1916, there were 566 convicts confined in the Kingston penitentiary, while on the same day this year there were only 422, a decrease of 144

THE SUMMER SONG

The rose is red,
The violet's blue—
At least 'tis said,
'N' I hope it's true.
I haven't seen
The flowers bloom,
The fields of green;
I sit and fume
In summer heat,
I'd like to look
At flowers sweet
At babbling brook;
But if I stop,
I know you'd miss
My verse, Old Top,
So here—take this!

Do you hear that chirping? It's the Robins, and the noise they produce comes from the delight they are experiencing at climbing higher in the National League ladder. You can't blame them for chirping.

A good player is not necessarily a good manager; but you've got to hand it to Christy Mathewson. He has certainly worked wonders with the Cincinnati Reds.

The palm and the crown for wielding the willow effectively in the American Association is herewith handed to Jack Lelivett. Jack is getting better with every swat.

Scrapping is also taking hold of the players in the American Association, which is a sad thing to contemplate. One would have thought it bad enough for the players in the larger leagues to give such unseemly exhibitions. The recent fist fight between Joe Tincker and Fred Mollwitz at Kansas City seems to prove that the "war" spirit has taken hold of the entire field of baseball.

Major league scouts are keeping a watchful eye on Ira Flagstead, of Tacoma, who is the batting sensation of the Northwestern League. There is room in a number of major league clubs for a man like this western wonder, whose stick-work is considered phenomenal.

George Stallings seems to "have it in" for the umpires this season. Every time his braves get licked—which is often—he blames it on these poor, unfortunate referees. However, he can't fool the fans with that stuff.

Grouchy Gus says: "Job may have been a very patient man; but he might not have had such a wide reputation if he had been a baseball umpire."

It seems that Tragresser has taken a leaf out of the book of his boss, George Stallings, and is baiting the umpires every chance he gets. The general opinion of Tragresser as a ball player is not very high, and the sooner he cuts his umpire-jawing the less of a nuisance he will be considered.

"Matty" Pitches His First League Game

Seventeen years ago Tuesday the great Christy Mathewson made his first appearance in the National League. In the spring of 1900 Matty was playing with the Cincinnati Club, but never got into the game. He was traded to the Giants by John T. Brush for Amos Rusie. Matty's first appearance was in Brooklyn when he went to the relief of Ed Doheny in the fifth inning, with the score tied, none out and two on bases. Brooklyn won the game by a score of 13 to 7. Mathewson played with the Giants steadily for sixteen years, leaving in the middle of last season to become manager of the Cincinnati Reds, in place of Charlie Herzog, for whom he was exchanged. There is probably no player who enjoyed, and still enjoys, the regard of fandom and players as much as does Matty. Certainly, no player has a cleaner record than his.

PUGILISTIC ANNALS

1849.—One of the longest battles in ring history was fought between Mike Maddon and Bill Haynes at Edenbridge, England. The bout went 185 rounds, or six hours and three minutes of actual fighting. The only fight longer than this was fought between James Kelly and Jonathan Smith, at Melbourne, lasting six hours and fifteen minutes.

1907.—Bob Fitzsimmons attempted to "come back" and met Jack Johnson at Philadelphia. Fitz was at the mercy of his opponent during the two rounds the affair lasted.

MARKET BASKETS.

Wartime Measures About Deliveries of Groceries.

If you see anybody generous with food wrappings and string these days you may be sure it is not the owner of a food business. Many employees, feeling no responsibility, continue to be as lavish as of old with bag and twine, but a small dealer almost wept when a customer offered to take home a grapefruit in her basket without a wrapping. "What! You would save me a cent!" he exclaimed.

Some grocers will ask you if they shall deliver your purchases, which may number half a dozen or more, but they will not let you have a big bag to take them home in. You ask, "The big bag costs less than delivery, does it not?" "Yes, but we have to pay for the delivery anyway." Not willing to drop the subject, you say, "You ought to charge everybody 5 cents for each delivery." The grocer replies: "But that would not pay for what it costs us. Our wagons cost us $150 a month."

Of course the grocer adds this cost to our foods, and he allows a safe margin. Those who are willing to carry goods home pay equally with those who do not. Customers could work a change in one week if they all chose the market basket way.

The "cash and carry" stores have lately displayed conspicuously a basket with a price mark, 5 cents. Stout and handsome baskets, which will last years, may be bought for less than $1. How much more sensible it is to use these than to buy paper at present prices, which is used but once! We cannot expect market development to be so one sided a thing as most of us have allowed it to be to the great expense of our pocketbooks. We have gone to silly lengths in the free delivery system.

Don'ts For Mothers.

A writer in a recent issue of Mother's Magazine gives some very pertinent advice to mothers in regard to their attitude with their children. She says in part: "Don't think that the moment you are alone with your boy or girl you must find fault or endeavor to improve the occasion by a little moralizing, no matter in how loving a spirit. This is a hard don't, for no one is so anxious to help a child toward perfection as is the parent, yet it surely leads to an avoidance of the moments alone together, which should be times of happy confidences.

"Neither should a parent correct the child before others. Never mind if a well meaning relative does say, 'My dear, I am surprised that you do not show more force of character; your children are suffering from a lack of discipline.' Pass the matter over till you and the small offender can have it out alone. If the circumstances are such that it cannot be passed over take him out of the room."

The Original Song of Hatred

SONGS of hatred are not new inventions in Germany. Another "Song of Hate" was translated by Thackeray in reviewing the second edition (1842) of Georg Herwegh's volume of revolutionary verse which first saw the light in Switzerland the year before. Thither young Herwegh had fled from the military service of his king, following a scrape with his superior officers. He was a Southern German, born of fairly well-to-do parents in Stuttgart, the chief city of Wurtemberg, and seems to have imbibed anti-monarchical ideas in his early years, for his whole volume of verse, printed when he was twenty-four, and which made a sensation through all Germany in its day, shines with the democratic spirit and holds rooted antipathy to the kingly brood. In his "Lied vom Hasse" this is effectually summed up. Thackeray himself felt that in his English version of the "rude, hearty song" its spirit had "evaporated." He says:

"'Wir haben lang genug geliebt
Und wollen endlich hassen,' are gallant, fierce lines of obloquy, and the hissing of the word 'hassen,' as well as the rattle and spirit of the double rhyme, are not to be had in English, where the versifier has but a poor stock of disyllabic rhymes."

This, of course, is not true, though true enough, no doubt, of Thackeray, particularly the Thackeray of 1842. It was certainly not at all true to one poet and seer under whose mystical gaze the fiery young German's new volume came in the library of Trinity College, Dublin. Perched on a step-ladder he probably was as he read it, his wild, blond hair dishevelled, his long, fine fingers beating time to the rhythm and a weird ecstasy in his starry blue eyes. This was James Clarence Mangen, who wrote poetry for his bread, gaining little to butter it withal, after the immemorial fashion of poets. His translation has all the rough vigor of the original. It hesitates not over disyllabic rhyming, but booms along with it in a sweep of lurid song.

Lissauer's modern imitation of Herwegh's war note of hatred is directed against England, which nation it curses uphill, down dale, and round the corner with a volubility of stinging epithet to cause envy in the most conceited breasts in Berlin, and has received wide attention through fairly good translations here. Should not our people see what use one South German could make of hatred in his day, and know something of the swing of his deadly song? Herwegh was not licking the dust at the feet of a Kaiser and abusing the Kaiser's enemy meanwhile, but wrote hating all kings, kaisers, nobles, and titled satraps and spurring the oppressed and exploited peoples to cast them down.

And the question to-day is, Has the spirit of the forties of the last century no stirring in the German heart to-day? The god of supreme selfishness, of all-grasping greed, of preposterous egomania whose worship was taught by Nietzsche — the luminous madman—and turned to account by the Kaiser, his junkers, his aristocratic satellites, for their ambitions, has led his devotees over a path of slaughter to the edge of the abyss. Will the whole German race go over the edge and into the depth of cataclysmic disaster in the Kaiser's track? I think not. The silent drums are beating, and presently will be given sound, and Germany will awake. Hunger is abroad; sacrifice of the people has reached a fearful limit. The fact that all is in vain toward realising the blood-red visions of the War Lord; that the suffering people are fed on headquarter's lies, on palace lies; that deaths and losses are laughed away by military monsters, is telling on the German spirit.

It is in this vein that all should read in 1917 the sonorous lines of Herwegh as Englished in the thrilling verse of James Clarence Mangan three-quarters of a century ago:

THE SONG OF HATRED.

Yes! Freedom's war! — though the deadly strife
Make earth one charnel bone-yard!
The last kiss now to the child and wife,
And the first firm grasp of the poniard!
Blood soon shall run in rivers above
The bright flowers we to-day tread.
We have all had more than enough of love,
So now for a spell of Hatred!
We have all had more than enough of love,
So now for a spell of Hatred!

How long shall the hideous ogre, Power,
Rear column of skulls on column?
Oh, Justice, hasten thy judgment hour,
And open thy doomsday volume!
No more oiled speech!—it is time the drove
Of despots should hear their fate read—
We have all had quite enough of love—
Be our watchword henceforth Hatred!
We have all had quite enough of love—
Be our watchword henceforth Hatred!

Cold steel! To that it must come at length—
Nor quake to hear it spoken!
By the blows alone we strike in our strength
Can the chains of the world be broken!
Up, then! No more in city or grove
Let Slavery and Dismay tread!
We have all had more than enough of love,
Let us now fall back upon Hatred!
We have all had more than enough of love,
Let us now fall back upon Hatred!

My friends, the tremendous time's at hand
Will show itself truly in earnest.
Do you the like, and take your stand
Where its aspect frowns the sternest!
Strive now as Tell and Korner strove!
Be your sharp swords early and late red!
You have all had more than enough of love—
Test now the talisman, Hatred!
You have all had more than enough of love,
Test now the talisman, Hatred!

Austro-Hungarian Empire Consists of Two Nations Under Teutonic Monarch

AUSTRIA and Hungary (or, as in international relations they are officially called, the Austro-Hungarian monarchy) are two States, the Austrian Empire and the Hungarian Kingdom. The relation between the two States in its present form was fully regulated by the so-called compromise of 1867. According to this agreement, the two States are perfectly independent of each other, possessing each its own constitution, its legislative power, and its executive departments for most branches of State affairs. But there is, of course, a close political connection between them through the identity of the sovereign.

The head of the monarchy is known as the Emperor of Austria and Apostolic King of Hungary—not the Austro-Hungarian Emperor, as he is sometimes improperly called. The crown is hereditary to males and (on failure of males) to females. The monarch must be a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

The affairs common to the two States are foreign affairs, military and naval affairs, and finance relating to these matters administered in common. Legislative power relating to the whole dual monarchy is exercised by the Parliaments of both States, which, for purpose of mutual agreement, are represented by delegates which form a sort of super-parliament, the members being chosen from the membership of the Austrian and Hungarian upper and lower houses. The delegations are summoned annually by the Emperor-King, alternately at Vienna, the capital of Austria, and at Budapest, the capital of Hungary.

The Austrian Parliament is called the Reichsrath. The upper house of the Reichsrath is called the Herrenhaus, or House of Lords. In it sit the nobles and distinguished citizens nominated by the Emperor and archbishops and bishops. The lower house is called the Abgeordnetenhause. The members are elected on the basis of universal, equal, and direct suffrage. The Hungarian houses are similarly constituted and are known as the House of Magnates (or Lords) and the House of Representatives.

OBITUARY

MRS. T. A. ALLUM.

Hephzibah H. Allum, widow of the late T. A. Allum, passed peacefully away on Wednesday morning at her residence, 484 Sherbrooke street, after an illness extending over five months.

Mrs. Allum was the daughter of the late Mr. Greenhowe, well known in charitable work in this city, and granddaughter of Mr. Thomas Cranfield, noted as the founder of Sunday and Evening Schools, London, Eng.

The late Mrs. Allum was born in London, within sound of Bow Bell's, and came to Canada with the family in 1852. She remained some time in Montreal and finally settled in Peterborough in 1862.

She was married in 1880 to Mr. Allum, who predeceased her about seven years ago. In her younger days Mrs. Allum was a successful music teacher and was principal of South Central public school of this city. She was a member of long standing in Trinity Methodist Church and deeply interested in Sunday School work. She was the beloved teacher of the Adult Woman's Bible Class and continued her ministrations thereto until a few months ago. For eighteen years she filled the office of treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Society wtih characteristic efficiency.

The domestic life of Mrs. Allum was most beautiful and praiseworthy and all the inmates of her home received a tender, thoughtful woman's care. All her near relatives have predeceased her. She leaves one adopted daughter, Annie Rigby, to mourn her loss.

The Rev. Dr. Wilson, of Trinity Church, will conduct the service on Friday at 2 o'clock, the funeral leaving the house at 2.30 for the Little Lake Cemetery.

NEW MOVE TO BE MADE BY HUNS

REPORTED NOW THEY WILL PROPOSE GENERAL DISARMAMENT.

Paris, July 19. — A despatch to The Temps from Geneva says the German government, according to reliable information, meditates the dramatic proposal to its enemies and to the world of a complete disarmament, except for sufficient forces to maintain compulsory peace by compulsory arbitration.

"The German government," says The Temps, "while allowing the solution of the internal crisis to appear as a success for the Pan-Germanists, has in view a manoeuvre of a quite different aspect. The bellicose declarations which resound and will perhaps continue in Berlin will be nothing but the prologue designed to represent Germany as invincible. Afterwards, perhaps sooner than is expected, will come the theatrical initiative in which Germany will show a disposition to disarm."

TWO PRIVATES KLILED.

Both Belonged to 109th Battalion At Lindsay.

Word was received yesterday that Pte. Wesley Hughes, of Burnt River, had been killed in action on June 27. Next of kin, Mrs. Elizabeth Hughes, Burnt River. The deceased enlisted in the 109th Bn.

PRIVATE HALL KILLED.

The sad intelligence was received yesterday that Pte. George Carleton Hall, of Cambray, had been killed in action on June 28th.

The deceased enlisted in the 109th Battalion at Lindsay and was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. J. Hall, who reside east of Cambray Village. Besides his parents he leaves to mourn his loss one brother and three sisters. Pte. Hall was a young man of splendid character and the news of his death will come as a shock to his many friends.

MILITARY MEDAL WON BY 39th BOY FOR BRAVERY

PTE. LOGUE, BELLEVILLE, HONORED—SERBIAN RECRUITS FROM U. S.

Pte. R. Logue, who left Belleville with the 39th Battalion in June, 1915, has been awarded the Military Medal. Pte. Logue's decoration has just been received by his aunt, Mrs. Robert Stewart, Belleville, from the Canadian Records Office at London. Pte. Logue won the medal when under shell fire during the battle of the Somme; he showed outstanding bravery in attending to wounded comrades. Pte. Logue has two brothers in uniform, one of them Gunner Fred Logue having gone to the front with a draft from "C" battery, R.C.H.A., and the other, Pte. Leo Logue being with the 235th Battalion in England.

SERBIAN RECRUITS

A number of Serban recruits from various parts of the United States passed through Kingston on Monday night on their way to the mobilization camp at Point Levis Que. The men were gathered principally from New York, Indanapolis, Pittsburg, Chicago, Akron and Cleveland, and were joined at Toronto by 30 men from Detroit. Several of them have already seen service at the front and bear marks of battle. It is expected that another 100 will pass here next week.

GRAND MASTER

Lodge to the home of the R. W. Bro. Col. W. N. Ponton, K.C., and Sir MacKenzie Bowell, the latter a former Premier of Canada, and now in his 94th year.

The Grand Master alluded to the great change of sentiment towards Great Britain in the United States in recent years, and said:

"If this is the beginning of the end of all bitterness, it is indeed a matter of peculiar fitness, for it was a German King with a small character and stupid ruling in England who started the row, and it is a German Emperor with the same characteristics, who, perhaps all unwittingly, is ending it. It is time that the memory of old grievances between the two nations should be buried, never to be resuscitated."

The next Grand Master in all probability will be W. H. Wardrope, K.C., of Hamilton. For the office of Deputy Grand Matser there will be a contest between F. W. Harcourt, K.C., Official Guardian, Toronto, and A. J. Young of Toronto and North Bay.

MEN MUST SPEAK TWO LANGUAGES

Ottawa July 19.—Some interesting points developed during consideration of the new railway act by the house yesterday. In the course of a discussion of clause 302 providing that timetables, bills of lading, station signs, etc., in the Province of Quebec, be printed in both French and English, H. Boulay of Rimouski moved that "all employes coming in contact with the public should understand both official languages of the country."

The proposed amendment raised a serious question, in the opinion of J. E. Armstrong, East Lambton, who was chairman of the special railway committee. He contended it would be hard to apply such a law to through trains running between Montreal and Toronto, or Montreal and Ottawa. The railway unions were opposed to it because it would discriminate against English-speaking members of the unions.

Hon. Frank Cochrane, minister of railways, consented to an amendment providing that on local trains in Quebec the trainmen should know both French and English.

NEW SENATOR

All Vacancies in Red Chamber To Be Filled

Ottawa, July 19.—A resolution offered by Senator Power in the Senate declarng "that the appointment of new Senators prior to the dissolution of Parliament would be an act of partisanship derogatory to the prestige, dignity and independence of the Senate, and would be a violation of the understanding arrived at between the two parties in regard to the cessation of party strife during the war,' was declared lost on division, after considerable debate. Sir James Lougheed said the Government would fill every vacancy at an early date.

UNION STILL POSSIBLE.

In Any Event Election Not Likely Before October.

Ottawa, July 19.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his followers have by their attitude made an election contest inevitable. When that election will come is difficult to predict, but it is generally believed the present session of Parliament is by no means near prorogation and that the polling will not likely take place before October. Whether the Government, which will appeal to the country, will be orgnaized on strictly party lines or a union of Conservatives and Liberals in favor of conscription is also still in doubt.

RUSS TROOPS MUTINY IN GALICIA

NO CONSCRIPTION OF MEN UNTIL AFTER ELECTION

Appeal to People not Likely before September 20---Much work still Ahead of Parliament---Taking Soldiers Vote a matter of Difficulty

Ottawa, July 20.—Wth parliament performing the last lites over the conscription bill, the question is: "How soon will the act be enforced? The answer is necessarily linked up with the fate of proposals for union government. One of the principal terms of Sir Robert Borden's offer of coalition to Sir Wilfrid Laurier was that conscription should not be enforced until the proposed union government had appealed to the country. While not speaking with official sanction or authority, it is understood that that condition remains one of the basic terms of the union offer still held out to pro-conscriptionist Liberals.

Liberals Ask For Delay

The majority of the union Liberals so far at all events as can be judged from their utterances in parliament, would prefer that the operation of the act be withheld pending an appeal to the country, and as the delay involved would not be much greater than would be necessary in any event, and as there are other obvious reasons why the measure might be left in abeyance until after the verdict of the country is recorded, it is not likely that the prime minister will take chances on losing the benefits which most observers believe would result from union government by a step which conceivably might render its consumation more difficult.

So everything considered the probabilities are that the Compulsory Service Act will not be put in operation until after the election.

Election in September

When will the election be? There are certain manifest facts which make it practically certain that it cannot be held until the latter part of September. In the first place, there is certain necessary legislation to be enacted before the house can be dissolved, and experience teaches that an opposition is not inclined to facilitate government measures on the threshold of an election. Sir George Foster has promised the house that an income tax will be introduced in the present parliament, and as an income tax is at best a subject of controversy its passage will take up considerable time.

The Soldier's Vote

Then there is the matter of preparation to take the soldiers' votes. The task will not be an easy one; and six weeks alone is regarded as only a conservative estimate of the time needed to prepare ballots and get them to and from the camps in England and the trenches in France and Flanders. These things and others considered, there is hardly any likelihood of the election date being fixed earlier than the 20th of September.

ECONOMY IS NOW THE WATCHWORD

OVER 1700 CIVIL SERVANTS TO LOSE JOBS AT OTTAWA.

Ottawa, July 20. — Fifteen per cent. of the Government service in Ottawa, or 1,750 in all, may lose their jobs. This is a result of the recommendation of the public service board, which has been confirmed formally by an order-in-council.

The Government recommends, "in view of the increasing financial demands upon the Government due to the war, and the consequent necessity of economizing our expenditure so far as is possible, consistently with maintaining the efficiency of the public service, that the ministers in charge of the several departments of the Government give immediate attention to the recommendations of the committee with a view to reducing their staffs to such extent as may in their judgment be practicable and expedient in the public interest."

LADY HENDRIE APPEALS TO THE WOMEN OF ONTARIO TO SAVE FOOD

Call for for the Food Convention to Open in Toronto July 23rd.

The Organization of Resources Committee of the Province of Ontario has asked for the co-operation of the woman power of the Province in dealing with the all-important matters of food conservation, thrift and economy.

The food problem is of the utmost seriousness. The situation has been stated by our Food Controller to be desperate, and in the United States Mr. Hoover recently has said that if it is not squarely faced, the whole world will go hungry, and that our civilization will have to meet the sternest menace with which it has yet been threatened.

To the end that Ontario women the situation, a convention has been called in Toronto, when women may do their full part in meeting men from all parts of the Province may be present to voice their determination, and to state the contribution they can make to the solution of the problem.

As chairman of the Committee of Arrangements I take this opportunity to call upon Ontario women to regard this conference as a call to national service.

The convention will be opened with a public meeting, to be held July the 23rd at 8 p.m. in Convocation Hall, University of Toronto. All are cordially invited to this meeting.

On the following day, July the 24th, a conference will be held in the Canadian Foresters Hall, Toronto. This conference will be attended by women delegates from all parts of the Province, whose duty will be to discuss practical problems, and to decide as to the formation of some organization for the purpose of dealing with them.

I wish most earnestly to impress upon all delegates the acuteness of the food crisis, and to urge that they shall make a very special effort to attend the convention.

GERMAN REICHSTAG DECLARES FOR PEACE BY VOTE OS 214 TO 116

Set Forth in General Terms Condition on Which Empire will Make Peace with Allies---New Chancellor Justifies Sub Warfare and Praises Work of Predecessor.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

In his address before the German Reichstag yesterday Chancellor Michaelis said Germany would not continue the war a day longer if she could obtain an honorable peace. "The Germans," he said, "wish to conclude peace as combatants who have successfully accomplished their purpose and proved themselves invincible first. We must, by means of understanding and in a spirit of give and take, guarantee the existence of the German Empire upon the continent and overseas."

He revives in these last words the idea of a readjustment of frontiers and possessions by bargaining rather than a restoration of things as they were before the war. Germany, he said, could not be starved, but admitted there was need of better cooperation between town and country in the distribution of food.

Copenhagen, July 20.—The German Reichstag yesterday adopted the majority peace resolution by a vote of 214 to 116, setting forth in general terms the conditions on which Germany will come to an understanding with her enemies.

Justifies Sub War

Dr. Michaels is the new Imperial German Chancellor, in his address to the Reichstag Thursday afternoon, declared his adhesion to Germany's submarine campaign, asserting it to be a lawful measure, justifiably adopted and adapted for shortening the war.

Dr. Michaels opened his Reichstag speech with a hearty tribute to Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the retiring Imperial Chancellor, whose work, he said, history would appreciate.

The Chancellor declared that the war was forced upon unwilling Germany by the Russian mobilization, and that the submarine war was also forced upon Germany by Great Britain's illegal blockade-starvation war.

The faint hope that America, at the head of the neutrals, would check Great Britain's illegality was vain, Germany's final attempt to avoid the extremity by a peace offer failed, and the submarine campaign was adopted, said the Chancellor.

The submarines, the speaker continued, had done all and more than had been expected, and the false prophets who had predicted the end of the war at a definite time had done a disservice to the Fatherland.

POTATO BLIGHT THREATENS CROP THROUGHOUT ONTARIO

Disease Noted First in This City Some Days Ago Appears to be General---Expert Issues Warning and Gives Remedy.

Some dags ago it was reported in The Review that a resident on Braidwood Avenue had noticed a blight in the potatoes growing in his garden and specimens of the affected leaves were left at this office. These were forwarded to the Agricultural College at Guelph after it was ascertained that District Representative McRae of Norwood was absent from the county.

It seems the blight is general throughout the province. Mr. J. B. Dandeno, Inspector of Agricultural Classes at the O.O.C. has issued the following warning, which all local gardeners would do well to heed:

"Ontario should produce 28 million bushels of potatoes this year. It may not produce 12 millions if the blight is not vigorously attacked."

Calls for Prompt Action.

"Late blight of potatoes, or rot as it is more commonly called, has already appeared in Ontario. So far as I know, it has not in twenty years appeared so early in the season. In view of the fact that so many schools, in school and home gardens, have undertaken the growing of potatoes for the first time, and also because of the large amount of small plots in cities, towns and villages, managed by people without experience in growing potatoes, it will be sad indeed if the plots undertaken with such zeal and enthusiasm should be allowed to go to destruction because of lack of information at the right time.

Here is the Remedy.

"Potato blight is here and this is the remedy: Apply Bordeaux mixture for the 'blight,' with arsenate of lead for the 'bugs,' and apply thoroughly. Blight is 80 per cent. preventible if vigorously attacked now. Arsenate of lead may be obtained from the drug store or hardware store in paste or dry form. It should be mixed with water—about a heaped dessertspoonful of either dry or paste in two gallons of water.

How to Apply.

"Bordeaux mixture is obtained by dissolving one-half pound of blue stone (copper sulphate) and one-half pound of quicklime (unslaked), each separately in granite basins in a small amount of hot water. Then both these mixtures should be mixed together and sufficient water added to make five gallons. The arsenate of lead may be added to this mixture in the proportions named above at each spraying. Application should be made in the form of a spray. A watering can will do if there is no spraying machine at hand. All the mixture should be used up, and should not be left standing in a metal vessel. Paris green will do instead of arsenate of lead, but is not so persistent in clinging to the leaves in wet weather."

GERMANS CLAIM RUSS. REVERSE

BERLIN ALLEGES CAPTURE OF SEVERAL THOUSAND MEN IN GALICIA.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin, July 20.—German troops have pushed forward through three strong Russian zones of defence between Sereth and the Zlota Lipa rivers in Eastern Galicia, says an official statement issued today, by Army Headquarters. The Russians suffered heavily and are retreating in disorder. The Germans took a few thousand prisoners.

TWELVE MILES UP UPHRATES

BRITISH FORCES CONTINUE TO ADVANCE IN MESOPOTAMIA.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, July 20.—We made successful raids and captured several prisoners last night opposite Gavelle and north of Ypres, says to-day's official announcement. "The enemy's artillery was more active than usual north-west of St. Quentin and south-east of Lens."

An official report relating to the Mesopotamian campaign just issued shows a considerable British advance. The report says:

"On July 11, one of our columns engaged a Turkish force in the direction of Ramadies, on the Euphrates. After a short action, in which considerable loss was inflicted upon the Turks, a further advance was broken off by us owing to the extreme heat. As a result of these operations we have been able to advance about twelve miles up the Euphrates in the last ten days."

GROUND COVERED WITH DEADON FRENCH FRONT

Furious Assault is Repulsed with Magnificient Valor---In Spite of Sacrifices Germans Unable to Make Single Gain.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, July 20. — "In the region of Hurtebise and Craonne artillery fighting continued with great violence. The Germans renewed their attacks until a late hour in the night. At about 8:30 o'clock, after a powerful bombardment with concentrated artillery, the enemy undertook a new general assault with important forces on the line along the plateaux before Craonne and Vauclerc.

"Hand-to-hand fighting occurred on the whole extent of this front, which our troops defended with magnificent valor. Their tenacious resistance broke up the furious assaults of the enemy. Everywhere our posts were maintained completely. In spite of the heavy sacrifices made by the enemy, he was not able to gain a footing on the Californie plateau, on the Casemates plateau, or in our positions further west. The ground in front of our lines, covered with dead, bears witness to the violence of the battle and the sanguinary defeat of the enemy.

French Regain Positions.

Between the Californie plateau and the Casemells plateau the efforts of the Germans to increase the advantage obtained yesterday were equally fruitless. An energetic counter attack enabled us to regain the positions which the enemy had penetrated. We hold the crest of the plateau entirely. The enemy still holds a position about 600 metres long near the northern edge of the plateau, where one of our first line positions was destroyed by bombardment.

More Prisoners Taken.

"We took a score of prisoners of the guard. In the Champagne a surprise attack on our small posts between Navarin farm and St. Hilaire-St. Souplet road was broken up by our fire.

"On the left bank of the Meuse there was rather heavy artillery fighting in the region of Hill 304."

RUFSIAN TROOPS MUTINY ON THE GALICIAN FRONT

Six Hnndred and Seventy Regiments Voluntarily Retire Before Advancing Germans Leaving Other Units in Lurch.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Petrograd, July 20.—The Russian failure to hold the Germans in Eastern Galicia, says an official statement issued by the War Department today, was due to the extremest detachments holding meetings and discussing the advisability of obeying orders which some regiments had refused to obey. The Russian statement says six hundred and seventy regiments situated between Batkov and Manajov, voluntarily retired before attacking the Germans and as a result neighboring units also had to retire.

The Trouble in Petrograd.

The crowd in Nevsky Prospect is welcoming with enthusiastic cheers detachments of the active army who have arrived at the capital to reinforce the garrison for the restoration of order.

One after another the regiments which participated in the armed demonstration submitted to authority, expressing their regret for what had happened. They explained they had been misled by irresponsible agitators. The last remnant of the detachments of the Leines partisans has been forced to evacuate the modern circus where it had taken refuge. Troops are disarming the demonstrators and arresting their leaders.

AMERICANS ATTEMPTED TO TAKE LIFE OF KAISER

Confirmed Report Says They Were Arrested and Shot.

London, July 20.—The Reuter Amsterdam correspondent sends the following:

"According to information available here, which must, however, be treated with necessary reserve, two Americans were shot recently on the charge of having attempted to take the German Emperor's life."

A later despatch says: The elaboration of the report regarding the attempt on the life of Emperor William, which was sent out from here last night, is given by person who states he knew the circumstances and declares that two Americans managed to get near the Emperor at Army headquarters July 3. They were seized by detectives and found to be in possession of revolvers. It is stated they had been promised a large reward by an American millionaire for killing the Emperor.

They were shot twenty-four hours after their arrest. No names or further particulars are available and there is no confirmation of the story.

BERLIN ADMITS LOSS OF POSTS

ARE FORCED TO ABANDON TRENCH BEFORE ATTACK OF FRENCH.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin July 20.—Artillery activity in Flanders increased yesterday to extreme violence says a German War Office statement to-day. Part of the French positions on Winterburg were captured by Germans. Later some of these trenches were abandoned during a French attack.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

PETERBOROUGH FRIDAY, JULY 20, 1917

THE FIRST GUN FIRED.

THE LOCAL GRITS, or the Win-the-war Liberals, as they seem to have rechristened themselves, have fired the first shot in the campaign, and, following their usual custom, it comes from the bushes. An anonymous letter writer in our local contemporary trains his rifle on Captain Burnham and criticizes him for not arranging with the Government to pay half the cost of the high level bridge.

The Government has announced that its policy is to spend no money on public works except such as are absolutely necessary while the war lasts. Even if their right to bear part of the cost of the high level bridge were clearly established, they would not do so under present circumstances. If it were possible to get such assistance, Captain Burnham would have secured it long ago.

But why should "Voter," as the man in the bushes elects to style himself, stop where he does in defining Captain Burnham's duties? The Court House is being remodelled. Why not call upon the Federal representative to exert himself to get some financial aid from the Government for this work or to secure a grant from the same source for some civic improvement? Even if the high level bridge does to an extent come within the jurisdiction of the Government, chances for a grant under present conditions are slim.

WIN-THE-WAR LIBERALS.

IN A COMMUNICATION to The Review yesterday Mr. Joseph Wearing takes exception to an editorial note in these columns to the effect that a vote for the Liberal candidate in West Peterborough would mean a vote for the mischief-makers in Quebec. Not only do we feel like standing by that assertion in its integrity, but we would amplify it by saying that a vote for the Liberal candidate in West Peterborough would mean a vote for Laurier, and then go further and hold with the Toronto News that a vote for Laurier would mean a vote for Laurier, and

Mr. Wearing has a new name for his party in this riding. What has that political faction ever done to show that they are entitled to it? They have been active, it is true, in recruiting work—no one more so than Mr. Wearing himself—and yet it must be said that their efforts have largely been confined to academic reasoning, to preaching rather than to practice. Nearly a year ago an unfortunate situation arose in recruiting in this district, a situation caused by politcal differences which reached a climax at the annual meeting of the Patriotic League.

Mr. Wearing's party cannot hope to win on the strength of their new name any more than they can win the election through the inane jibes and the anonymous letters in The Examiner directed against the present member for this riding. What has been the stand of the Liberal party in this district on the conscription issue, either as voiced by their leaders or reflected in the columns of the party organ? One of extreme neutrality, an attitude of waiting while watching the course of events. The party organ never openly came out in favor of conscription, but invariably clouded the real issue by dragging in a discussion of the conscription of wealth, a matter on which it had been clearly forestalled. Some Liberal newspapers broke with their party leader on this point, but The Examiner never deemed it the part of wisdom to do so.

The Liberals in Parliament to the number of nineteen voted with the Government on the second reading of the Conscription Bill. With all but six of these the bolt seems to have been a matter of political expediency rather than patriotic sentiment, because only six of these voted for the extension of Parliament. No strategy could be more apparent than that.

The win-the-war Liberal who stood to his guns while the battle lasted is worthy of the name. The man who retreated when the conflict became intense is not. Call the party what you will, and the members must still acknowledge Sir Wilfrid Laurier as their leader. He is the man who tried his utmost to defeat the Naval Aid Bill in Parliament, and failing this, worked the Senate to accomplish his object.

He is the man who refused to send troops to South Africa until public opinion forced him to do so, when Colonel Sam Hughes broke the political red tape of his country and went on his own accord.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier is the man who, since the war broke out, has done nothing in recruiting except to throw a wet blanket upon the movement. He is the man whose own province and compatriots, solidly behind him now, have failed in their duty not only to their Empire but to their native country. He is the man who will be Premier of the Dominion, that he has set at odds against itself, if the Liberals are given a majority vote at the next election. It is all very well for a Toronto paper to counsel toleration in the coming campaign and to argue for an election in which patriotism rather than politics will be the guide. These are high-sounding phrases, but the conditions which render such a course impossible have not been created by the Government.

Mr. Wearing must be familiar with the situation in his own party. He must know that those who a short time ago were most prominently mentioned for the nomination no longer seek it, and that one whose chances only a month since were regarded as excellent has refused to be any longer regarded as an aspirant for the position. All of the rest have developed cold feet. They realize the fate that would befal any man who presumed to lead under such a standard, that he would not only fall now, but would destroy all his hopes of a political or any other kind of a future in this district.

Mr. Wearing is secretary of the Patriotic League, and has always been an earnest worker in the cause. He has offered himself for military service in any capacity and would be at the front today if the medical department would pass him. With all these facts in mind we ar convinced that Mr. Wearing himself would not accept the nomination in West Peterborough under present conditions, forced as he would be to acknowledge Sir Wilfrid as his leader. In saying this, no higher compliment can be paid either the Liberal party of Mr. Wearing himself

SIR WILFRID'S PRICE.

SIR WIFRID LAURIFR is in the position of a private who refuses to become enthusiastic in battle because he is not made an officer of high rank. He seeks to convey the impression that if he is restored to power his compatriots, acting on his instructions, will flock to the recruiting offices. The Premiership is the price which he sets for his service.

Sir Wilfrid refused to co-operate with Sir Robert Borden in recruiting. He must have absolute authority or nothing. His implied promise to arouse the people of Quebec if he is put back into the office which he held by the support of that province for fifteen years, is the most forceful reason for keeping him where he is. The patriotism that has a price is really nothing but empty buncombe.

NOTES AND COMMENT.

THE LIBERAL party may change its name, but the old spots and the hue remain.

• • •

THE LIBERALS will find that the cost of the sweets of office has gone skyward with other luxuries, due to the war.

• • •

THE MAN under the bed or the barn will venture out to vote for the Laurier candidate, here and elsewhere in the Dominion.

• • •

A HAMILTON MAN ATE two pounds of bread on a wager, together with some dainties on the side. Where, oh where, was Food Controller Hanna?

WHAT FUTURE Canadian statesman will say. In the event of another war: "For Heaven's sake let us not procrastinate as they did in 1917—jangling while the Empire burned."

• • •

MR. WEARING'S letter in yesterday's Review reminds us of the voice of Jacob and the skin of Esau.

• • •

T. W. WHALLEY, late of Peterborough, in his new paper, the Pembroke Standard, is fighting as vigorously as ever for Conservative principles.

• • •

AT ALL EVENTS the "Win-the-war Liberals" do not seem to be in a hurry in the matter of selecting a standard bearer. "Sufficient unto the day, etc."

• • •

THE LIBERALS who voted for conscription and then against extension are simply suffering from the same malady as their leader, an abnormal appetite for the sweets of office.

• • •

MORE AND MORE we believe in the law of compensation. A Red Cross pig sold for $55. If there had been no war there would have been no necesity for a Red Cross pig, and lacking the war the pig would have brought about half that sum for normal purposes.

The Barrie Gazette says "people are always willing to be led by leaders who know what they want." Indeed. And just what does Sir Wilfrid Laurier want, for instance?—Orillia Packet.

"That's too bad, dear," said mother, sympathetically. "Where do you feel worst?"

"In school, mamma."

"There are a great many people in this world who don't know what's good for them."

"Perhaps so, but they always have plenty of neighbors who would gladly tell them if they would only listen."

"I say, pa, didn't you tell me the other day that it was wrong to strike any one smaller than yourself."

"Yes, Willie, that's what I said."

"Well, I wish you'd write my teacher a note, telling her that. I don't think she knows about it."

It is told of Henry James that at a "literary tea," a gushing woman rushed up to him, and exclaimed:

"Oh, Mr. James, do tell us what you think of modern life."

The great author fixed her with a solemn eye. "Ah, madam," he replied earnestly, "it is a predicament in which we all find ourselves."

Danny and Bobbie had been left in the care of their big sister while their mother went out. At bedtime they wanted to "stay up for mother," but their sister relentlessly put them to bed. Danny maintained a stolid indifference, but Bobbie cried lustily. Their sister listened at the foot of the stairs, hoping they would soon be quiet. At last Bobbie stopped, and the listener heard him say:

"You cry a bit, Danny; I'm tired."

The soldiers, fresh from the trenches, were being served with hot soup. A young officer stopped an orderly and commanded him to remove the lid from his pail. The soldier obeyed promptly and the officer told him to pour a cup that he might see how the men fared.

"But, Captain—" began the soldier.

"Not a word!" said the captain, and drank the soup. Then he sputtered:

"Why, it tastes like dishwater."

"That's what it is, sir," said the orderly, saluting gravely.

MYSTERIOUS WOMANKIND

"Mrs. Which is a most disagreeable woman," observed Mrs. Jamesworthy. "I have known her ten years and never saw her when she wasn't saying unkind things about somebody. She was here this afternoon, and the way she criticized her neighbors was detestable."

"Yet you welcome her when she comes to our humble abode," said Jamesworthy, "and every once in a while you go to see her under her own vine and fig tree. Women are queer people, and the more I study them in their native wilds the less I understand them.

"If I don't like a man I don't want to have anything to do with him. I may return his salute when he greets me on the street and treat him with ordinary politeness at all times; but if he tries to become intimate with me, if he comes and sits on my front porch without an invitation, I inform him in a few well-chosen words of one syllable that the sooner he chases himself the more satisfactory it will be.

"Now, there's one man Traphagan who lives two doors above. I haven't any use for him. I wouldn't give 3 cents a bunch for men of his type. If anybody asked me to get down to brass tacks and explain just why I don't like I'd be at a loss.

"They say he's good, honest, and hard working. He has never done me an injury of any sort. In fact, I believe that if I needed somebody to sit up and fan my fevered brow while undergoing a siege of sickness Traphagen would be the first to respond. He's that sort.

"Yet he gives me a green pain in my sideboards. I don't like the cut of his whiskers, or the shape of his hat, or the way he wears his nose. There's something about him, Mrs. Jamesworthy, that fills me with unrighteous disapproval. When I dislike a man to that extent I cannot pretend that I am fond of him. I can't do it. So I don't pretend anything to Mr. Thaphagen.

"I don't invite him to my quilting bees or ice cream parties. I don't ask him to be a bridesmaid when I am being married. I let him know, unmistakably, that he is one half of a seidlitz powder and I am the other half, and if we mix there will be an uprising.

"I think most men are that way. The men of my acquaintances are, anyhow. But women are different. Whenever you mention Mrs. Which you describe her as a gossip and a mischiefmaker. Yet you don't cast her into outer darkness. You don't rise to a majestic height and tell her to darken your door no more. You don't hand her the ice pitcher in any shape of form.

"I was here one day about two weeks ago when she dropped in. If she had been your long lost aunt you couldn't have given her a more cordial welcome. You threw your arms around her neck and folded her to your bosom and said you hadn't seen her for a blue month or thereabouts and couldn't imagine what was the matter.

"She intended to stop only a minute or two but you made her take off her farthingale and antimacassar and other feminine trappings and stay for tea; and the two of you sat around all afternoon convincing each other that all your acquaintances were little less than loathsome wretches.

"After she had gone you informed me that Mrs. Which was positively the most unpleasant woman you ever had dealings with. I really don't understand women and hereafter I'm not going to try to understand them."

BOUGHT LIFE SUPPLY OF LIQUOR

Before state-wide prohibition went into effect in Nebraska on May 1 of this year Anton Larson, a farmer living near Omaha, went around to a life insurance company, had himself examined and found that according to the mortuary tables he would probably live for forty years.

Then Larson bought himself a forty years supply of liquor and salted it away out at his farm. He built a special house for the liquor and stored it away in the most systematic manner.

There were 4,000 gallons of beer, whiskey, brandy, wine and other drinks. Larson had estimated that he would drink 100 gallons every year for the balance of his lifetime. That is nearly a third of a gallon a day.

Under the Nebraskan prohibition law an individual can have a "reasonable" amount of liquor in his own home, provided his supply was purchased and laid in before the law went into effect. After the law became effective no further liquor could be brought into the state.

Larson made one mistake in storing his life supply of liquor. The law provided that the liquor should be kept in the home. Larson had constructed a special house for his liquor. It was not actually in his home, so Sheriff Clark raided the place and brought the entire supply down to the courthouse, where it filled several rooms.

Not only was his 4,000 gallons taken, but the Court placed a fine of $100 on Larson for having liquor in his possession outside of his home.

Miss Rankin of Montana is the only woman who is a member of the American Congress. Her autobiography in the Congressional Record was praised as the shortest that ever appeared in that volume. It was suggested that had it been longer she would have had to give that elementary fact of a biography: the date of her birth. Recently, however, there has appeared in a newspaper nearly a full page biography of the lady, with the story of her life told by herself, yet this, while it disclosed the date of birth of children named after her, failed to reveal the date of Miss Rankin's birth. All of which goes to show that the ladies, while demanding equal rights with men in public life, intend to retain the ancient special privileges of their sex.

EDITOR'S MAIL

Editor Peterborough Review:

At this time when both Government and press are calling on the people of Canada, to grow and also economize foodstuffs, it would be well if they first began to practice what they preach, by controlling the waste of good food in the military camps.

I spent a few days as a private at Barriefield camp in the early part of June, so that what I have to say is what I saw, and not hearsay. The food was a good variety, well cooked and wholesome, far better than the majority of the men would have at home, yet the waste was simply shocking. Meat, bread, butter and cheese, to say nothing of potatoes, were thrown about and fouled at every meal. I am not exaggerating when I say that enough food was wasted at each meal, to keep an ordinary family for two weeks, and there were only about 150 men at the tables I refer to. To give you an instance, one morning we had canned meat for breakfast, someone called out "dog meat," and instantly the bulk was thrown on the ground and trampled under foot. All this wicked waste combined with the most abominable profanity at all times, made one wonder if it were possible to win a war with men of this type, they were mostly rejects of battalions gone overseas, so perhaps were a worse type than usual. Let us hope for the honor of our army that they were. A few camps run on these lines would soon cause a shortage of food which we hope to be delivered from by the work of the farmer, the economy of our people, and the blessing of God.

They set a new high standard in design for the hotels of the continent and they have already gained an international reputation for the excellence of their service. They are indeed worthy companions of The Chateau Laurier at Ottawa, so well known to the people of the east. The Grand Trunk has just issued a new booklet descriptive of these hotels and of the cities which they serve. This publication conveys a splendid impression of the beautiful interiors of The Fort Garry and The Macdonald. Copy may be obtained free on application to C. E. THE SALVING OF A DERELICT

By MAURICE DRAKE

"'Where'd he get the brath?' he asked.

"'How should I know?' I said. 'No affair of mine.'

"Then they talked about you for a bit, and Reingold said he supposed you'd done pretty well out of the estate. 'Artful young cove,' he said you were. 'Fancy his selling hith yacht, an' all. Thpeculation couldn't account for all those thousands, my dear. I tell you, Herman Averil wathn't a gambler, really thpeakin'.'"

"Didn't you kick him?" Laurence asked savagely.

"Kick him? Not much. What for, my grossly libelled angel? Nothing about kicking in my instructions. I drank up and made out I was going to quit, and they asked me to have another. I wouldn't, I said, and then as an afterthought I suggested tossing for the three drinks. 'Let's make a little gamble of it,' I said. 'I've got a share in that company of old Averil's—the Iceland Development Company, that showed up so at the inquiry. You two have a share each. Let's toss for drinks, the loser to take all three shares and see what he can get for 'em from young Averil. The pup may be ready to pay a quid apiece for 'em rather than have us rubbing 'em on his nose.'

"They agreed, and I'm hanged if Mortimer didn't win the shares. He growled at it—said he didn't know you personally, and so what chance had he of pulling your leg? I laughed, and offered to toss him again, half a quid or nothing for the three shares—and here they are."

He showed the scrip to Laurence, laughing.

"Good man you are, Pat."

"Oh, that's all right. It's a pleasure to do that pack. I enjoyed it, man."

"And how about the debentures, and were there any other ordinaries, and if so, who's got them?" Laurence demanded.

"There were a hundred debentures at a hundred pounds each, and they were all taken up by that old fool down in Somerset. He paid ninety-five quid apiece for 'em—six per cent. debentures. The thing screams aloud, don't it?"

"Finance isn't taught at sea—much. Go on."

"Experto Crede, eh? I told you I judged you'd been seafaring, at the very first.

"Well, in addition to this ten thousand quids' worth of bee-you-tiful paper, he weighed out for eight hundred of the ordinary stock, and that's all that was ever issued."

"Who's got 'em."

"His daughter. She's a lone, lorn spinster, and if—mark you, I say if—there's anything in this deal, and you make money by it, I think you're a worthy son of a worthy father—that's all."

Laurence thought of Marion, and the crowded, hungry town so full of danger, and hardened his heart.

"She's not the only single woman in the world. I want those shares, Pat, and I must have 'em. If you're going to get conscience-stricken at dealing with a woman—"

"Pooh, man, that's nothing to do with it. I'm acting as your agent. It's for you to say what's to be done."

"Can you get 'em, do you think?"

"Yes, I think so. The lady is alone, without advisers, and I shouldn't think there ought to be any difficulty. Harper's evidence as to the value of the land was pretty conclusive, and I should think she ought to be glad to see a hundred quid down in place of paper that anyone can tell her is valueless. She's called—"

"Don't tell me," Laurence interrupted quickly. "I don't want to know who she is. It's one thing to rob an abstract nonentity, but another to do a woman down when you know her name or anything about her. I'll tell you what I'll do. I've got a billet waiting for me, and I ought to be able to save a hundred by the end of the year. I live small, you know."

"I don't know anything of the sort. On the contrary—"

"Oh, shut up, do. I'll reckon on saving that hundred. You can offer her a hundred down, and a hundred in twelve months' time. I'll undertake that much—and that's all I jolly well will do. Will that be enough?"

"It'll be enough to buy the shares, for certain," Dwyer said. "I really think a hundred would do that. If you desire to salve your conscience you can offer the extra sum."

"Well, I'll do it, then. Conscience be sugared!—I haven't got one. But since it's a woman I'll do that much for her."

"Very well. Call again on Monday, and if I've got the shares you shall have 'em then. Oh, by the way, one thing. The day after I got those shares from Mortimer & Reingold that sheeny came here.

"'Look here,' he said. 'A joke'th a joke, Dwyer, my boy. About those shares of Averil's we tossed for yethterday—I understood you to thay you were a holder.'

"I told him I was, and he wanted to know how that could be? Artful devils they are. Would you believe it, he'd gone and had a look at the list of shareholders—after carrying the thing out as a joke like that."

"They must have suspected something from your manner," Laurence suggested, a sinking at his heart.

"Not they—I don't think so, anyhow. It's just their infernal methodical way of doing things.

"Well, he asked how I was a shareholder, and like a fool—I ought to have grinned at the idea of diddling 'em out of a couple of shares, as if it were of no importance—like a fool I pulled open my drawer and showed him the shares I'd got from Hayley and his clerk. 'I bought them yesterday,' I told him. Blame fool! I could have kicked myself the moment I'd spoken."

"What did he say?"

"Nothing to speak of. He just [illegible] he said. 'Well, if you get 'em all for nothing you'll be able to treat yourthelf to a dinner out of young Averil,' and then he cleared out."

"Can he find out who's got the other shares?" Laurence asked anxiously.

"Course he can. We're a bit ahead of the game, because we've got the address of the present holder, and it'll take him a day or two to get that, however much he hurries. But I shouldn't bother, if I were you. I don't expect he'll think any more of it, and if he does—he's first got to get the address, as I say; and after that he won't offer twenty pounds for the shares. Trust a Jew, my boy. We shall have bagged the lot by the time he's made a move."

"Let's hope so," Laurence said, with some forebodings. "Is that all?"

"Yes. And now, are you going to stand me a lunch, or am I going to stand you one? Toss for it, eh? Right. Where have you been keeping yourself this last week? I'm bored and Connie's disconsolate. She was here after your address last Monday—and young Farrant puts on more side than ever. If I were as big as you, Laurie, and any geological whelp cut me out, I'd kick him, hard. Why this sudden retirement from a life of pleasure?"

"A life of footle. I'm fed with it man. I've had my fling, and it's but a weary business at best. I shan't be in town longer than another month Pat, and then I'm going back to work like a good boy."

"Well, that's good hearing. I tell you, when first you arrived in town a month ago, I felt nervous. Y'see, you were always such a whole-hog sort of cove, and you gave me to understand that you were rolling in wealth And certainly you managed to put in a month of spree that would have killed a horse if it had lasted a year What's the meaning of this sudden pull up? And when are you going to disclose your 'orrible past?"

"I'll tell you now," Laurence said, desirous of turning aside inquiries as to his present manner of living. "I'll tell you all about it, Pat, and you can see for yourself whether I was driven hard or no." And over the luncheon table, omitting only all mention of his landing in Iceland, he gave Dwyer the history of the past two years.

CHAPTER XVI

Although Miss Constance Armitage's character presented many traits not generally esteemed as virtues, she possessed at least one, the value of which is rarely denied she was a business woman. Some few years of a precarious existence, spent for the greater part in touring companies of the "No. 2" grade, had destroyed any of the small trust she had ever been inclined to put in mankind, and although an occasional advertisement in the Era described her as "resting" at the present time, it may safely be averred that the description was inaccurate. Indeed, before her meeting with Laurence she was pressed for money harshly, and her exertions towards amassing it were as little restful as they well could be. In this predicament his advent on her horizon had seemed like providence, and an almost genuine warmth at heart testified not only to the value of his gifts, but also to the straits to which she had been reduced before she had met him.

Added to this, purely business woman though she esteemed herself to be, was another feeling. Thoroughly and heartily weary of the types of men most commonly met by the women of her class, Laurence came to her with the freshness of salt sea breezes. His strength and quickness, even his coarseness and brutality, were a change from the sickly sweetened compliments and cheap adulation paid to her hitherto. Moreover—most endearing of characteristics—he spent money royally, and their last drive to Richmond, followed by the supper at his rooms, had been invested with a new and novel interest for her—the extraordinary feeling of really liking a man for his own sake, and not as a matter of convenience. She had kissed him at parting with some approach to real emotion; and as she stood outside the carriage door jobbed by the kindness of Mr. Mortimer, stockbroker, of the firm of Mortimer & Reingold—she looked at his tall figure upon the pavement with the first feeling of admiration for a man she had felt since she was seventeen. And, alas! she was nine-and-twenty now, although she successfully denied it.

She spoke of her feelings of her maiden heart to a bosom friend next morning. The friend, who was shopping, had called in to borrow three shillings with which to buy gloves. "My tick's stopped at Stagg & Mantle's," she said in extenuation, and narrated a little piece of personal history that would have been the most commonplace of domestic squabbles had she but been married to the gentleman with whom she had disagreed. As she was not [illegible] the tale possessed an interest all its own.

"Men are beasts, anyway," she concluded.

"M-m," murmured Miss Armitage. She was standing before a mirror, her mouth full of hairpins and her fingers busy at a stray tress behind her ears. She pushed in the last pin with exact accuracy, regarding the effect sideways in the glass, then with a swishing of disarrayed petticoats produced a small puff from the neighborhood of her knee and dabbed at her nose meditatively.

"M-m," she said again, replacing the puff. "Yes I suppose they are—of course they are. But it's our own fault. We're such fools."

"What on earth makes you take that tone?" her friend asked indignantly. "Fools! You speak for yourself, Connie, my dear. If you like to call yourself a fool you're welcome, I'm sure."

"I believe I am half a fool, and that's a fact. I—— Do you think you could get silly about a man, Lucy."

"I? The idea! And you—of all girls in the world. Who is it? Do tell me. I'm just dying——"

"You know him. He was here at tea last week when you came in."

"What—young Avery, or whatever his name is? The one you called Lucifer? The man with big ugly hands and a bad temper? Is that the one?"

Constance Armitage walked to the window and looked out upon the quiet street.

"Y-yes," she said. "What do you think of him?"

"Oh, I don't know. Bit of a brute, I should think. But he's rich, isn't he?"

"I suppose so"—wearily. "I don't care if he isn't. He's a man. Yes, and he's a bit of a brute too—that's what I like him for."

"'Twouldn't do for all of us to think alike," the friend sagely remarked. "Personally, I should prefer young Farrant. He's quite the gentleman—and the other isn't. But, fool as you call yourself, I notice you choose the richer man to get silly about. You'll steer clear of Hanwell if you don't get worse symptoms than that, my dear." She wandered down the stairs and took her three shillings to Leicester Square, leaving Miss Armitage to indulge in day dreams.

Her newly discovered predilection for Laurence was not a sufficiently strong impulse to make her manner anything but pleasant to Farrant, who preceded him that afternoon, as has already been told, Laurence's rudeness alarmed her but little. She had often enough before now been subjected to insults beside which mere discourtesy paled; and she never conceived it possible that Laurence, who had sought her acquaintance, could be wearying of her just at the moment when her own thoughts began steadily to turn towards him. She wondered when he failed to arrive at dinner, but her manner to her companion lacked nothing of charm on that account. Only, on her return home, "He's jealous of that fool boy," she reflected. "I oughn't to have shown him that pendant. I'll write and ask him to call again to-morrow, or maybe he'll sulk for a week." The note spoke only of a future meeting; but in its carefully chosen words were gentle hope, a foreshadowed meekness and sorrow in the event of that meeting not taking place, and a vague regret at the untoward occurrences of the afternoon before. In a word, it was a little chef d'œuvre of its kind, and it is to be regretted that Laurence burned it unanswered on the morning of its arrival.

All through that day she waited, and through the next. The last three Sundays had seen him at her tea table, and she made sure that he must call on this, only to be again disappointed. Though bitter experience had before now taught her how little value attaches to easily picked fruit, on Monday she took the, for her, unusual course of calling upon him at New Cavendish Street, only to find him gone and the key of his rooms in the hall porter's hands. It says much for her self-possession that she was able to make perfectly coherent inquiries about her missing shoe; and the porter's wife being called, it was handed to her, with an audible accompaniment of virtuous sniffs.

"Them smutty marks was on it when I found it," that lady informed her. "Mr. Averil, 'e'd throwed it be'ind the fireplace," she was glad to be able to add.

"So he tells me," Miss Armitage replied, in her sweetest manner. Her use of the present tense adroitly turned the tables on the matron by implying that Laurence had left the rooms for the purpose of enjoying more of her society.

The porter's wife sniffed again and retired, and Constance drove to Chancery Lane to ask Dwyer Laurence's present address.

"I don't know it, my dear girl," he said. "I swear I don't—really and truly. I had dinner with him last Thursday, and since then I haven't set eyes on him. I've got an appointment with him on Thursday next, and I'll tell him you want to see him then, if you like."

"Oh no no. Don't trouble. I don't really want to see him, only—only—" She stopped. Only now did she begin to understand that she really did want to see him very much indeed. But, "It's of no importance," she assured Dwyer, and drove back to her flat in a frame of mind bordering on jealous tears. She guessed he had gone to Paris. He had spoken of going, had even offered, in a careless moment, to take her with him. With the thought of Harry Mortimer before her eyes, she had refused. Judicious lying would square this business with him, but a trip to Paris meant a definite break and probably an unpleasant row: and although Mortimer was fat, and oily in pleasantry, she still could hardly afford that until she was more sure of Laurence. As has been remarked, she was pre-eminently a business woman. And now Laurence had gone a-one, just as she discovered she liked him well enough to go anywhere with him—to Kamtschatka if need be always assuming she could go by train de luxe, of course. It was intensely annoying, and picturing him behaving in Paris as he had in London, she really did cry a little when she went to bed that night.

RESEARCH NECESSARY IN BASIC INDUSTRY

Goes Hand in Hand with Conservation—Importance of Lumber and Pulp to Canada

The development and perpetuation of basic industries necessarily implies not only far-reaching plans for the conservation of the raw materials, but also the conduct of scientific research that new uses and the most efficient methods of utilization may be determined. In Canada, we must recognize, says "Conservation," that the lumber and pulpwood industries are essentially basic industries, that upon them depend a host of secondary industries of vital importance in the economic life of the country, and that the best utilization of our forest resources, including the development of new uses and new markets, both domestic and foreign, still offers a wide field for industrial research.

Learn More About Wood

We should be able to increase the intelligent use of wood by learning more about its qualities. This, in turn means more and better business for Canada and an increased capacity, from both direct and indirect revenues, for the payment of the great public debt. An excellent beginning was made in such investigations by the Forests Laboratories maintained by the Dominion Forestry Branch, in co-operation with McGill University, at Montreal. Particularly valuable are the investigations of pulp and paper manufacture which promise results most important to the industry.

To Prevent Waste

In many cases scientific research may pave the way for vastly increased markets for Canada's surplus forest products. In addition to such opportunities, there is need for research to determine methods for better utilization of wood waste. Under present conditions, only about one-third of the solid contents of the tree is utilized in the form of lumber, the balance going to waste in the form of sawdust, slabs, edgings, tops, stumps, etc. Ultimately, it should be possible, with proper methods, to use to advantage at least a considerable proportion of this waste material.

NICKEL AND INDUSTRY

Pure nickel is a greyish white metal, very hard, very malleable and very ductile. These are valuable qualities, but the world's supply of the pure metal is so small when compared with iron, copper, and other economic minerals, that nickel would not have much influence on the world's industry if it were not for the wonderful changes it effects on the cheaper metals when introduced as an alloy; and the wonder of these changes is not yet at an end, for combinations of nickel with third and fourth metals produce new results, and a change of proportions in the alloys will often produce new qualities and capacities, brought out by experiment, and quite as often by accident.

BALANCED RATIONS

Even Hen Comes Under Scientific Control with Good Results

Feeders of horses, cattle, sheep and hogs have claimed for years that these animals must be fed a "balanced ration." Special attention has been given to balanced rations for dairy cows. By this is meant that one food constituent should not be fed in excess, while another is lacking for the upkeep of the animal's body. The protein must be in a certain proportion to the sugars, starches and fat in the food. The hen comes in for her share in this scientific feeding

Ten times as many eggs were produced by hens fed a well-balanced ration as by those given only corn, wheat and oats in an experiment conducted by a Government Station. The balanced ration consisted of three parts by weight of corn and one part of wheat fed twice daily in the litter, and a mash mixture of two parts meat scrap added to two parts ground corn and one part bran fed in self feeding hoppers. The hens given the balanced ration ate more feed, which cost about 50 per cent. more than the ration of corn, wheat and oats. However, they gained more in weight and produced ten times as many eggs, making a net profit while the other lot was kept at a loss. The test period lasted for 140 days.

TREKKED 400 MILES

By Old Cariboo Trail to Central British Columbia

Central British Columbia, served by the Grand Trunk Pacific line, attracts a steady stream of settlers. Fast train service is the modern method of reaching Canada's new areas, but Grand Trunk officials tell of the arrival at Prince George, B.C., of thirty people, members of four families who trekked up from Armstrong, B.C., over the old Cariboo road, for a distance of 420 miles, attracted by the fertile land awaiting settlement. The journey occupied five weeks. The party brought with them 30 head of stock, a fine selection of poultry and all necessary implements to go on the land at once.

The D. P. Siemens family, with this party, brought in more than two score chickens and reported that their poultry had been laying sufficient eggs on the journey to barter for the necessary groceries used on the road. Mrs. Siemens marketed on her arrival at Prince George ten dozen eggs. The only untoward incident of the trip was the killing of one of the horses, which rolled down a steep slope in the Cariboo mountains.

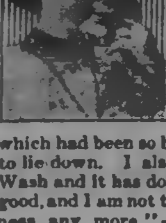
WOMAN A PHYSICAL WRECK

Tells in Following Letter How She Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Milwaukee, Wis.—"Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was a physical wreck. I had been going to a doctor for several years but he did me no good. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I decided to give it a fair trial, and it gave me relief from bearing down pains which had been so bad that I would have to lie down. I also used the Sanative Wash and it has done me a great deal of good, and I am not troubled with a weakness any more."—Mrs. P. L. BRILL, 1299 Booth Street, Milwaukee, Wis.



The most successful remedy for woman's ills is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has stood the test for forty years, which would be impossible if it did not have genuine merit.

DRAIN COW STABLES

Manure Hurts Milk—Draughts Also to be Avoided

The best material for the floor of all cow houses or byres is undoubtedly concrete, as it will admit of easy and efficient washings The utmost attention should be paid to the system of drainage, which is best provided in the form of surface drains running into a common channel. Cleanliness in the interior of the cow house is as much requisite as in the dairy itself and the methods of ventilating must be on approved principles, the windows securing at the same time an abundance of light. Those structures admitting a downward draught on the animals are clearly injurious to the health of the cows, and must be condemned on that score. The best windows are those admitting an upward current of air to circulate round the top of the building, and so replace the bad air without causing dangerous draughts.

On a great majority of farms the manure heap is to be found in close proximity to the cow house, and the undesirable odors from this source can be clearly detected in the byre There can be no doubt as to the evil influences thus communicated to the milk, and where new buildings are being erected or alterations are being planned, it will be well to bear this in mind. A further source of depreciation in the purity of new milk is to be observed in some situations where the entrance to the barn or yard resembles a miniature bog, the cows having to plunge up to their hocks in thick mud when entering the yard. This can be prevented by making a well drained entrance with chalk or rubble.—Maritime Farmer.

WATERING HORSES

When Care is Needed—Feed Hay and Grain Together

Many horses are killed and many more are injured by careless feeding and watering Never water a horse immediately after feeding grain. This washes the grain through the stomach before it is properly mixed with the stomach juices and is liable to cause colic. If the horse is very warm, let him drink a few swallows and then hold his head up for a minute or two, and thus cool his stomach slowly. Try it yourself in hot weather. You can drink a quart of cold water without injury if you will but take several minutes for the first few swallows.

When horses are brought in hot from their work they should first be given water cautiously, and then fed hay and grain together, allowing them to exercise their own judgment in the selection of their fare.

LIFE IN NORTHWEST

A Writer Tells of the Remote Districts of Canada

Interesting details of life in the North-West and of the unexploited natural resources to be found there, were told by Capt. Charles A. Rheault, Inspector Royal Northwest Mounted Police, of Fort Fitzgerald, Great Slave River.

"The fur-traders, the police and occasionally a few trappers, are the only white men up there," said Capt. Rheault. "In the summer, when we patrol, we go by canoe up the river, in the winter we use dog teams.

"I started with Corp. Joy, two Indians and two teams of dogs, five in each, from Fort Fitzgerald. We went to 65 latitude north, and back again, covering a distance of 2,100 miles in 87 days.

We followed the river to Fort Resolution, then over Great Slave Lake, through the north arm, through the bush country, to Mackenzie River. We found the Indians had been suffering greatly through scarcity of game. The wavis, the big geese, had not appeared last year, and there had been fewer moose and caribou. We came across two trappers, a Scotchman and an Englishman, Stevenson and Muirhead, in the mouth of the Black Water River, who had not seen a white man for five months.

"It is not the low temperature that makes the going so hard, it is the awful Arctic winds. We wear snowshoes all the time, the dogs wear moccasins.

Copper, oil, salt, sulphur and gypsum are to be found up there. D. A. Thomas, the Welsh coal magnate, has some oil claims staked out northwest of Great Slave River. There's everything to be found if the men with the money could get there. But expenses and difficulties of transportation are enormous. In the Coppermine River district, the Esquimaux make arrowheads and tools from the native copper.

"All garden vegetables can be grown up there, except corn. Every policeman and the head of mission has his own garden. Wheat was grown last year at Fort Resolution. It ripened on August 10. It is the long summer days that makes this possible. At Fort Fitzgerald the sun doesn't set till 10.30 p.m., and rises at 2.30, or 3 a.m. At Fort Resolution it rises at 1 a.m. and sets at 11 p.m. That balances the winter."

DETECT FIRES EASILY

Aviator Found Very Useful in Forest Protection

During 1915 Wisconsin had the services of Mr. L. A. Vilas, who was operating a hydro-aeroplane in the vicinity of Trout Lake, where the central station of the Forestry Field Organization is located. Mr. Vilas was made a deputy forest ranger. The forest reserve region, although of high altitude, is a great plain containing many lakes and swamps, though no abrupt hills, and from the aeroplane some 200,000 acres of land can be surveyed. A fire 30 or 40 miles away can be easily detected.

The pilot should go over the country he is to patrol either on foot or horseback, thoroughly familiarizing himself with all lakes, rivers, railroads, strips of timber and cleared lands, and make it a point to find as many land marks as possible, at least one for each point of the compass such as a lone settler's farm, a brightly painted house, a railroad (the direction in which it runs, as the smoke of a moving train is oftentimes useful in keeping one located), a small town or range of hills. All the above objects mentioned are very noticeable 10 or 25 miles away at an altitude of 800 to 2,000 feet.

At an elevation of 1,500 feet on a clear day a fire 60 miles away in any direction is visible to the naked eye. It isn't a case of finding a fire, but to locate it correctly is the job. Smoke will show up very plainly from the air. Mr. Vilas reports that during a flight across Lake Michigan from St. Joe, Mich., he was completely out out of sight of land, or anything else for that matter, for over three-quarters of an hour, and at an altitude of 4,600 feet. The first thing he saw was the smoke from the South Chicago Rolling Mills. This was in sight over ten minutes before any shore line was visible at all.

Quite a Love Party

"Talk about an 'abode of love,'" writes Mrs. P., "what do you think of this? The other day I gave a little party in honour of my eldest daughter's birthday, and among the guests were Mrs. Dear and two Misses Dear; Miss Love and Master Love; a sweet boy who answers to the surname Darling; and a gay bachelor who signs his name Spooner; to say nothing of various members of my own family all of whom are 'Petts.'"

DESTROYING SHADE TREES

Complaints are being made to the civic authorities of the vandalism of local companies whose extensions of wires necessitate the removal, in whole or in part, of trees on civic property, says the Ottawa Citizen. It is alleged that trees on residential streets are being virtually destroyed in many cases by wire stringing crews and that when protests are made the answer usually given is that civic permission for the removal or multilation of the trees has been secured.

Trees on civic property (on the street) are the property of the corporation No private company or individual has the right to interfere with them unless by special permit from the engineer's department and under the supervision of an official from that department. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon householders and others that every mutilation of trees under other circumstances is a violation of the civic regulations, and the perpetrators thereof are liable to the penalties prescribed for such offences. The matter is one that concerns the health, comfort and beauty of the community. The remedy for the epidemic of tree mutilation is in the hands of the citizens and it is to be hoped that it will be promptly applied whenever necessary.

TWO WAYS TO ACQUIRE AN ESTATE

1—By saving, stinting, sacrificing; fighting the world at every turn, battling the blows of business competition; running the risk of fire, theft, embezzlement and misfortune; skimping your family, and yourself maybe, and standing only one chance in twenty of reaching Old Age without being dependent upon others for support.

2—By securing a Life Insurance Policy—A Policy which guarantees to pay your Beneficiary at your death, either a definite lump sum or an income every month as long as she lives—an income that is fixed, certain, regular, inalienable, unassailable, untaxable, and which cannot be lost, sold, dissipated, squandered or mortgaged.

Which is the EASIER and MORE SENSIBLE Way to Acquire an Estate?

TWO WAYS TO BEQUEATH AN ESTATE

1—By Testamentary Document: Requires an Executor. Must go through legal red tape at court. Requires court costs. May require months or years to settle. This kind of Will can be broken or set aside. Property is subject to attachment for debts of the deceased.

2—By Life Insurance (when the Beneficiary is named): Requires no executor or administrator—you are your own executor, your own administrator. No need of court proceedings—no expense of court costs. Does not require time to settle. This is a Will direct which no lawyer can break or court set aside. Policy is not subject to attachment for debts of the deceased.

Which is the SAFER and BETTER Way to Bequeath an Estate?

THE "JOKER" ON THE RIVER

Numerous complaints have been made time and again of the practice of a few motor boat owners making canoeing unpleasant for ladies who desire to spend the evening on the lower waters of the Otonabee. Many complaints have also been receivd by various municipal officials rgarding the failure of some yacht owners to carry the necessary government lights when cruising at night on the river and adjoining lakes.

Last evening a Review reporter took a trip down to the Street Railway wharf and witnessed for himself the offences complained of. The river was thickly populated last evening with canoes, yachts and other water craft and every one was enjoying the delightful evening except a few ladies who were taking their first lessons in canoeing. To these a young man and companion in a motor boat, made things unpleasant. He would go up and down the river for a short stretch at top speed and would watch with delight the nervousness caused the ladies when the choppy swell from his launch reached them. If the swell did not hit them just right he would turn the boat sharply so that the wave would be enlarged.

There ought to be some one official whose duty it is to keep such persons off the water, at least in charge of a boat.

Peterborough has always been famous for its splendid boating facilities and to have the evening's fun marred by the foolish recklessness of one or two hoggish motor boat owners should not be tolerated for a moment.

The Otonabee river is long enough and wide enough for those who want to try out the speed of their craft to go way down to a spot where there is not such a congregation of the boating public out to put speeding to a practice at a point in front of the Street Railway wharf is as dangerous as speeding an auto on George street on Saturday.

A number of the canoeists were talking about one young man in particular last evening and if last night's performance is repeated, action will be taken against him in some manner.

THE REGULATIONS.

For the benefit of those who are in doubt as to what lights are required on yachts and boats.

A skiff is required to carry one white light.

All steam, motor driven or sailing vessels are required to expose the following lights:

On the front, a White Light.
On the starboard (right hand side), a Green Light.
On the port (left hand side), a Red Light.

TAX COLLECTOR BUSY TAKING IN THE MONEY

Tax Collector Green is a very busy man these days relieving the taxpayers of their money. Some of the citizens are taking advantage of the discount and paying the whole of the tax at once instead of making two payments. A number of the people who have sold their property or whose property has changed hands since the assessment was made last year should visit the tax collector at once and get matters rectified. This applies particularly to those who have not received a tax bill.

The matter can be remedied very easily if attended to at once but if left over until the last day or two before it is due a lot of confusion and inconvenience is caused. The tax collector is at his office from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m daily.

BURDOCKS THRIVING.

While some of our local amateur gardeners are talking about their very fine crops of vegetables, not a word has been heard from the judges of burdock crops. Some of the vacant corner lots have specimens that it will be hard to beat.

WHEN MEN ARE CONSCRIPTED, WHAT ABOUT INSURANCE?

Government Urged to Take Some Action That Will Save Policies Taken Out Before Enlistment.

Ottawa, July 20.—Hon. Rudolphe Lemieux, in Parliament, brought up the question of insurance premiums. The companies, he said, raised premiums for men going to war. This increase might in many cases mean that a man would have to drop his premium and lose the advantage of all that he had already paid. He asked if the Government would not either make up the extra cost or provide for a maximum rate beyond which the insurance companies should not charge. Many honorable gentlemen had received a letter along this line.

Hon. George P. Graham stated that insurance companies were for the protection of a vast number of widows and orphans, and they must maintain themselves in a position to carry out their contracts. Insurance premiums taken out before the war had not been subjected to increase for war risks. New policies, however, contained a war-risk clause. In fact, few of the companies cared to take war risks.

Mr. Graham had no objection to the Government assuming the extra cost, but if the Government undertook to fix rates it might as well put the companies out of business. He protested against such a course being taken.

Hon. Dr. Pugsley asked whether it was true that the United States had undertaken to insure all men for $4,000, the Government paying the premium.

Sir Robert said that the Minister of Finance had been absent until noon. He would bring the matter to his attention. It was not a matter which could be dealt with in the bill. Neither could it be dealt with by imposing on the companies a maximum rate. This would bring about disaster.

Sir Robert Borden did not think that the United States had undertaken to insure all men.

Leave Clause Unchanged

Sir Robert Borden moved that the clause exempting clergy and divinity students be re-considered. On further consideration, he said, it was found that the words "divinity students" included a wider body of persons than at first consideration. Moreover it covered a class of those who would not desire exemption. It was suggested that these students be left with other students to take advantage of exemption which might be permitted by the tribunals. He moved that the clause be left as before wtihout the inclusion of divinity students.

Potatoes to Be of Uniform Standard

Government Selects Five of the Best Varieties for Growers.

Toronto, July 20.—At a consultation held yesterday at the Provincial Parliament Buildings, Prof. C. A. Zavitz, of Guelph, T. C. Raynor, of the Dominion Seeds Branch, and representatives of both the Federal and Provincial Departments of Agriculture, selected five of the thirty leading varieties of potatoes for the purpose of demonstrating the desirability of establishing a uniform standard within the province for the guidance of all potato growers.

Two early and three late varieties were selected: Extra Early Eureka and Irish Cobbler for the early market, and Green Mountain, Empire State and Dooley for the later crop. District representatives will conduct tests of these types in every county, and it is expected that the demonstrations will lead to their adoption by all farmers who wish to benefit by the advantages of sharing in a uniform market.

W. B. Roadhouse, provincial deputy minister of agriculture, pointed out that the potato growing industry was being handicapped within the province because of the multiplicity of the varieties used for seed. The types selected, he said, had been found eminently suitable for profitable cultivation throughout the province generally.

MINERS TO SHORTEN THEIR HOLIDAY TERM

London, July 20.—In view of the national necessity of maintaing the present output of coal the Derbyshire Miners' Association has recommended its 50,000 members to take but one day's holiday in August, instead of four days as usual.

Our respect for old age depends a great deal on whether it is to be applied to men and women or boarding house poultry.

LIBERAL PARTY SPLIT INTO THREE FACTIONS

Quebec Has One Leader; Ontario and West To Have One Each.

Ottawa, July 20.—All of the Ontario Liberal members of parliament left for Toronto last evening to attend the conference which is to be held there to-morrow of all the members and candidates for the province. Some constituencies have not yet any Liberal candidates in the field, but most of them have, and it is anticipated that the convention will be a very large one.

It is stated here that N. W. Rowell, K.C., Liberal leader in Ontario, has not been invited to the conference, and this omission has provoked some criticism.

The purpose of the convention is to discuss national and provincial issues. The opposition of Sir Wilfrid Laurier to conscription has rendered the position of the Ontario Liberals very difficult, and this question will came under discussion. In is said that a leader will be appointed who will be recognised officially as the party leader at the general election. In such a case there will probably be three Liberal parties with three leaders at the election, for it is stated quite positively that the western Liberals will appoint a leader of their own at their convention at Winnipeg on August 7 and 8. Sir Wilfrid Laurier will lead Quebec.

In the event of a union government being formed, however, there would be no need of an Ontario Liberal leader.

START IS MADE ON PROVINCIAL HIGHWAY WORK

NEGOTIATIONS COMPLETED FOR ROAD FROM TORONTO TO OSHAWA.

Although negotiations were completed yesterday for the taking over of the Kingston road between Toronto and Oshawa, as part of the provincial highway system, no new construction work will be done this year. Within a few days, however gangs of men will be set to work to bring the road into a proper state of repair and to maintain it in that condition.

This action, which comes as the fructification of the hopes of many deputations which have waited on the Minister of Public Works at various times since the first announcement of the provincial highway plan, marks the actual beginning of work on the development of a commercial highway from Windsor to Montreal. It is the first time the province has exercised the powers granted in the legislation passed at the last session and puts into full force the threefold system of highway improvement which places Ontario as the leading province in the development of good roads systems within the Dominion.

All but three counties have adopted the county system and the province has now shouldered its share of the responsibility for road improvements, declared Hon. Mr. McDiarmid.

LUBIN APPLIES GET RICH QUICK SCHEME EASILY

MANY REPORTS RECEIVED FROM VARIOUS MUNICIPALITIES.

According to information which the Lindsay police received from Fenelon Falls it appears that G. A. Lubin, the individual against whom a charge of theft and fraud is left, operated at that village.

Recently Lubin motored to the village and made himself a hail fellow well met, putting on a bold front and claiming to be attached to the office staff of the Arsenal at Lindsay. While in the village, he expressed a desire to draw on one of the village banks for money. He asked Mr. Joseph Jacque, proprietor of the Towney House, to introduce him to the bank officials, and the latter being led to believe that Lubin had a snug bank account in Lindsay, complied with his request. Lubin then issued a cheque for $10, signed Mr. Jacque's name thereto, and secured the money.

Owing to the fact that Lubin had no valise or trunk, Chief Short is of the opinion that Lubin is making practice of going through the country plying his get-rich-quick scheme.

Sleepy Time Story About a Useful and Handsome Bird.

THE DROP OF MAGIC BLOOD.

How It Came to Ornament the Crest of a Little Feathered Friend of Mankind—Battle Between the Knight and the Wicked Wizard.

Tonight, said Uncle Ben to Little Ned and Polly Ann I am going to tell you about—

THE WOODPECKER.

The woodpecker bores right through the bark of trees to get at the bugs that otherwise might injure them. You have often admired doubtless the gay little crest on the woodpecker's beak. He is not only a faithful worker, but a handsome fellow.

There is a story about the woodpecker that may please you.

The first woodpecker, according to the fairy stories, had some gifts that other woodpeckers seem to have lost. For instance, he could talk with man. He wished very much to be friendly with the human race.

It happened that near the home of the woodpecker there lived a fierce wizard. His castle was in the middle of a big black swamp, and whenever he walked abroad his breath poisoned every one whom he chanced to meet.

Many brave men went out to meet the wizard, but no one was able to fight against him. Whenever a stranger came along the wizard would blow his poisoned breath and kill him.

One day a knight, a very brave soldier, began to fight the wicked old wizard. He shot once, he shot twice, but still his arrows failed to do harm. The wizard hooted and laughed at the knight's poor marksmanship. The arrows glanced off the wizard's skin as if it were steel.

At last the knight had only three arrows left. He had vainly sent several dozen at the wizard. He was almost ready to give up which would have meant his death, for the bad wizard would then have certainly killed him.

Suddenly a wee small voice called down to the knight: "His heart is too hard to pierce. Shoot your arrows at his forehead."

The knight looked up, and, lo, it was the friendly woodpecker who had spoken.

After thanking the bird the knight fitted an arrow to his bow and sent it straight at the wizard's head. It gashed the flesh, and the blood began to flow. A second time the knight shot, and the arrow went still deeper. At the third shot the wizard fell dead.

Then the knight called the little woodpecker down from the tree. A drop of blood from the wizard's forehead fell upon his feathers—right on top of his head. It was magic blood, and ever since all birds of his family have had red head feathers.

Boy Scout Farmers.

More than 2,000 boy scouts of Washington, D. C., recently mobilized and marched with rakes and hoes over their shoulders to a tract of 300 acres in East Potomac park, which their Uncle Sam had donated to them for a monster vegetable garden. As they marched past the White House thus "in battle array" they were reviewed by the president and War Secretary Baker.

Dame Nature's New Suit.

Dame Nature is out
  In her gayest of clothes
Of emerald green,
  With a touch of the rose.

Her gown is the daintiest
  Ever was seen,
With its billowy ruffles
  Of feathery green.
—Philadelphia Record.

The Almond Tree.

Almonds growing on the tree have hard green shells. If they are allowed to ripen naturally this shell dries, bursts open and drops the fruit upon the ground.

Great Success.

"Did the play have a good run in the one night stands?"

"Splendid. The run was ahead of the local sheriffs every time."—Baltimore American.

QUEEN FOR A DAY.

White satin forms the trained, square necked base of this beautiful frock. What gives it distinction is a surplice black silk net tunic thrown over the ivory effect, the net being richly embroidered with silver lace, to say nothing of fringe.

The Obstacle.

"I don't know what I'm ever going to make of that son of mine," said a prominent citizen of the City of Good Will the other day. The P. C., it may be said, is a self made man, graduate of the university of hard knocks, etc. And it naturally grieves him that his son is not aggressive.

"Maybe your son hasn't found himself yet," we consoled. "Isn't he gifted in any way?"

"Gifted? I should say he is. That's the trouble. He hasn't got a darned thing that wasn't given to him!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Full of Surprises.

"I never saw a man get so much pleasure out of his motorcar as Pilkin does. It seems a never failing source of delight to him."

"That's true. Pilkin says what he enjoys most about his motorcar is the unexpectedness of the thing. It keeps him always wondering what it's going to do next."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

During the French Elections.

"Yes, I lunched with the Conservative candidate, had dinner with the Radical and coffee and liquor with the Socialist."

"And then how did you vote?"

"My dear sir, how can you ask? Of course the most simple regard for delicacy kept me from the polls altogether."—L'Illustration.

One Chair Is Enough.

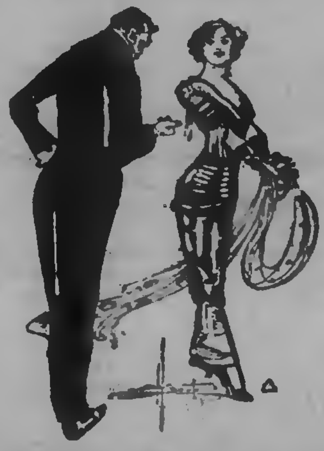
"I'll have to get you another chair for the kitchen, Katie. I see you have only one."

"One's enough, ma'am."

"But you have company some evenings, don't you, Katie?"

"Only gentlemen, ma'am."—Yonkers Statesman.

Not Quite Exhausted.



He—You are tired. Shall we sit out our dance and talk?

She—Oh, I'm not so tired as that!—Philadelphia Record.

Large doses of pills for the liver are not as efficient as small doses.
The big dose purges its way through the system fast, but does not cleanse thoroughly.
The small dose (if right) acts gently on the liver, and gives it just the slight help it needs to do its own work, and do it well.

CAPT. WILKINS DESCRIBES ONE AERIAL BATTLE

FORMER NORWOOD MAN TELLS OF BOMBING EXPEDITION.

Mr. F. W. Wilkins, of Norwood, received a letter from his son. Capt. H. O. D. Wilkins, of the Royal Flying Corps. The letter was written on the 23rd of June, and describes a bombing expedition and a fight at a dizzy height, with Hun machines, which occurred on the return trip. He states: "On the 4th, we, a formation of nine machines, went to ——, a good seventy miles over the German lines—and bombed an aerodrome located there. All was lovely and quiet. No Archie, (anti air craft gun) and no Hun machines met on the way, but coming back, about 60 miles over, we met nine Hun machines and were attacked by them. We downed five of them for certain, and maybe more, - anyway only one followed us when the fight was finished and all but one were gone. This diversion took us back over target again, as there was a west wind and then coming back we had to pass through the worst "Archie" experience we have ever had. However, all got back safely, except one poor fellow, who has since been reported a prisoner. That was a good show—was it not—seeing that we succeeded in bombing and damaging our objective and then drove off an equal number of machines, and downing the most of them, although they were faster machines than ours.

On the 7th the R.F.C. downed fifteen Hun machines and damaged five others with a loss of only one. I went over early on the 7th with four machines, and it was wonderful to see the shells bursting on the ground under us—just like tiny electric lights continually going on and off. I counted twenty-nine of our machines in the sky and only nine Huns, and they were fighting machines, while our artillery machine draft was one of over two hundred gun emplacements that day. Oh, the Hun had it properly put across him that time. Capt. Wilkins adds that his health is excellent and he likes his job. They have a tennis court and play and also enjoy bathing every day, when not otherwise too busy.

CANADIANS ARE NEARER LENS

THEY ESTABLISH POST 1500 YARDS FROM HEART OF THE TOWN.

(By Stewart Lyon)

Canadian Army Headquarters, July 20.—Early this morning Canadian troops holding the front between Avion and Lens in a flooded area established a post well to the north of any hitherto occupied. There was little retaliation from the Germans. The new post is only 1500 yards from the heart of Lens. Evidence is found everywhere that the enemy intends to hold the center of the city until his losses become unendurable. To the Canadians who are confronting this mighty offensive position the most comforting thought is that it is a salient and that from the north and south as well as the west its defenders are under fire. Their losses are very great.

Evidence recently to hand shows that one division opposing us has been burying from seventy to eighty men daily. The number of buried must be considerably less than the total daily fatalities because the larger shells often destroy the bodies of their victims so that there is no possibility of burial.

Captured documents prove that the proposal to lessen the number of dugouts in the hope of preventing men in trenches from being caught in them and forced to surrender when attacked has been adopted by the leaders of one of the enemy divisions opposite to us.

An order has been found providing for the reduction in number of dugouts from which it would appear that not more than thirty of the front line garrison is now provided with them. Others must face shell fire in the trenches so that they may be immediately available to repel an attack.

Another precautionary measure for lessening the dugout surrender is the placing of these shellers well behind the front line trenches.

Military Cross for Lieut. H- C. Gillham

Member of Old 93rd Battalion Wins Coveted Honor.

Lieut. H. C. Gillham has added more laurels to the valor of the 93rd Battalion, having been awarded the Military Cross.

The particulars for awarding him the coveted honor are given in the Gazette as follows:

> "Lieut. Harper Caulfield Gillham, his platoon held up, at great risk led a party and succeeded in silencing a gun, was wounded, but remained with men."

Lieut. Gillham came to Peterborough as signal officer of the 93rd Battalion. After being here for some time and making himself very popular with the men and officers, he asked to be transferred to the regular work and was assigned to "B" Co.

After going overseas he was again transferred to the 20th Battalion under Lt.-Col. Rogers of Grafton and it was while attached to this unit that he carried out the work so successfully and won honor not only for himself and his men but for his commanding officer and battalion.

Albert C. Kaltschmidt, now held for trial in Detroit, in connection with the Windsor and Walkerville dynamiting outrages, will be charged with plotting the destruction of the St. Clair tunnel between Port Huron and Sarnia.

In the first five and a half months of the issue War Savings certificates to the value of $8,230,000 were sold. It only requires 25 cents a month from every man, woman and child in the Dominion to produce a monthly total of $2,000,000. Organize your household, your factory, your shop, your business and help to make this total. It only needs $21.50 to buy a $25 certificate.

CITY DID HELP RECOVER BODY

ACTING MAYOR DUNCAN REPLIES TO MR. KETCHESON.

Acting Mayor Duncan was not a little put out by a criticism of the city which appeared in The Review last evening over the signature of Mr. Ketcheson. The Acting Mayor as soon as he had heard of the drowning of the late Mr. Cupitt hurried at once to the scene of the accident and took grappling irons that were in his possession and arranged with Mr. Denham and the Leonard Construction Co. for assistance in looking for the body.

Not only that but P. C. Wigg was out in a Klondike canoe all afternoon and evening and yesterday was over the scene of the accident several times rendering what assistance and making such suggestion as he could.

So far as the city officials were concerned, everything that it was possible to do was done.

THE PIANO A MEDIUM OF SELF EXPRESSION

As Capable Of Expression Of Feeling As The Violin

A Very Intimate Art Reflecting Individuality

Many people have maintained that the piano is not as highly capable of the expression of the player's mood and feelings as the violin. As a popular argument in defence of this statement they bring forth the fact that the piano has its keys laid out mechanically, that when one wants to strke middle C one simply glances over the keyboard, finds the necessary combinations of black and white keys, strikes the note, and lo, the desired effect is produced. In the case of the violin, they add, the ear of the artist must decide whether or not the note sounded is the right one. Their plea is direct contact with the instrument.

Notes and eys Are Not Music

All of which to the student of music is mere balderdash. If one's cook happens to strike A or B on a pot or pan one does nt accuse her of being musical. Yet, according to the criteron of these people who sit in hasty judgment against the beauty of tone in a piano, she is that, for she has come in direct contact with the instrument. Notes and keys are not mucic. They are the means toward the attainment of that end. One may have a sheet covered with sharps and flats and notes of every variety and not express anything that might by any stretch of imagination be called music.

Music is feeling. Men do not sit down and write quarter and half notes in any haphazard way trusting the result to divine providence. They feel first, they sing first and then they write. What Chopin and Beethoven left for posterity was not a series of notes written in perfect harmony and time. It was the expresion of some deep emotion, transmtted to the page.

Beauty of Rendition Depends Upon Interpretation

It is the interpretation of these notes that constitutes the beauty of the music, and not the instrument which produces them. A Stradivarius in the hands of an amateur can commit heinous crimes against the art of music. A low-priced second-hand piano, on the other hand, under the touch of an artist, might be capable of reaching the highest planes of that art. It is the power of interpretation on the part of the individual that counts, and not the medium through which he expreses it.

J. M. GREENE
Whose paper, read at the Edison Dealers' Convention in New York, presented Canadian musical interests.

What Ethel Leginska Thinks About The Piano

Nobody better appreaciates this than Ethel Leginska, young pianist, whose playing is the strongest argument one can offer in support of the beauty of expresion of the piano. "Piano playing," she says, "is a very intimate sort of thing, in which the player unconsciously reveals himself. It is such a small part of the whole merely to play the notes of the composition; there is so much more to piano-playing than that. The piano can express such big things; there is almost no limit to what it can be made to do. It s responsive to every thought and mood of the player. It tells the secret of the player's individuality. The sweeter and purer the nature, the more it will be revealed in the playing. The one who is mean and narrow will never achieve real success. The need of the hour is more love, sweetness, gentleness and humility. These are the qualities that win out in the long run, and these are the qualities that can be expresed on any of the instruments, provided the artist has them."

A well-known organist tells of his 'first appointment' at a church where the organ was blown by a hydraulic engine. It was an erratic mauchine, and used to leave him without wind at very critical moments. The choir became accustomed to these occassions and went on as if nothing had happened. One Sunday morning they were singing "Blest be the Tie that Binds" when the wind gave out in the second verse. The choir proceeded and presently the bellows' indicator at the keyboard showed that the wind was returning and all unconscious of the humor of it, this organist struck in at—

"This glorious hope revives
Our courage by the way."

A one-cent stamp without address or wrapper will take an American magazine or newspaper to a soldier or a sailor.

The Peterborough Music Co. have just received a large consignment of Mason & Rich pianos, specimens of the superior production of skilled craftmanship. A perfect home is that in which a phonograph is included in its furnishing. In fact any place is paradise—the home, camp, summer cottage—with one of these marvellour instruments to hand.

The advertisements on this page are those of music dealers who are co-operating in the movement for the advancement of music in every home—not by catch-penny methods, for which the caught has to pay dearly, but by legitimate business transactions, safeguarding the buying public against imposition.

The Sonora and Victrola show rooms in Heintzman Hall are peculiarly adapted to hearing to advantage the newest productions in instrumental, song and dance records. Mr. Britton, the local manager invites you to drop in and hear them.

It is told of Mendelssohn's Ruy Blas overture that contrary to the usual custom of writing the orchestral score in detached groups, i.e., outlining the string parts of the woodwing sketched in etc., Mendelssonh wrote measure by measure, filling in all the parts as he went along. This he did to show his absolute orchestrial power. Nothing was gained by it, but it showed his good technical ability.

THE DANIEL MULCAHEY VIEWPOINT CHALLENGED

The Type of Person Who Expresses a Dislike for All Classical Music, Is Jumping at Conclusions.

If one were to write down a list of the causes for various prejudices, there would appear quite near the top of the list, if not at the top, the habit of taking a single experience one has had and making a rule out of it. That is another phase of jumping at conclusions. We all know the type of person who, because he has once purchased seeds that did not grow, at a certain store, refuses to ever buy there again; or the woman who thinks of the lake as always being terribly rough because once she was seasick on a boat trip to Niagara Falls.

Does not that account for many of the sweeping derogatory statements made against classical music by the untutored? There are those who have been bored with some monotonous classical numbers and then say, "I can't stand that classical stuff." Such an experience is something like that of Nellie L. McClung's very human character Danny, whom Mrs. Francis took to the professor's piano recital. The professor began to play, running his fingers up and down the keyboard in mad succession, first loudly then softly with extended trills at frequent intervals. Danny yawned widely and asked sleepily, "When's he goin' to begin?" Mrs. Francis watched Danny eagerly. The musical sense was liable to wake up at any time but it would have to hurry for Daniel Mulcahey was liable to go to sleep any minute.

Then the type of person above referred to says with Danny. "I can,t stand that classical stuff." But wait Pearl Watson was also at the same recital. For her there was something on the programe. It was a Welsh rhapsodie he was playing and in Mrs. McClung's own style she thus describes it: "It was all there—the mountains and the rivers and the towering cliffs with glimpses of the sea where waves foam on the rocks, and sea-fowl wheel and scream in the wind, and then a bit of homely melody as the country-folk drive home in the moonlight, singing as only the Welsh can sing, the songs of the heart; songs of love and home, songs of death and sorrowing, that stab with sudden sweetness. A child cries somewhere in the dark, cries for his mother who will come no more. Then a burst of patriotic fire, as the people fling defiance at a conquering foe, and hold the mountain passes till the last man falls. But the glory of the fight and the march of many feet trail oft into a wailing chant—the death song of the brave men who died. The widow mourns, and the little children weep, comfortless in their mountain home, and the wind rushes through the forest, and the river foams furiously down the mountains, falling in billows of lace over the rocks, and the sun shines over all, cold and pitiless."

"Why Pearlie Watson, what are you crying for?" Mrs. Francis whispered severely. Danny lay asleep on Pearl's knees and her tears fell fast on his tangled curls.

You see the difference? One must not condemn a thing until one knows it. Classical music must not be judged by any one hearing of a few unattractive numbers. It is almost inconceivable that anyone could hear Paderewski's Minuet in G well played on a good piano. Beethoven's Minuet in G No. 2 on the violin. Drdla's Souvenir. Venezia E. Napoli by Liszt, and other such compositions, and then include them all in a list of disliked classical music.

Pinned beneath his engine, Sherman Slater begged rescuers to despatch him with an axe. Opiates were given and after two hours he was got to Peoria Hospital, where he may possibly recover.

INTERESTING BRIEFS.

Snce the war the Russian musical papers have had quite a good deal of attention devoted to the three celebrated composers, Skryabin, Lyodof, and Taneyof. "Russian Weeks" have been held in Britain, during which Russian compositions have been featured on the musical programmes. Prominent on these programmes have been noticed works by Rachmaninoff and Rimsky-Korsakoff.

The number of hairs in a violin bow was formerly from 80 to 100 in France; but now it is customary to have the hair ribbon broader, and therefore requires 175 to 250 single hairs. These must be at least 26 inches long. Tourte bestowed great care on the selection of bow-hair, preferring the French horse-hair. A great deal of bow-hair comes from Russian horses.

A musical critic is thus described by "Punch":—

There was a J. W. D.,
Who thought a composer to be;
But his muse would not budge
So he set up as judge
Over better composers than he.

That the success of a singer embarking upon an operatic career will be determned very largely by his or her physical strength, providing, of course, that the other factors are there in the desired degree is the contention of Madame Francis Alda who says:—"No one knows what the physical strain is, how hard the work and study are. In front of you is a sea of highly intelligent and cultured people, who for years have been trained in the best traditions of the opera. They pay the highest prices paid anywhere for entertainment. They are entitled to the best. To face such an audience and maintain the high traditions of the house through three hours of a complicated modern score is a musical, dramatic, and intellectual feat that demands first of all a superb physical condition."

NORTH AMERICAN INDIAN FOLK MUSIC

1,100 Song Collected for the Bureau of Amercan Ethnology by Miss Frances Densmore

Until recently few people were aware of the fact that the North American Indian had a song literature of his own, and by no means a negligible one. We regarded the music of the Indian as consisting of a weird battle cry, an unrhythmic, impromptu hymn of praise, or a crude chant that the Indian mother used to rock her papoose to sleep.

It was with considerable surprise therefore, that we learned that Mss Frances Densmore had collected 1,100 songs for the Bureau of American Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution. These songs she recorded on an especially constructed phonograph that she took into the field. They were taken directly from the Indian Songs, with all their native charecteristics and peculiarities. Two books by Miss Densmore on Hippewa music are published, another on Sioux music is in press, while others on the Music of the Utes, Mandan and Hidasta are being prepared.

Supreme Court Justice Crossey has decided that no enemy aliens shall be permitted to apply for naturalization during the war. Many Germans made application for second papers the day war was declared.

Are You an Asset to Canada—
or are You a Liability ?

ARE you helping to win the War ? Or could Canada put up a better fight without you ?

Are you working—saving—paying—to back up the men at the front ? Or are you loafing—wasting—spending on selfish indulgences the money that should be loaned to the Nation ?

Man-power is at a premium ! The time and strength of every man in Canada should be devoted whole-heartedly to really useful work—work that will help, directly or indirectly, in the Struggle.

Food is short the world over ! Every housewife in Canada should devote herself earnestly to the problem of conserving it—of feeding our people well, yet economically and without waste.

Everyone should save—and lend the savings to the nation !

Canada needs every dollar you can invest in War Savings Certificates, and for every $21.50 you loan now, she will repay you $25.00 at the end of three years—or you can get your money back at any time. Certificates are issued in denominations of $25, $50 and $100, which may be purchased at $21.50, $43 and $86 respectively, at any Bank or Money Order Post Office. 25

Dr. Carrel's Wife Was Only a Day Behind the Germans.

FIRST AMBULANCE OVER.

An Appeal From the Trenches For the Children and Sick In Noyon After the Retreat of the Germans From the City Recently.

In her letter of appeal for clothing and food Mme. Alexis Carrel, wife of Dr. Carrel, thus describes her entrance into a city a day after it had been retaken by the British-French soldiers:

"On Sunday the news of the German retreat from Noyon reached me, and I pushed to Ribecourt, at four kilometers distance. There I found that the bridges had been blown up. Instead of lingering, I returned, as I had seen the cavalry fording the stream.

MME. ALEXIS CARREL.

"However, on the morning of Monday, the 19th, I asked our head surgeon for an ambulance, but he refused, as he suspected my motives and did not think it necessary or sensible for me to be killed. I then went to the chauffeur and ordered the ambulance out on the road and filled it with what I found that seemed necessary and then urged the man to drive it. He answered me that we could not go unless we had the necessary permits.

"I replied that this was no time to wait for permits. In a very short time I reached the bridge which was being temporarily put up, watched the work for twenty minutes, then dashed up to this structure, and am glad to say mine was the first ambulance to cross. I joined the heavy artillery, and when shouted at by a sentinel I answered 'Service, service,' and passed on with the artillery. We had to wait for a second bridge to be constructed and then found ourselves in Noyon, only twenty-four hours after the last Germans had moved away.

"Every woman between the ages of fourteen and thirty had been carried off by Germans nine days before the retreat began. Thus all these poor people whom we found crowded in the cellars had hideous tales to tell.

"None of the French civil population had had any meat of any kind for seventeen months. They had lived on black bread and rice. Many had died in their struggle to keep alive, and the mortality among the children had been terrible. The bodies of those who had died had been kept for five days unburied in the midst of the living.

"In the orphan asylum, in a small room, the beds were so close together that they touched, and on these beds were children who had slept without mattresses, pillows or covering since the month of December, in their clothes, unwashed, unkempt and uncared for. No words can describe their condition.

"The wounded French who were still in the hospital had not been cared for and were being slowly taken into our own hospital at Compiegne, which is twenty-three kilometers from Noyon. The men who were brought in at midnight had been reduced to the last gasp."

Oven Efficiency.

Some women find a use for both their range oven and a small removable oven at the same time. When baking cookies, set the small oven on the front of the stove and use both ovens. You will be through in a short time.

When you want to cook one kind of food slowly and another rapidly, set the small oven on at the back of the stove and use it for slow heat. Keep the range oven hot. In this way you may bake custards, apples or light bread as slowly as desired and at the same time be cooking pies or biscuits in a hot oven.

Newest Hats.

Fabrics are greatly used by the milliners, and whole hats, crowns and brims are fashioned of crepe de chine, georgette, chiffon, satin, taffeta or whatever the designer happens to fancy. Georgette and crepe de chine are perhaps more used than any of the other materials, always excepting nets and laces, and a hat entirely covered with crape and showing straw only in the facing of the wide brim is sometimes untrimmed save for a drapery and knot of the crape. Other crape covered models are flower trimmed or feather trimmed.

Saving Gas.

A gas saver and comfort in cooking on gas stoves is to place a sheet of zinc or sheet iron on top of the stove the size of the stove top. One lighted burner will heat the entire sheet and serve to cook as many articles of food as there is room for vessels. It also is cleanly, protecting the stove from the results of boiling over, and the sheet is much easier cleaned than the several burners are when not so protected.

Importance of Coal.

Coal seems to be rather an uninteresting thing. Who would imagine that the great, ugly, black lumps could afford anyone a subject worthy of study! And yet this same coal has given civilization many of its greatest possessions, says a writer in St. Nicholas. The beautiful pink scarf that your sister wears when she goes to a party is colored with dyes that come from coal! The gas used to illuminate and to heat our homes is a product of the distillation of coal. Valuable chemicals, such as benzene, naphthalene, and toluene are coal products. The tar used in paving our streets and protecting our roofs from rain is also a by-product of the commercial treatment of coal; and, finally, aniline, the basis of aniline dyes and coloring materials, is one of the valuable chemicals contained in coal.

Coal is indeed one of the most complex materials to be found in all nature. To learn what it is, we must go back to the dim, geological ages. The luxuriant vegetation of these past times, untrampled by human feet and uncut by human hands, year after year grew, bloomed, faded, and decayed, forming deep beds of rotted, woody fiber. By degrees certain gases, such as hydrogen and oxygen, were partly lost from the mass of vegetable material. Pressure and heat converted this material into what we know as coal.

Only in comparatively recent years has man discovered the uses of the hidden treasure which nature so laboriously constructed for him. The first load of coal brought to market early in the nineteenth century was considered a curiosity, so far as its value as fuel was concerned! Little by little, chemists learned about the great forces and the invaluable chemicals stored in the great coal deposits of the earth.

When coal is heated in air-tight iron vessels, illuminating gas is first driven off by the heat. Then a black, vicious liquid, called coal tar, is distilled and condensed, leaving coke behind. The coal tar contains valuable chemicals, such as benzene and toluene, from which are obtained aniline and other rare compounds invaluable to the arts and sciences. So coal is indeed a great gift to mankind. A score of volumes could scarcely begin to tell about its wonderful and varied uses.

Curious Jewel-Box.

A curious jewel-box made of fossil ivory by the natives of Siberia is on exhibition at the Museum of Natural History in New York. The sides and top are composed of flat pieces of ivory and are carefully fitted together, the corners being dovetailed. They have carved in them scenes of the northland, the front side representing a hunter returning from the chase riding a reindeer. The box is made from the tusks of mammoths that have been buried for ages beneath the ice in Siberia. Some of these tusks weigh from 200 to 390 pounds. Elephants' tusks furnished the ivory for the Jews. Solomon made his throne of it.

HOW TO TRAIN YOUR VINES.

An Expert Gives Home Gardeners Advice About Caring For Squashes and Plants That Naturally Trail—Soy Beans as a Substitute For Meats.

As usually grown cucumbers are planted in hills four or six feet apart and allowed to spread out along the ground. But in small gardens cucumbers should not be grown unless they are to be trained upon poles or trellises.

When they are trained to climb the vines may be fifteen or eighteen inches apart. A useful method is to plant them on the south side of the garden fence so that the vines may grow up on strings to the top of the fence. In training the vines tie them with soft cotton yarn, and if large, slicing cucumbers are grown it may be necessary to support the fruit with loops of tape.

Since cucumbers thrive in rich soil a suggested method is to plant them around a leaky barrel, training them up the sides. In the barrel should be placed two bushels of manure, and water should be frequently poured in the barrel. Leaking out, it will fertilize the plants round the bottom.

Cucumbers may be planted up to July.

Summer squashes are bushy and need less space than the winter variety. When the vines are allowed to run along the ground they may be planted in hills four feet apart, whereas the hills of winter vines should be planted eight to ten feet apart.

Three or four squash vines will supply a family. When vines are allowed to run it is well to throw a spadeful of earth over each vine every three or four feet at a leaf joint. Where it is thus covered it will put out roots, offsetting any injury to the vine nearer the main root.

Inasmuch as it is not safe to set out eggplant in the garden much before the middle of June and because the plant requires a long growing season, the seeds should be sown indoors. One-third of an ounce of seed will produce enough plants to make a row 100 feet long. These seeds are usually sown thickly in rows in the seed boxes, and when the plants are large enough to handle they are transplanted to flower pots filled with rich soil.

From Japan, home of some of the most intensive farming the world ever saw, comes the soy bean. Imported first as a crop to build up the fertility of American soil, it is now claiming a place in the American diet.

Soy beans will not grow well in soil where they have never grown before unless that soil is impregnated with certain microscopical germs which the roots must have—that is, for soy beans the soil must be inoculated. This is simple. All that is needed is to get a little soy bean culture or some soil which has produced soy beans. This culture is sold by seedsmen. It is cheap, and a handful is enough for a bean patch.

RIDING TOGS.

Pointers About the Spring Models For Horsewomen.

Leaving out the horse, the saddle and bridle and the riding crop—all substantial items in the equipping of Miss Debutante for her spring canter in the park—a smart outfit will cost about $75 or $80, this including riding habit, hat, silk riding skirt, heavy gloves and specially made riding boots. Is it any wonder that horseback riding is a sport indulged in only by the rich? Any girl who can provide herself with a sport skirt and coat and a bag of golf clubs can indulge in the fashionable game of golf if she lives within trolley distance of a public golf course. Roads or bridle paths are free to anybody, but only the few can afford to use them. Riding is a sport which demands the utmost of conventionality in its equipment. Everything about the riding costume must be flawlessly correct and in accordance with the canons of good form. There is no prettier sight on a spring day than a pretty girl riding down the leafy bridle path under budding spring trees, but there is no doubt about it, she does represent a deal of money.

For spring there are coat and breeches riding habits of Oxford waterproofed cloth or of checked worsted, the breeches re-enforced with buckskin and chamois, the coat partly rubber faced. Such a suit costs about $40, bought ready made. One may pay up to $100 for a custom made suit. The riding sailor of fine straw, in black or dark green, costs about $1; heavy riding gloves about $2. For a smartly made silk riding skirt one must give $6. Riding boots of fine leather, stiff in the leg, supple over the foot, cost $15. One may economize a bit hereby wearing puttees, costing about $4, over one's ordinary laced sport shoes, but of course the riding boots are most desirable and lend not a little of its complete perfection to the costume.

Beige taffeta makes the smartest kind of a tailored suit, especially when it is elaborately stitched with heavy silk of the same shade, revers, peplum and cuffs. The turban is one of the ever fashionables, crisp green foliage and a splash of flowers in color.

MODISH EFFECT.

Hand Work on Blouses.

Hand made blouses were never more in demand, and a particularly chic example shows an original shoulder yoke continued in side pieces, which, reaching to the waist, give a certain shapeliness to the whole and at the same time allows for a seam arranged in pretty openwork fashion and so adding considerably to the decorativeness of the garment. Narrow front pieces, little more than strips indeed, secured with buttons and buttonholes down the center, are again added, the material between them and the yoke side piece—if the term may be pardoned—being slightly gathered to the shoulder yoke, where again the openwork seam is arranged, as on the juncture of the somewhat deep cuff on the ample bishop sleeve.

For a Rainy Afternoon.

When the day is rainy and the kiddies are peevish and you have exhausted all your ways of entertaining them pull out the sewing machine, unthread the needle and remove the bobbin. Then let the youngsters take turns at making weird designs on thin paper. Fold a square of paper diagonally once and then again and a third time. Then, placing the point of the triangle under the needle, let the youngster guide the needle haphazard about the triangle. When unfolded it will be found that the square is filled with a beautiful, symmetrical design. Care should be taken that the needle is not allowed to run into the too eager little fingers.

MONTREAL, June 15th, 1917 (List 18).

OUR NOTABLE VISITORS.

Leading Public Men of New Zealand Visit Canada.

The New Zealand party which has been attending the Imperial War Council in Great Britain is returning to the Antipodes by way of Canada. Our Dominion has never entertained a more notable group from another overseas portion of the British Empire. The party includes the Prime Minister, Sir Joseph Ward, Mrs. and Miss Massey, Mr. F. D. Thomson, private secretary; Mr. H. D. Browne, private secretary, and Mr. J. Grigg, a member of the New Zealand Board of Agriculture.

Right Hon. William Ferguson Massey, Prime Minister of New Zealand since 1912, when he succeeded Sir Joseph Ward, is an Irishman by birth, but he emigrated to New Zealand after his parents in 1870. There, in that newest of the new lands of the Empire, he quickly made headway as a farmer near Auckland, in the northern island. The frozen mutton trade took an immense step forward in his early years, and getting a competence he soon got into the local Government. He became a member of the Road Board, Chairman of the School Committee, and President of the Auckland Agricultural and Pastoral Association. Mr. Massey entered the New Zealand Parliament in 1894, and was chief Opposition Whip in 1895. In his twenty-two years' membership in the House of Representatives, Mr. Massey has been leader of the Opposition to the Liberals, led latterly by Sir Joseph Ward, creator of the Reform party, and Prime Minister. He became Opposition leader in 1903, and Premier for the first time in 1911. When he became head of the Opposition he had but a dozen followers; in the next campaign he gained four more, in 1908 he had twenty-six, and in 1911 a majority of the eighty seats. In 1914, however, the Opposition under Sir Joseph Ward succeeded in capturing almost forty seats and the tenure of the Prime Ministership by Mr. Massey seemed shaky. But the war had been in progress several months and the times called for union rather than division. The result was the formation of a coalition Government, in which Mr. Massey is Prime Minister and Sir Joseph Ward Minister of Finance.

Sir Joseph George Ward, K.C.M.G., with whom is Lady Ward, also of Irish extraction, was born in 1857 in Australia. His parents settled in the southern island of New Zealand when he was three. He started as messenger boy in the Postal and Telegraph Department, in which he afterwards became Minister. Then he got into the railway service. From 1906 to 1912 he was Prime Minister in the Dominion after having been Minister of Finance, Lands, Income Tax, Electoral Departments. His home is in Wellington, on the channel between the two islands. Sir Joseph has always been outspoken and plain in his attitude on colonial contribution to naval defence. In 1912 he said: "I am in favor of standing by the British navy instead of sectional navies," and he added that "the time was coming when the motherland would see the necessity of making a change in the constitution which would admit representation from the overseas domains and would enable the motherland as the predominant partner to be the controlling party in an altered constitution for the preservation of the Dominions as well as the motherland itself."

Shawanoe's Flag.

Through the instrumentality of Mr. Norman Gurd, the flag that was presented at the close of the war of 1812 to Shawanoe, the aide and friend of Tecumseh, was deposited for safe keeping in the Sarnia Public Library early in 1916. For many years this priceless relic was kept by the Indians at the Kettle Point reservation on Lake Huron.

HONEST ABE, U. S. M.

They Want All Kinds of Poetry Along His Route.

VERSES FOR HICKS FAMILY.

Comforts the Family of Farmer Green on the Loss of Their Baby. Grinds Out a Poem For a Would Be Suicide.

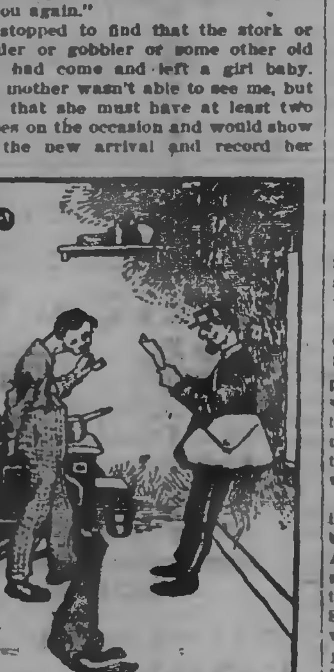
By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, [illegible], by Associated Literary Press.]

I HAD not driven a mile on my route the other morning when I met Farmer George Hicks going the other way, and he called out to me:

"Abe, stop at the house when you get there. If you are to drive past and if you don't give that old poetry machine of yours a twist I'll never speak to you again."

I stopped to find that the stork or gander or gobbler or some other old bird had come and left a girl baby. The mother wasn't able to see me, but said that she must have at least two verses on the occasion and would show me the new arrival and record her



"ABE, IT'S THE MOST AFFECTING THING I EVER READ OR HEARD OF."

thanks later on. I therefore sat down and dashed off the following and hurried on my way:

Good Farmer Hicks and his good wife
  Have got another daughter,
Though they had three before she came,
  [illegible] really hadn't orter.

But bless the kid, the little dear—
  Aye, bless her to her tootses;
May she be happy all her life
  And dwell among the roses.

I was told that there was sadness at Farmer Green's, and I found him at the gate with a solemn look on his face. As I greeted him he said:

"Abe, our baby was buried yesterday. You'll have to come in and give us some poetry. Ma wants something to frame and hang in the parlor."

I went in, and for twenty minutes I listened to the tales of Franky's smartness and the predictions of what he would have been had he lived on, and then I wrote:

The doctor said it measles was,
  And that they had struck in,
And that our Franky must depart
  To lands without a sin.

He died at 10 o'clock at night—
  The winds did round us roar;
He spread his wings and flew away
  To brighter, better shore.

It wasn't poetry to live forever, but just long enough to comfort and console for a year or two, and it [illegible] agreed by husband and wife that nothing could have taken the place of it.

There was something less sorrowful awaiting me at Farmer Snow's. In a fence corner just beyond the house I found Jim Davis, his hired man, and he stopped me to ask:

About to Commit Suicide.

"Abe, are you willing to save me from a suicide's grave?"

"Perfectly willing, Jim."

"Mebbe you know that for the last year I've been in love with Sarah Stone?"

"I suspected it."

"Well, I don't know whether she loves me or not, but I think she does. I want something to sort o' break her down and make her confess it. What's an ode, Abe?"

"A yard and a half of poetry praising some girl."

"I thought it was, and I want one. I must either have it or commit suicide."

Under the circumstances I had to beat Uncle Sam out of twenty minutes' time and grind out the following:

Her hair is blond, her eyes are blue,
  Her lips are cherry red,
Her teeth are white as driven snow,
  And none as yet have shed.

She moves around like a gazelle,
  Her voice is like a song;
Her feet are solid under her,
  And not so very long.

The sun is kissing of her cheeks,
  The moon is doos delight
In shining on her Grecian chin
  On almost ev'ry night.

Oh, maiden fair, my heart it beats
  For thee, and thee alone;
Be mine—be mine, I thee implore,
  My angel, Sarah Stone.

The turtledoves will coo for us—
  We'll have our shady bower;
No thunderstorms will ever come
  To turn sweet milk to sour.

When I had finished the above and read it to Jim I found tears in his eyes, and as soon as he could control his voice he grasped my hand and said:

"Abe, it's the most affecting thing I ever read or heard of. If that don't melt Sarah's heart and cause her to promise to be mine then she isn't the sorter gal to be my wife. Say, I can't thank you enough. I feel that I can never reward you as you deserve. By thunder, if you don't go to heaven when you die none of us ever will!"

I got down to Henry Jed's place just in time to witness a marriage and be hauled in to lunch with the guests. After the ceremony I tried to make a sneak, but it was no go. I had to come to time with a poem and be told that Shakespeare hadn't the ghost of show with me in the county.

Mr. Jason Morgan and Miss Debora Jed,
They stood before the preacher and most properly were wed;
And when they had been hitched for life the preacher he did say
That 'twas about the slickest job he'd done for many a day

A few remarks he'd like to make, and he sought Jason's eye,
And told him he must hustle now and make the soil to fly;
The more he sang and whistled the better he would work,
And the harder he did labor, why, the more the beans and pork.

He gave him kindly warning to stick to good root beer,
With a barrel of hard cider to finish out

To run in debt as little as farmer ever could
And pay the same tomorrow in good dry

He said to keep on courting the gal he'd made his wife,
And thus prevent the quarrels that enter

To kiss her every morning, and often through the day,
And let her see that Cupid was leading

To never mind if trials came, but face
  'em bold and brave,
And not to spend his hard earned cash
  when possible to save;
To be honest to his fellow men, and to

And to his many children be a loved and honored paw.

And to the bride, whom he had kissed,
  he had a word to say—
'Twas just a word, most kindly said, in his most kindly way;
But let us hope it was enough, and she will e'er beware
And do no walking in the path that's

To my ears there comes the shrilling of the fairy horns, the trumpet call of the legions of the marching night, the fifing of the armies of the breeze and"—

Heard Something.

One summer evening a miller was leaning over his garden gate, facing the road, enjoying his pipe, when a conceited young farmer happened to be passing. The miller in a friendly tone said:

"Good evening, George."

"I didn't speak," said George gruffly.

"Oh," said the miller. "I thought you did, but it must have been your ears flapping."—Chattanooga Times.

A Helpful Plan.

"Why do you always say that you appreciate classical music when you know you don't care a rap for it?" we ask of our friend.

"No," said the innocent bystander, who was nursing his elbow. "The horse scared the man who was learning to drive the car."—Detroit Free Press.

Skinny's Anti-climactic Swipe.

The score was 1 to 0, and the Stars had two men out.
It looked as if the finish no longer was in doubt,
For it was Skinny Lindsay who came up
  then to bat,
And the Comets felt complacent; there was no doubt of that.

Then Spider Watson, pitching, uncoiled
  his awkward length,
He sent the balls in whizzing, with most uncommon strength,
And Skinny stood there watching, with a set, determined face
That showed his one ambition was to circle to third base.

But Spider kept on working till the record stood three-two,
And Skinny set his teeth until his compressed lips were blue.
Then the ball came wiggling toward him,
  and Skinny swooped and missed,
And the Comets chalked another mark upon their victory list.

AN HISTORIC SOCIETY

REACHES BACK TO BEGINNING OF LITERATURE IN CANADA.

His Excellency the Marquis of Lorne Suggested the Formation of the Royal Society of Canada in 1882, and the Organization Has Fully Justified His Hopes for Its Future.

THIRTY-SIX years ago on the invitation of our then Governor-General, his Excellency the Marquis of Lorne, a few gentlemen prominent in Literature and Science designated by him as provisional officers, met Dec. 29th to consider a memorandum from him relating to the formation of "an Institute, Academy, or Society for the promotion of Literature and Science in the Dominion of Canada." It was unanimously decided to suggest to his Excellency a provisional basis for the constitution of such society, some of the more prominent features being that the title of the society upon the sanction of her Majesty Queen Victoria should be The Royal Society of Canada for the Promotion of Literature and Science within the Dominion; that the members be persons resident in the Dominion of Canada or in Newfoundland who had published original works or memoirs of merit or had rendered eminent services to literature or to science; and that the society should consist of two departments, representing literature and science respectively, divided into four sections, namely (1) French literature, with history, archæology, etc.; (2) English literature, with history, archæology, etc.; (3) mathematical, chemical, and physical sciences; (4) geological and biological sciences. It was also agreed that the number of members in each section be limited to twenty (at a later period increased to forty); and, further, that the original members be nominated by his Excellency, that the first meeting of the society be held at such time and place as his Excellency might appoint, that the headquarters of the society be in Ottawa, and that it shall hold at least one general meeting annually at such times and places as might be determined. These and some other suggestions relating to the society having been approved by his Excellency and other preliminaries having been arranged by the Provisional Council the new society held its first meeting in the railway committee room, Parliament Buildings, Ottawa, on Thursday, May 25th, 1882, and started on what now may be fairly called its long and honorable career.

Following are the names of the officers for the organization and the first session of the society. A generation has passed since that historic day and it is a melancholy, though not a surprising fact, as they were all no longer young, that all of them have passed away. Canadians will be able to recall their place individually in the educational, literary, scientific or political world: President, J. W. Dawson, C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S.; Vice-President, Hon. P. J. O. Chauveau, LL.D.; Presidents of Sections—(1), J. M. Le Moine, Faucher de St. Maurice, M. P.; (2), Daniel Wilson, LL.D.; Goldwin Smith, M. A.; (3), T. Sterry Hunt, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S.; Charles Carpmael, M.A.; (4), A. R. C. Selwyn, LL.D., F.R.S., George Lawson, Ph.D., LL.D.; Hon. Secretary J. G. Bourinot, F.S.S.

It would be interesting to give also the names of the sixty members present at the first meeting, but it is not possible. A few are with us still, among whom are the veterans, Colonel G. T. Denison, of Toronto, and Sir James A. Grant, of Ottawa, but the great majority, like Louis H. Frechette, George Paxton Young, Alpheus Todd, and Principal Grant, live only in the memory of their countrymen, and the records of their time.

At the formal opening of the first session his Excellency, accompanied by the Marchioness of Lorne, Princess Louise, in the presence of a large number of representative citizens of Ottawa, welcomed the members of the society, and outlined the object aimed at in its institution. It was an attempt to have meeting at the capital from time to time a body of men whose achievements would entitle them to recognize and encourage the appearance of merit in literature, and to lead in science and the useful application of its discoveries. The meeting together of eminent men [illegible] contribute to unite on a common ground those best able to express the thoughts and illustrate the history of the time. It would serve to strengthen emulation among Canadians themselves, for the discussion of progress made in other lands must breed the desire to push the intellectual development of [illegible] own. "Our countrymen," he augured, "will recognize that in a body of gentlemen drawn from all our Provinces and conspicuous for their ability there will be a centre around which to rally. They will see that the welfare and strength of growth of this association shall be impeded by no small jealousies, no carping spirit of detraction, but shall be nourished by a noble motive common to the citizens of the republic of letters and to the students of the free world of nature; namely, the desire to prove that their land is not insensible to the glory which springs from numbering among its sons those whose success will become the heritage of mankind."

Whether this high ideal outlined by his Excellency has been fully realised we shall not now undertake to determine. It is enough at present to recognize that the institution which he helped to found and of which, as the first President, Dr. J. D. Dawson, happily observed, he had undoubtedly a personal as well as a hereditary right to be the patron, has stilled the fears of those who regarded the enterprise as premature, and that, like some tender plant too early exposed to the frost of the Canadian spring, it would be nipped and perish. The society has lived and flourished for thirty-five years, and as its yearly transactions show, has done much to promote and record national progress in literature and science. Notwithstanding all that has been done in these directions, it is to be presumed that the same mind that was in the first president continues in the society as a whole: "In Canada at present, whether in science, in literature, in art, or in education, we look around in vain for anything that is fully ripe. We see only the rudiments and beginnings of things, but if these are healthy and growing, we should regard them with hope, should cherish and nurture them as germs of greater things in the future."

AS OTHERS SEE US.

Two American Opinions of Conscription.

We are so fond of expressing opinions about the various happenings of American political life that we are interested occasionally to read what they say about us. Here are a couple of editorials from leading American newspapers on the recent conscription announcement of Sir Robert Borden. The Syracuse Post-Standard said:

"The Dominion Government has determined to draft soldiers in all the provinces. Canada has raised nearly 400,000 soldiers by the volunteer method. The record is splendid, but the volunteer system has nevertheless fallen short of success. It has not laid its hand with equal weight upon all the provinces. It is not because Canadians shrank from conscription as something undemocratic, as Champ Clark does, that they have clung to volunteering. It has been fear of the French of Quebec, who have no liking for war. They have not volunteered, and Canada has been afraid to impress them. The Borden Government has decided that the time for this timidity is past. The French-Canadians must fight for Great Britain and France. The Dominion has still 365,000 men who are of military age and ability. Of these it is estimated that 150,000 are more needed in the pursuits of peace than of war. At least 200,000 will be available under conscription to bear arms against Germany. If so many are enlisted Canada will have furnished one soldier to twelve in its population for service overseas."

The New York Herald said: "In large measure Canada's "slacker" problem is the problem of Quebec—in plainer language, the problem of the French-Canadian. Few residents of other parts of the Dominion eligible for service have failed to enlist; in Quebec the situation has been different. While a number of French-Canadians have joined the colors and have given good account of themselves at the front, the mass of the residents of Quebec have been indifferent when not openly hostile. The hostility is at bottom religious, and is directed towards France, not Great Britain. In many instances, particularly in small towns, the villages and the country districts, church influence has kept men from enlisting. Supplementing this more or less openly hostile influence has been the indifference resulting from the nationalist movement headed by Henri Bourassa. The adoption of a law providing for universal service with conscription doubtless will bring Quebec's quota up to what it should be, and without trouble. The French-Canadian is patriotic and he will obey the law."

He Talks Real English.

Several of Mr. Balfour's hearers have noted with interest that he speaks with only a trace of what we, absurdly enough, are wont to call an "English accent." All but a few, a very few, of his words he pronounces just about as they are pronounced by those of us who have had a decent amount of schooling and have not passed too much of our lives in parts of the country sufficiently isolated to develop—and maintain—a distinctive variant of "American accent" as the British describe Canadian speech.

There are not many of us, indeed, who enunciate as clearly and carefully as does Mr. Balfour, and if hard pressed we would probably have to confess that therein his "accent" is "English," for a good many of his countrymen show the same admirable peculiarity, but that isn't what is usually meant by "English accent." At any rate, Mr. Balfour agrees with ourselves in making "here" and "there" monosyllables they ought to be, and if he divides "issues" with a longer pause between its parts than is familiar to us, that may be not "English," but "Balfour."

Of course, the way he talks is English, not "English," and it ought to be Canadian; and it is he, and men like him, not the people who talk one or another British dialect, whom the ambitious Canadians should try to imitate. Those who, in or out of "society," talk with a marked "English accent," simply talk bad English, and deserve either ridicule or pity, according to the circumstances of their education.

Canada's Saw Timber.

Canada's timber resources are the third largest in the world, according to official reports compiled at Ottawa. The Dominion has a supply of from 500,000,000,000 to 800,000,000,000 feet board measure, covering an area of approximately 250,000,000 acres. This estimate, which is about half of the wooded area of the Dominion, refers only to saw timber. Material suitable for pulpwood, firewood, and poles is not included.

Rhode Island fishermen have netted a number of sharks near the beach where Newport society bathes.

BOWSER'S UNCLE JOHN

THE Bowsers were sitting on the front steps to take the evening air when the telephone rang in a peremptory way, and Mr Bowser went in to answer it and was greeted with—

"Hello—is that you, Sammy?"

"What do you want, sir?" was demanded.

"I want Bowser—Sammy Bowser. Is that him at the phone?"

"Sir, I am Mr. Bowser."

"Glad of it. Howdy, Sammy?"

"If you do not address me more respectfully I shall shut you off."

"Come now, Sammy, don't get hot under the collar. Let your Uncle John have his little joke."

"What do you mean?"

"I'm your Uncle John, one of your mother's brothers. I live in Wisconsin, but am here on business. You have probably forgotten me, but I've kept track of you through the papers. Been going to write you a hundred different times, but have always put it off. Meant to have got over this evening and surprised you, but will drop in tomorrow evening in time for dinner. Haven't seen you since the day you were married. How's the wife?"

"Do you mean that you are one of my uncles?" asked Mr. Bowser.

"Cert, my boy. It don't flatter me that you can't remember your Uncle John, though I never saw you often in the long ago. How do the rest of our tribe come on?"

Mr. Bowser couldn't remember on his life if he had ever had an Uncle John, but concluded to take the chances, and the man at the other end of the wire was told that he would be made welcome. Of course Mrs. Bowser wanted to know all about it when the talk was closed, and when the particulars had been related she mused for awhile and then said:

"HE WAS A SLICK, OILY, GABBY MAN."

"Seems to me that you ought to remember if your mother had a brother named John."

"But she had half a dozen brothers, and it's twenty years since I saw any of 'em. I believe one or two did go west."

"How did he open the conversation?"

"By calling me Sammy. He wouldn't have done that unless he was a relative. He'll be over tomorrow evening, and we can see what sort of a man he is."

"I should be on my guard if I were you."

"On my guard about what?"

"He may not be your Uncle John at all. He may take that way to borrow money of you. You know that there are all sorts of slick games being worked."

"Woman, do you wish to insult me?" exclaimed Mr. Bowser. "Am I such a fool that a stranger can pass himself off as my uncle?"

"But you have been taken in and done for so many times, you know."

"What! What! I have been taken in and done for—I, Bowser! When? Where? How? I deny that I have ever been a victim to anybody. Produce your proofs or stand convicted!"

"Well, let us hope that this man will turn out all right," she said, realizing that she had gone too far on the other tack.

"Of course he will turn out all right. How can he turn out any other way? That's just like you—suspicious of everybody. I don't believe you fully trust your own mother. I'd like to find one man in this world that you wouldn't put down as a double dyed scoundrel."

Arrival of Uncle John.

Mrs. Bowser said no more, though she had thoughts, and after a few minutes Mr. Bowser got over his choler and began remembering about all his relations. It was agreed that a nice dinner should be prepared for Uncle John and that he should be invited to pass two or three days with them.

At 4 o'clock the next afternoon, two hours before Mr. Bowser was expected home, Uncle John rang the bell. He was a man of forty. He was a slick, oily, gabby man. He wore loud clothes and there was an aroma of horse about him.

"And this must be Sammy's wife?" he said as he was admitted. "Well, well. The last time I saw you you were a girl bride. I remember how it rained that morning and how Sammy was half an hour late."

(Mental memo. made by Mrs. Bowser: She was married in the evening, and it didn't rain at all.)

"After talking with Sammy over the wire last night," continued the uncle, "I tried to figure out what his age must be. I make it about fifty-eight. How does he bear his age?"

(Another memo.: He had the age nine years too much.)

Mrs. Bowser distrusted the man on sight, but as he was Mr. Bowser's Uncle John she did her best to entertain him. In his conversation he made slip after slip, until she had no less than ten recorded against him, but she gave him plenty of rope. He informed her that he was a dealer in horses and related many particulars of his career and family. In all the conversation he did not mention his name. He simply referred to himself as Uncle John.

Mr. Bowser came home full of curiosity, and there was a great shaking of hands. Uncle John was accepted at once. He slapped Sammy on the back, and Sammy slapped him. He related many things that Sammy had done when a youth which the doer couldn't recall, but didn't dispute. At the dinner table Mrs. Bowser plumply asked for his name. He halted and hesitated and finally gave it as Burt. Mr. Bowser was laughing and didn't catch on. His mother's name was Stevens. If Uncle John was her brother his name should be Stevens too. It was now plain to Mrs. Bowser that the fellow was a fraud, but she made no change in her demeanor.

Dinner over, the two men sat down to smoke their cigars, while she saw to the clearing up. An hour later, as she was ready to sit down and help entertain the relative, she heard a few words that sent her upstairs instead. Fifteen minutes later Mr. Bowser came up. He had $100 in cash in his dresser and he was after the money. She looked at him inquiringly, and he said:

"Uncle John has a snap on hand and if I put this hundred in I double it in three days."

"How kind of your uncle! Are you sure of the relationship?"

"Am I sure that I'm alive?"

Questioned and Led to Door.

"Your mother's maiden name was Stevens. This man's name is Burt. How could they be brother and sister. The snap he has on hand is to snap your hundred. Go down and ask him what your father's first name was. You never had a brother Ben, but ask this man if he ever knew a Ben Bowser. I'm telling you straight, Mr. Bowser, he's a sharper."

For once in his life Mr. Bowser took advice. He went down and carelessly asked about brother Ben, and the caller laughed and replied.

"Oh, yes, I remember your brother Ben well. Nice boy, Ben was. Give him my regards when you write him."

"And my sister Kitty." (He never had one.)

"Ah, Kitty was the beauty of the Bowser family. Sweetest girl I ever saw. I trust she married well?"

"Very well, indeed. Uncle John, I give you two minutes to get outside my gate!"

"Why, Sammy Bowser!"

Sammy took him by the neck and led him to the door and put a shoe against him, and the "uncle" went without a word. Mrs. Bowser felt that she deserved a word of praise for her share, but when she said so Mr. Bowser turned on her with:

"Why, I spotted that fellow over the telephone last night and was just drawing him on! I can't see where you come into this thing at all!"

A very serious charge has been preferred against them, viz., that they have actually been selling goods below present cost, and instead of taking the opportunity to make enough money to buy a baronetcy, they are actually heading for the poor house. BETTER BUTTER PAYS

Farmer Holds Key To Quality And Profit

The farmer holds the key to the quality of the butter manufactured and the price received for the same. The market price of butter is governed primarily by its quality. Good butter which brings top market prices can be made only from good cream, and the quality of the cream in turn is controlled by the care it receives on the farm. Under modern market conditions the quality of butter affects its price more than ever before, i.e., the difference in price between first grade butter and second grade butter is very great. This fact is due largely to the increase of imports of foreign butter, made possible by the reduced tariff. Most of this imported butter is of good quality. This influx of foreign butter will be vastly greater. In order to successfully meet this competition with foreign butter, and to preserve Canadian markets for Canadian butter, we must produce better butter; we must produce a butter equal in quality to that of the imported prduct.—Maritime Farmer.

VENTILATING THE HOME

Some persons seem to think that it is impossible to have fresh air in a room without having a draught. To enlightened persons this may seem a strong statement but there is no question but that thousands of seemingly intelligent persons always close the windows of their sleeping rooms at night unless the weather is decidedly warm. A few weeks ago one of the most important daily journals in this country, commenting on the death of a clergyman said, "Dr. Blank's death was caused by the carelessness of a hotel attendant who left the window in the bedroom open allowing the night air to enter." One would think from such statements that night air was dangerous in itself. It is as pure as day air; though not so warm, no doubt, it is more wholesome than the dust-filled air of the day.

Every sleeping room should have windows on opposite sides of the room to insure cross-ventilation. If a bedroom has but one window open it at both top and bottom and leave the door of the room open also. Even on extremely cold nights the windows should be open, as fresh cold air heats more readily than stale air.

A warm bed is more healthful and comfortable than a cold one; the bed warming pans that colonial dames filled with hot embers and passed between the sheets on chilly nights, were excellent inventions that hot water bottles warm irons and soap stones cannot compare with. But to keep warm in bed some persons pile on bed clothing until the very weight of it tires them. Weighty bed clothes are no necessarily warm; cotton flannel sheets outing flannel gowns and lightweight woollen blankets make sleeping time restful.

Getting the children into bed in many homes is the chief thought after the evening meal, and so long as they appear to sleep comfortably, and rise rested and rosy, no thought is given to the details of their rest. One important thing to teach children who sleep in the same bed is to turn their backs to one another. This prevents their breathing one another's breath. It is a heart rending thing to go into orphanages and see row after row of little white beds with fatherless and motherless little tots in them. But after the first throb of pity you cannot help but notice how the beds are placed to be out of draughts, how pillows are kept smooth and low and how all the little tots sleep on their right sides. The window blinds are drawn so the too early rays of daylight will not strike their eyes to injure them and the night light, kept burning constantly, is shaded so it cannot annoy.

It is sad for children to be parentless but is is almost as unfortunate for a child to have a mother who does not know the simple ethics of proper sleepng arrangements.

WORTH REMEMBERING

To prevent bluing from streaking clothes, mix one tablespoonful of soda in the bluing water. Baking soda, of course.

To giv a hurried cleaning to a brass bed put a few drops of kerosene on a soft cloth and rub well, then polish with a dry cloth. It will shine, be clean and does not injure the brass.

Oil of cedar is a remedy for many insects and perfectly safe to use.

Never use a dustcloth on gilt frames; use a clean paintbrush kept for the purpose.

Banana skin will clean tan boots, and also helps conditions when rubbed on freshly scratched furniture.

Perspiration may be removed from your clothing by soaking the garment in strong salt water before laundering.

When bread is stale it should be dampened all over with milk put into a hot oven for about 20 mintes and you will have a nice new loaf. It is better done the day before it is needed.

The smell of cooking may be removed by taking a basin of boiling water and pouring into it about five drops of oil of lavender. In a few minutes all smell of cooking will have disappeared.

To remove ink spots from fabrics, starch flour or cornmeal should be used and should be replaced with a fresh layer as rigidly as the absorbent becomes discolored. Next rub with lemon juice and finally sponge off with clear water, using second application of lemon juice, if necessary, rinse well.

Captain Hinsch, who looked after the Deutchsland submarine cargoes, has made his way back to Germany. He slipped out of Baltimore on a sailing ship with a crew of the men.

Because be was unable to collect $20 wages, Albert Cantt, of Detroit, killed his employer, fatally shot an onlooker, and then, barricading himself under a house, defied for half an hour a mob that threatened to lynch him. To arrest him the police had to force ther way through the mob with drawn pistols.

WHEATLESS DAYS SPELL ECONOM

And Help to Conserve the Supply Good Substitutes for Regulation White Flour

If you object to instituting a plan for a meatless day you can do your bit by having a wheatless day—or at least three wheatless meals a week which would amount to the same thing in the long run. Perhaps you can gain the same result even more easily. Instead of having a wheatless meal have six meals in which half as much wheat is used as usual—the other half being made up for by the use of some other equivalent cereal. That doesn't seem so very hard, does it?

First, think of your breakfast cereals. There are many that contain oats and many that contain corn. If you use these instead of wheat cereals you have done part of the weekly wheat-conserving task.

Almost all of the wheat flour used in thickening gravies and making thickened sauces can be substituted by some other sort of grain. Cornstarch will often answer the purpose, and cornmeal may be used for thickening many kinds of gravies.

There are many sorts of cakes that can be made of cornmeal—among them gingerbread, puddings, doughnuts and many sorts of cookies.

To persons who have acquired the wheat-eating habit during all of a lifetime it may not be easy suddenly to eat a bread not made of wheat flour. One might as well expect a Chinese to give up his rice at a few weeks' notice without a moment's objection. But instead of using no wheat in bread begin by using a part substitute. Take rye bread, for instance. If you are not used to the flavor of rye you will find it rather flat, possibly the bread will seem a trifle heavy and surely it will seem less soft. However, if you make bread of half rye and half wheat the objectionable characteristics of rye will be almost imperceptible and possibly you will soon become so fond of the flavor of rye that you will be able to lessen even more the amount of wheat flour used.

And so with cornmeal bread substitues. If your family is prejudiced, go slowly. Have respect for their habits. Do not wean them in a day and do not always tell them when they are using corn instead of wheat.

Don't Overfeed Oyster Shell

A poultry exchange says: "There is danger of overfeeding laying hens oyster shell. Under ordinary conditions they would, no doubt, hatch all right, but if the conditions during hatching time would not be exactly correct, for instance if the amount of moisture would be insufficient, the chances are the chicks would find a difficult time in breaking the shell."

SAVAGES FINE COOKS

Negresses of Interior Africa Perform Wonders With Jungle Herbs

Probably few people suspect Central Africa of harboring some of the most wonderful cooks in the world but the fact was announced by Mrs M. French Sheldon, a well known traveller and explorer, in the course of a lecture at London.

"These African people are the most wonderful and fastidious cooks in the world," said the lecturer; "their cooking is marvellous, and they know practically every tree and plant that stimulates a flavor. For instance, the negress chef is in no way dismayed by the lack of onions and pepper; she merely gathers the bark of a certain tree and scrapes the inner side to get the one and searches for a particular plant, which, rightly used, produces the flavor of the other; and her skill and patience in blending new flavors and concocting fresh dishes are unbounded. With these powers at her command, it is scarcely to be wondered at that wives in Central Africa are in great demand."

The possession of many wives is, in fact, a sign of wealth, and as their industry is by no means confined to the kitchen, the chief who owns 1,500 wives is really the owner of an army of workers, who cook, wash, garden, and otherwise justify their existence by performing tasks usually regarded as men's work. Marriage laws are rigorous and some faults or crimes are punished with great severity. A childless wife may find herself returned to her father, provided the gifts she brought her usband go with her. The only consolation she has is that her position in no way damages her market value as a wife if another suitor should happen to present himself. Her matrimonial experience is considered rather a desirable asset as having taught her exactly how a wife should behave.

IMPORTANCE OF CANNING FRUIT

"Every jar and can in the Dominion should be filled and every housewife in Canada should make a dead set on her cellar and see that every jar is filled, if the important live question of preserving goods for future use is to be met," declared Professor C. H. Lee, agricultural director of the Military Hospitals commission, and formerly professor of agriculture at Manitoba University, in a lecture on the necessity of canning vegetables for winter use ot the Ottawa Club headquarters on Copper Street yesterday.

The club rooms were crowded with a keenly interested gathering of housewives who accepted Professor Lee's advice with sufficient appreciation to actually buy out the huge table piled high with fresh green peas from the Soldiers' and Sailors' Comforts Committee gardens of the club.

Professor Lee was most emphatic about the necessity of preserving every ounce of perishable food.

"In the next two months in spite of our best efforts, enough perishable food will be wasted or lost to feed thousands of people," said Professor Lee, "and it is up to the average woman to do what she can to prevent this."

"There are two causes why canned vegetables go bad.

'First, they are attacked by moulds, and, secondly, by bacteria or germs, which must be fought and every vestige killed before success is accomplished. That 'enemy' being destroyed down to the tiniest bit, there is no reason why any woman cannot can as well as the manufacturers.

"An ordinary jar of peas, which retails for 35 cents can be put up for about one-half the cost," declared the professor, "and next year it will be almost impossible to purchase tinned goods of any kind, as all tin is being requisitioned for war purposes."

HUNDREDS OF GERMAN GUNS ARE TRAINED ON RUSSIAN TROOPS

Latter Reported as Getting the Best of Desperate Artillery Duel--Restoring Order in Petrograd.

Petrograd, July 21. — Despatches say the most intense artillery battle is being waged on Smorgon on the Krevo front. Several hundred German guns are reported engaged. The Germans attempted to advance, but were driven back by the crack Siberian Corps, bearing the brunt of the fighting. It is reported that the Russian guns are obtaining the mastery.

Ringleader Arrested

A notorious Maximilist named Zinovieff Addsleckloff, the ring leader of the labor delegates who attempted to open direct negotiations with the enemy has been arrested. Search is being made for Nickolai Lenine, but his whereabouts is unknown.

More Troops Arrive

More troops have arrived from the front. The state bank and other banks have been reopened. All Russians who have criminal relations with Germany are to be sought and vigorously prosecuted.

Situation Improves

"According to supplementary reports now received, on July 17, at about 7 p.m., when the enemy took the offensive and seized the height south of Novica to the south of Kalusa, one of our regiments began to leave. Major-General Prince Gagarin, Commander of the military district, perceiving that the situation was critical, at once moved forward a battalion of the Ukhnov Regiment, commanded by Second Captain Burishen, which had recently arrived in this district. The battalions conducted an energetic attack. Simultaneously General Prince Gargarin threw troops into the attack on both flanks, advancing infantry and native cavalry regiments of Daghespanians on the right, and Circassians and Cabardians on the left. The Ukhnov Regiment and the natives rushed forward in a furious onslaught, carrying with them also the Russian Regiment which had retired. The general assault soon changed the situation in our favor. The advancing enemy fled in disorderly fashion and our former position was restored brilliantly. The work of the artillery of this command contributed decisively to the success"

Canadian Records Office reports: "Our counter-battery work, in conjunction with the Royal Flying Corps, has been very effective, and many hostile batteries have been successfully dealt with. The weather has been fine, with few thunderstorms."

NO POLITICS FOR CAPT. BURNHAM

To The Review:

Will you permit me to use your columns for the purpose of addressing a word to you and to the public at the same time? First of all, let me say that every reader of your paper should read The Globe's editorial of today (Saturday, July 21st), as telegraphed ahead to the papers here. It is glorious. It will be made by me the text for all I have to say during the coming election. I am sending you this wire because I see from Mr. Wearing's protest and the columns of the Peterborough press that all the fury of election times is about to be let loose.

Gentlemen, let me say that I will take it as real, and granted that I am a misfit and a conceited ass, and not to be compared for one moment with the editors themselves. I know that, and if I do not, the public does.

What I wish to say, however, is that the war and the winning of the war will be my slogan. No politics so far as I can humanly avoid them will be allowed to enter by me into my campaign.

The Globe's editorial of today will be my text, and I say to you that we should get together as sane Canadians and real British subjects, who, though we may fight like man and wife on occasion, yet are able and willing to combine against all Cowan and intruders. I hope also that this feeling will rule in the selection of my opponent.

J. H. BURNHAM.

THE SUPREME ISSUE.

The editorial to which Capt. Burnham alludes is as follows:

The third reading of the Military Service Bill has been fixed for Tuesday. It is to be hoped there will be no dilatory or partisan amendments, and that the majority for the bill will be so decisive as to convince the country of the sincerity and determination of the House of Commons.

The Military Service Bill is a fresh dedication of Canada to the cause of liberty, sanctified by the bravest blood of free nations. It is a pledge of her resolution to sustain her gallant sons who are in the fiery furnace of war, and to summon all her remaining power for the crucial phase of the world struggle. The first and paramount duty of Parliament is to put the measure on the statute book. The Act must be enforced without fear or favor. It should have the support of every Canadian, Liberal or Conservative, whose mind can rise above party or sectional or selfish considerations to the height of the great argument between freedom and despotism, between civilization and barbarism. The laurels won by the valor of her children on the battlefield must not be snatched from the brow of Canada by her own hand on the very eve of victory.

POSTMEN WILL GET MORE PAY

GOV'T DECIDES TO GRANT AN INCREASE TO MEET LIVING COST.

Ottawa, July 21.—Wages of letter-carriers in Canadian towns and cities are to be increased to meet the advance in the cost of living.

Announcement to this effect was made in House of Commons during consideration of the postoffice estimates. In reply to Sir Herbert Ames, Hon. Mr. Doherty, Acting Postmaster-General, stated that provision would be made in the supplementary estimates for "an additional allowance" intended to meet the increase in the cost of living. What the allowance will amount to was not indicated.

Plea For Rural Carriers.

Col. John Currie (Simcoe) made a vigorous appeal for an increase in the pay of rural mail carriers, pointing out that since the introduction of the parcels post their work had been doubled, and it was impossible for them to get increased remuneration without tenders being invited for their routes.

GERMAN GARRISON FALLS BACK BEFORE THE BRITISH RAIDERS

Success Scored Last Night at Several Points--French Still Resist all Assaults.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

London, July 21.—Local Successes were gained by the British last night at several points. We raided the enemy's trenches last night at Gronland hill north of Roeux. The hostile garrison hurriedly withdrew on the approach of our troops. Successful raids were made by us southwest of La Bassee and south of Armentieres. German positions were entered on a wide front. A number of the enemy were killed and his dugouts bombed. Hostile raiding parties were repulsed north of Havrincourt wood and south of Armentieres.

Fighting on the Aisne.

Paris, July 21.—In the course of violent fighting last night on the Aisne front, southeast of Cerny, the Germans twice penetrated the French trenches and were driven out by counter attacks, the war office announces. Several other attacks at different parts of the front were repulsed by the French who inflicted heavy losses on the Germans.

To Develop Water Power.

Paris, July 21.—The Government will introduce a bill creating a new Under Secretary of State charged with the task of developing France's unused water powers. This power, hitherto wasted owing to complicated regulations, is greatly needed and an elaborate scheme has been prepared.

Reichstag Adjourns.

Copenhagen, July 21.—A despatch from Berlin says the Reichstag has adjourned until September 26th.

New Type of Sub.

Washington, July 21.—Germany's latest submarines are capable of submerging 200 feet, and of withstanding the pressure of the water at that depth, according to official reports received here. This achievement adds a new problem to those already confronting the Allies in combatting the U-boats, as the latter are now said to be able to dive under any nets which the Allies have constructed. Only a small number of these deep-diving submarines have been built, it was believed, although it was thought possible that German is turning towards them in anticipation of an effort by the Allies and America to "bottle up" her U-boats in the Baltic and at the mouths of the German rivers.

HELP FARMERS SAVE CROP

At a meeting of the local branch of the Organization of Resources Committee arrangements were made for helping to supply labor to the farmers in this vicinity for haying and harvest. The bureau established at the office of Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., has been most satisfactory. Men and boys throughout the summer have been supplied to farmers in different parts of the county, and it has become generally known that farmers needing help and men and boys desiring to go out on farms can get together by leaving their names at Mr. Gillespie's. office It was decided to continue this work and have this bureau become a permanent factor in supplying help to the farm. No charge is made, and Mr. Gillespie has thrown his office open for this work.

Arrangements were also made to have automobiles take loads out on Thursday and Saturday half holidays and distribute men along the farms where crops were being taken in. Already a number of men have expressed their willingness to give their services free in this way on the half holiday each week. Those willing to supply autos for one or more half days and those willing to go out and work for one or more half days are asked to send in their names to the secretary, Mr. Joseph Wearing, 408 Water street.

Crops are excellent, but it is impossible for the farmers to harvest them without the patriotic co-operation of men from the city.

BATTLE RAGING IN LENS SECTOR GROWS FIERCER

RETALIATION IS GREAT.

Raid by the Canadians Against the German Line Is Driven Back.

(By Stewart Lyon)

Canadian Army Headquarters, July 21.—The artillery duel in the Lens sector increases in intensity. There is a continual roll of gun fire from our batteries engaged in the destruction of the enemy's defence. His retaliation is unquestionably great. The enemy's artillery has persistently shelled the approaches to Lens from the north and west.

These outbursts of exceptional activity are not permitted to divert our batteries from their daily work. Yesterday a number of large explosions and fires were caused. Early this morning there was heavy shelling in the Loos area where the enemy appeared to be especially nervous.

The attempt of a raiding party to penetrate his front line was unsuccessful because of the strength in which it was held, apparently in the belief that a serious assault was intended.

The health of the Canadian troops continues very good.

London, July 21.—Lloyd George said today the food supply for the 1917-18 period had already been decreed and that the program of cultivation had been arranged to make the supply for the following year even if sub losses increased.

"We can't make peace wtih a Germany dominated by autocracy," declared the Premier. "The war now becomes struggle between two definite groups of national ideals. Significant in this respect is the news announced today of the accession of that brilliant Russian statesman Kerensky, to the Leadership of the Russian democracy. LOCAL GIRLS AT GRIMSBY CAMP MAKE AS HIGH AS $3 A DAY

Are Doing Their Bit Helping Save the Fruit Crop of the Country.

A number of the patriotic ladies of Peterborough have enlisted with the National Service Corps and are now in camp at Grimsby helping to gather the country's fruit crop. This band of volunteers include some of the leading members of local society. They are doing their bit, as strength has been given them, making sacrifices just as are the men in the trenches. One of them has sent The Review the following account of what is going on among them:

The camp is situated not far from the lake, and about a mile from Grimsby Beach.

There are 30 girls and a matron assisted by three cooks. Some of the girls sleep in tents and some in the house, where all the rooms have been turned into dormitories. Our dining-hall is outside in a building at the back.

The country here is very interesting, reminding me very much of the Isle of Wight, England, there being the same masses of flowers in the gardens.

The fruit, they say, is much inferior to last year, the strawberries are already spoilt by the rain; and the sweet cherries will soon be over, as the constant rain is rotting them.

The English Church is a picturesque building with a Lych-gate which was copied, the rector told me, from the old church at Shanklin, Isle of Wight.

This has been as regards weather a bad two weeks for the girls, though there has been plenty of work.

We rise about 5.30, having breakfast at 6.15 after which work begins at 7. Sometimes it is in the vineries tying up grapes, sometimes in the fields hoeing tomatoes. Most of last week was in the intervals of wet, passed in picking cherries, for which we are paid 15 and 20 cents a basket. A quick picker can make as much as $3 dollars a day, some of the girls have made as much as $2.70.

The food here is very good, being cereals with toast, jam, or marmalade and sometimes bacon, or sausages, or ham and coffee for breakfast. We take sandwiches and cake for lunch; coming back at 6 after which we have dinner, which is always well cooked and quite sufficient. The following is the menu for today: Roast mutton, boiled rice, and mashed turnips, pudding and custard, tea.

HIGH PRICE OF WHEAT SET AT $2.40 BY SUPERVISORS

No 1. Northern to be Standard and New Rule to Come Into Effect August 1--Millers Ask for Fixed Rates.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, July 21.—The Board of Grain Supervisors for Canada in session in Toronto yesterday have ruled that dating from Aug. 1st, 1917, the maximum price of wheat on the top No. 1 Northern in store at Fort William shall not exceed $2.40 per bushel. This will hold until further notice, and is applied to the balance of the present crop.

The Board of Supervisors is a recently appointed Dominion Government organization, and represented by the following:—Dr. Robert Magill, Winnipeg (Chairman); H. W. Wood, Carstairs, Alta.; Samuel J. Rathwell, Moose Jaw, Sask.; Wm. L. Best, Ottawa; J. C. Gage, Winnipeg; Wm. A. Matheson, Winnipeg; Lionel Clarke, Toronto, Joseph Ainey, Montreal; and James Stewart, Winnipeg.

Mr. Gurney made a plea for the farmer. Men were dropping out of farming, he said, because it was not sufficiently remunerative. Given a fair show Ontario could produce an unlimited amount of wheat.

Millers' Resolution

The Dominion Millers' Association presented a resolution to the following effect: "As one of the greatest needs of our country and allies is food, and as flour is the most important item in the list of absolute necessities required both for those at home and those fighting our battles abroad, the millers of Ontario are willing that the board should fix the prices of our products, as we desire only the small margin of profit which is necessary for the successful operation of our plants."

The Weather

This afternoon the thermometer was up to 85 degree in the shade. This is three degrees higher than any previous figure this year. Some very warm weather was experienced around this date last year. A year ago today we had it 90 degrees; on the 22nd, 93; 23rd, 93; 24th, 93; 25th, 95. On July 30, it was up to 96. The record last summer was on Aug. 20th and 21st, 99 degrees in the shade both days. This summer up to the present time has been exceptionally free from warm spells.—W.P.

During the days of July 18 and 19 1,100 shells were thrown into Rheims.

The Derbyshire Miners' Association has recommended its 60,000 members to take but one day's holiday in August, instead of four days as usual.

RUSSIAN ARMY AGAIN RETIRES

SOME OF THE TROOPS FAILED TO OBEY COMMANDS OF OFFICERS.

Petrograd, July 21.—A further retreat has been made by the Russians in East Galicia, the war office announces, because the troops did not show the necessary stability and at points did not fulfil commands.

Ruins Await Them.

Berlin, July 21.—The German troops in Eastern Galicia have crossed the Zlochoff Tarnapol on a front of forty kilometres, army headquarters announced today. They found burning villages and a great distruction in their path.

Abraham Armstrong, 38 years old, a farmer, living north of Brownsville, committed suicide by hanging himself to a tree near his house. He leaves a widow and three children.

LIEUT. MARTIN DUNSFORD IS PROMOTED ON BATTLEFIELD

Now Holds Rank of Captain as Reward for Gallant Service---Lieut. Hubbs Publishing Magazine in Switzerland.

Promoted on the battle field is the honor that has been conferred on Lieut. Martin Dunsford, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Dunsford, of Peterboro. He has been given the rank of Captain.

Captain Dunsford originally was attached to the 129th Wentworth Battalion, but later was sent o Camp Borden, and he left with a special draft of officers for England. This was about a year ago, and since the first of October last he has been continually in the trenches. He was through the battles of Vimy Ridge and was unhurt and apparently has distinguished himself. He is attached to the 18th Battalion, of which Lieut.-Col. Morrison, D.S.O., of Toronto is the commanding officer.

Capt. Dunsford's many friends in Peterborough will gladly extend the warmest of congratulations and hope that he will be saved from harm in all future engagements.

Capt. Dunsford is a brother of S. J. Dunsford, who promises to follow in his illustrious footsteps. He was lieutenant in the 247th Bn. here and did not hesitate to revert in order to get overseas. He is now a sergeant and is on the strength of the 204th Bnn. in England.

Publishing a Paper.

Lieut. F. S. Hubbs, who is a son of Mr. C. E. Hubbs, of 336 Concession street, and who learned the printing trade with the Examiner, being later connected with The Review, is now publishing a small magazine called B. I. M., in Murren, Switzerland. It will be issued every ten days.

It is a far cry from Peterborough to Switzerland, and Lieut. Hubbs finds himself in the latter country owing to a combination of circumstances over which he had no control. When the war broke out he was publishing The Hastings Star, and he went overseas with the 4th

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

PETERBOROUGH SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1917

WHAT AN ELECTION WILL DO.

FOR THE GOOD of the country, for the purity of our politics, the next general election ought not to be fought upon the faults of the Government. Every Administration suffers for its faults, and this Administration will be no exception to that rule. But when the exposure of the faults of the Government take the mythical form of stories of the jamming of rifles and the weeping of men in the trenches, it constitutes not only an ignoble campaign but an obstacle to the successful prosecution of the war, and I venture to think that a general election carried on by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) along the lines that he has taken tonight will not only divide Canada, but will paralyze Canada; it will put Canada out of the war and mark her as a degenerate and inferior portion of the British Empire.—From Dr. Michael Clark's speech in Parliament on the Extension Bill.

LIBERALS IN CONFERENCE.

THE FOURTEEN Liberal members from Ontario in the Federal Parliament met at Toronto yesterday with the Liberal candidates nominated in the various constituencies of the province, to attempt to bring something like harmony to the party now split into three separate and distinct factions. There is certainly urgent need for such a meeting together. The situation of the Liberal organization was never more desperate than it is today.

The conference was held behind closed doors, but it has been given out that the gathering pledged itself to support Sir Wilfrid Laurier, favored an appeal to the people, and the delay of conscription to allow a further trial of the voluntary system.

The cards are face up on the table. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been reinstated as leader in Ontario and his war policy or lack of such policy has been endorsed. The election that Dr. Michael Clark declares will paralyse Canada and place this country out of the war is favored, and more time is to be wasted in vain efforts to induce men to enlist.

The issue is made plainer than ever. Even the Liberals who voted for the second reading of the Conscription Bill have already gone back on their record. If their party is by any chance returned to power, war work in Canada will be practicaly stopped and the men now in the trenches calling for aid will be left to work out their own salvation.

The day has passed forever when the people as a whole are willing to accept the ready-made opinions and policies prepared by a handful of designing politicians. There are constituencies in Ontario where a candidate for Parliament attempting to take his stand on such a platform as the above would be hooted off the rostrum. There has been too much delay already in dealing with conscription, vexatious delay in introducing it in the House, and still more aggravating loss of time in dealing with it once it was before the members. No further procrastination will be tolerated.

The call from the trenches will be heard above the tumult of the campaign. The war must be won, and it will never be won with such a policy as that just promulgated by the conferring—or intriguing—Liberals in Toronto.

The tailors of Tooley street were not the people of England, despite the delusion under which they labored. The fourteen Ontario members with the candidates now in the field are not the people of this province, and it will be found that they do not represent the sentiments even of the members of their own party. They have, by accepting Sir Wilfrid Laurier as their leader in the face of his record for the past three years, destroyed their last hope for success. The decision reached yesterday was suicidal, and the chances are that at the election the already inconsequential Liberal representation from Ontario will be entirely wiped out.

Hon. George P. Graham has long been regarded as an accomplished politician, with all that the term implies. No one wonders that he should be one thing at Ottawa and another at Toronto, all for a purpose. The marvel is that a man like Hugh Guthrie, after renouncing the leadership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the war issue, should, when the test came, weaken, and renew his allegiance.

LABOR AND THE WAR

IT IS NOT FAIR to union labor to say that it is as a unit opposed to conscription, or that a majority of the members of the various organizations take that stand. All they insist upon is an equitable enactment that will apply with equal force to all classes. The conscription of wealth as well as of manhood was one of the conditions that they demanded, and the Government has satisfied them in this regard. When election day comes round it will be found that the working men of Canada have no real grievance against the Administration.

Of all classes in the community organized labor probably has least to fear from conscription. The measure is really designed in their interests. The man who is employed in some essential ocupation will be left at his post, and it is such places that the union men of the country are filling today. It is the slacker who is such both in a military and an industrial sense who will be affected by the draft, who will be the first to be taken.

Labor's record in the war is creditable. The different unions are well represented at the front. Over sixty per cent. of the Canadians now under arms were wage-earners before they enlisted. There is no getting away from the fact that the burden of any war falls most heavily upon the working classes in the belligerent nations.

There is no class in this nation so wholly interested in the successful issue of the war as those who work for wages, and the men themselves are not slow to realise this. They see for themselves that if the war is lost the system of self-protection which they have been building so carefully for years will be overthrown by military force and that instead of free agents they will become as the serfs of Europe where the sword is the only arbiter.

The Typographical Union alone has over six hundred members "somewhere in France." While they are away their places are kept for them and their membership dues in the union are paid. Forty-two of them have made the supreme sacrifice, and to the widows and dependents of these the union has paid $12,226. That record should refute any assertion to the effect that labor is doing nothing in the war besides revelling in a high wage scale.

The Department of Labor at Ottawa has just issued a circular in which figures are given showing the extent to which the trade unionists of the Dominion have contributed to the Canadian expeditionary forces since the outbreak of the war in August 1914. Enlistment of one or more members has been reported by 1,284 local branch unions, the recruits numbering 21,599 and reservists 593, a total of 22,192 trade unionists in the ranks.

Of this number 121 were furnished by the labor unions in Peterborough.

Union labor has always been unalterably opposed to militarism, recognizing it as one of the greatest menaces to permanent liberty. Labor is in this war to destroy this menace for all time, in the hope that when the strife is over universal amity will prevail indefinitely. When the nations now warring come to arrange terms of peace, labor will be heard in the deliberations. Disarmament will be one of the conditions insisted upon, no nation to maintain more than a force sufficient to preserve domestic harmony and to assure the settlement of all disputes by arbitration. There can be no guarantee of peace while the various nations are armed to the teeth, any more than there can be personal safety in a community where every man carries a pistol or a bowie-knife. An armed police force in a community makes for law and order; the general use of deadly weapons has the contrary effect.

AS TO COMIC JOURNALS.

WE ARE GRATIFIED to be assured by our contemporary that it finds in anything amusement to brighten up the humdrum of its existence and to lighten the gloom of the hopeless political situation which now confronts it. We can easily understand how its risibilities are tickled at the spectacle of any newspaper at odds occasionally with either its representative or its party. Blind allegiance, following with sheep-like docility wherever it may be led, has always been the distinguishing characteristic of our neighbor.

One thing is certain, it is too lugubrious as a rule to be regarded as a comic journal as it pursues its editorial way along the beaten trail that runs in circles and so leads to nowhere. Still, its gyrations are often comical.

We have always admired our contemporary's consistency in its devotion to partisanship, even if it is almost invariably in error. There is no gnat in the potion of its opponents too small to escape its eagle eye, no camel in the rations of its friends too large for it to bravely attempt to swallow without a gesture of repugnance. Other Liberal journals took issue with Sir Wilfrid Laurier and praised his followers who voted against him on conscription, but our local contemporary through it all preserved a magnificent silence.

NOTES AND COMMENT.

IT'S NOT Michaelis but Michael-ain't. The Kaiser continues to be the entire show.

• • •

THE CROWN PRINCE'S chances to rule over a contented people are not worth one Canadian war bond.

• • •

THERE IS no longer any doubt about it—the Liberal can of beans has been spilled beyond all hope of recovery.

• • •

AFTER THEIR FLOP at Toronto the Ontario Liberals lay themselves open to the suspicion that they are afflicted with St. Vitus dance.

• • •

WHERE IS the Liberal in West Peterborough who will attempt to get into Parliament while fettered with the leading strings of Sir Wilfrid Laurier?

• • •

THE ROYAL FAMILY has changed its name and the Liberals propose to do likewise, but with a different inspiration, whatever they may profess to the contrary.

• • •

IN THE MEANTIME, noting events transpiring in Canada and the unlikelihood of reinforcements, the Kaiser hopefully hurls his troops again at the Canadian line.

NEW FRUITS and vegetables are arriving on the market, but when the consumer learns the price he has seldom strength left him to yell for Mr. Hanna.

THE EXAMINER says it has found many people who profess to believe that the Canadians have been given all the stiffest fighting to do. Perhaps they have not done it all, but they have certainly performed their share. In the meantime, leave it to the Liberal party, and the slacker will enjoy farther immunity.

WOUNDED SOLDIERS GIVE ENTERTAINMENTS IN AID OF WOUNDED BRETHREN

Famous Whizz-Bang Concert Company from Whitby Military Hospital Will Give High Class Performance at Grand, Friday Night --Peterborough Should Respond Generously

The entertainment to be given in the Grand Opera House on Friday next, July 27th, should be largely patronized, as the proceeds are to go toward alleviating the condition of wounded soldiers under treatment in Whitby Hospital. Then the men who are to perform at this entertainment, are themselves soldiers who have done their bit, and suffered wounds in so doing, and being now convalescent and able to indulge to some degree in active life, have undertaken the praise-worthy task of raising funds to help their less fortunate comrades-in-arms" in Whitby Hospital by giving entertainments of a musical and vaudeville nature. Under the name "Whizz-Bang Boys," these exemplary exponents of the "Brotherhood of Man" precepts have won deserving fame as public entertainers, each member of the Company being highly talented in his own particular line. Let a capacity house next Friday demonstrate that Peterborough citizens are always ready to provide comfort for our brave boys who have so nobly suffered in the great cause for which civilization is fighting.

Patients From Hospital

All members of this troupe are at the present time patients in the Whitby Military Hospital and the aim of this company is to secure funds to provide recreation and entertainment for their more unfortunate brothers who are unable to get about. Not one member receives any remuneration, and the whole of the profits are given to a committee to spend as they see fit. This committee is appointed by the men and consists of one officer and eight men.

The show itself is a high-class one and has met with great success whereever it has been produced. They have played in most of the larger towns and cities of Eastern Ontario, and in every place they have received offers of a return engagement. The stage setting is quite unique, and the boys promise to entertain you every bit as well as they fought for you Somewhere in France. This seems a large bill to fill but they can do it, so come along to their entertainment and be convinced for yourself. The prices are most reasonable, the scale of prices ranging from 25 to 50 cents.

The Whiz-Bang Troupe

Sergt. Annis, who acts as interlocutor, was a member of the 14th Battalion. He is a western man residing in Edmonton, Alta. He was severely wounded in both legs on the 13th of June, 1916 at the battle of Zillebeke. He has lost the power of his right foot and has to use crutches.

Sergt. Whitnall was with the 2nd C.M.R., and is a resident of Vernon, B.C. Sergt. Whitnall lost his right arm at the battle of Zillebeke the same day that Sergt. Annis was wounded. He has been very unfortunate as septic poisoning has set in a number of times caused by lying out in No Man's Land several hours before he could be rescued.

Pte. Woodgate was severely wounded in the right knee. In an operation that was performed on his knee he had a piece of bone removed and a silver tube put in its place. Pte. Woodgate was a member of the 18th Battalion, and his home is in Merriton, Ont.

Pte. Janaway, who acts as one of the end men in the troupe, was a member of the 35th Battalion and suffered severe injuries to his right hip and leg, and has to use crutches. He hails from Hespeler, Ont.. Pte. Janaway has had vast stage experience and toured the British Isles with the best minstrel troupes over there.

Pte. Brugger, the elocutionist of the troupe, was a member of the 75th Battalion, and is a resident of Toronto. Pte. Brugger was very badly wounded in the left arm and has lost the complete use of his left hand. He was wounded at the historic Ypres Salient, where so many of the brave Canadian lads have made the supreme sacrifice.

Pte. Hill, also a member of the 75th Battalion, was wounded at the battle of Courcelette, and Toronto is his home. Pte. Hill suffered severe wounds to his back and leg. Ptes. Hill and Brugger were pals before they enlisted and each thought the other killed in action until they met in the hospital at Whitby. Needless to say it was a very happy re-union.

Gunner Taylor also hails from Toronto, and was a member of a trench mortar battery in France, and is suffering from shell shock. He was wounded in May, 1916. Gunner Taylor is an accomplished violinist, and has had a wide experience on the concert stage.

Corp. Healey belonged to the 1st Battalion, and is also suffering from shell shock. He was twice buried by shell explosions in the fall of 1915, in the famous Messines front. He had almost completely recovered, but was unfortunate enough to be in hospital at Ramsgate, England, when that place was severely bombarded by Zeppelins. One bomb struck the hospital that Corp. Healey was a patient in, and he suffered a complete relapse and was invalided home to Canada last November. Corp. Healey is a resident of Detroit, Mich.

Gunner Dufton was wounded in the summer of 1915, and was a fellow patient of Corp. Healey's at Ramsgate. He recovered from his wounds and went to France again with a trench mortar battery and had only been in the trenches five days this time when he was severely wounded in the left hip. He was sent to hospital in England, in due course arrived at Ramsgate again, where he once more met his old pal Corp. Healey, and they came back to Canada on the same boat. Healey and Dufton have formed a "Damon and Pythias alliance and are inseparable companions. Gunner Dufton's home is in Toronto.

Pte. Bentley, the celebrated handcuff king, is a resident of Hamilton, Ont. and was with the 4th C.M.R. in Flanders. He was a victim of one of the Huns' fiendish gas attacks, and although he suffers greatly at times he is a striking example of Canadian pluck and heroism.

Pte. Price is Pte. Bentley's assistant, and was a member of the famous 49th Highlanders of Toronto. He was wounded in the chest and suffers now from a weak heart. He is a native of Toronto.

Corp. Fowler is an original member of the 3rd Battalion of Toronto, and resides in that city. He passed safely through the terrific battles of Ypres and Festubert, only to fall a victim during one of the quiet (?) times.

Bandsman Seddon hails from Hamilton, Ont., and was serving with the 58th Battalion in France. He was wounded at the battle of Zillebeke a year ago last June. Bandsman Sedon is an accomplished musician, and toured this continent with the famous Kilties' Band.

Pte. Edwardes, the property man of the troupe, was an original member of the 4th Battalion, and is a native of Hamilton, Ont. He went to France twice and was wounded the last time at the battle of Zillebeke. He is an accomplished clarinet player, but on account of his wounds will be unable to play again.

Sergt. Staton, the manager of the troupe, is a qualified surgeon, and devotes his time in promoting amusement for the patients in the hospital. Sergt. Staton has had two sons killed in this war and has two more at the front now.

Major Archibald, the president of the troupe, is a returned officer. He went overseas with the 8th C.M.R., and served with the 7th Field Ambulance in France. He is the chief medical officer of Whitby Military Hospital.

Mrs. Knox, who is accompanist of the troupe is musical directress of District "D" of the Military Hospital Commission. Her only son has been wounded in action.

EDITOR'S MAIL

Editor Review:

Having read in last evening's Review a reply from Acting Mayor Duncan to my letter of Thursday evening, I wish to apologize for stating that the City Officials were not doing anything to recover the body of the late Mr. Cupitt.

At the time I wrote that letter under the heading "Two Pictures," nothing was being done. I suppose the fair way to have written was to have stated at the hour of writing, nothing was being done. I have no reason to believe but that Acting Mayor Duncan acted as soon as he knew it, and furthermore I wish to say that he was a steadfast friend to the swimming beach deputations and petitioners. Mr. Duncan was not on the committee appointed for final settlement of this question, the committee that reported back to the council.

At that time the press stated, if I remember correctly, that the deputation was satisfied to drop the subject, which was not true.

I think Mr. Duncan, aside from the finishing touch to picture No. 2, will agree that they were pretty well drawn.

OFFICERS IN ENGLAND.

Editor Review: I notice in one of your papers that was sent to me, that you state a Peterborough officer, now at home, spent some months at the front. Have you not made a big mistake? I have been living at Folkestone the last two years, only leaving there when my children and I had such a close call in the air raid last May, and I know that that officer was not in France, as I was in touch with the 39th Battn. right up to the time they went to Seaford. If some of these men that drop into these good jobs did their share and went over there my husband would not have to go back after being wounded and blown into the air. I also have a brother that has been over there two years. It makes me tired when I see things like that in the papers. Some of these gentlemen want a few more pairs of socks to keep their feet warm. They are suffering from cold feet. I have seen lots of them in Folkestone and they say they only came over for a good time and believe me they get it. I feel I must write when I see these things. My husband was warned for France and he really is not fit. They are very short of men, too.

Yours respectfully,

MRS. GRIFFIN.

Hastings, England, July 5.

P.S.—My husband belongs to the 2nd Battn.

THE SALVING OF A DERELICT

By MAURICE DRAKE

When next morning brought a wire from Mortimer announcing his intention of calling on her that afternoon, she did not cry—she swore. None the less she did her hair carefully, put on a new blouse, and went through her desk with vigilance. Mortimer had a nasty knack of demanding keys—which could not well be refused—and routing out drawers with a wary eye for unpaid bills. It showed the vilest taste, she had many times assured him; but bluff Harry, who had been a butcher in a small way before a lucky bet had placed the capital for his first stock and share transaction in his hands, was moved by her opinion no whit. His habit of announcing his intended visits by wire Constance regarded as a special interposition of Fate on her behalf.

"I hear that young whelp Averil's been hanging about after you," he remarked genially over the teacups. The warmth of the day had induced him to remove his coat, and his tight waistcoat showed his overfed figure to advantage. Constance, reclining in a long chair with her back to the window, looked at him with a new feeling that was not at all admiration.

"Why 'whelp?'" she asked languidly.

"'Cause he is—'cause I say he is."

"Do you know him?"

"No—nor don't want to. I knew his father—stuck-up hypocrite!—and that's all I want to know of that lot. He shot himself! You've heard of the big Averil smash two years ago, ain't you?"

"Yes, of course. Who told you I knew him?"

"Young Dwyer—yesterday. Reingold and me was having a drink, and he joined us."

"How did he come to mention Lau—young Averil?"

"Lau—what?"

"Laurence, he's called."

"An' you've got to christened names, 'ave you?" He grinned angrily. "You better take care, my dear. Of course I know you can't help havin' these boys hangin' about you—lookin' out for an engagement as you are. But if you make me jealous, you're steerin' for trouble, I needn't tell you."

"My dear Harry! Don't be silly now—"

Her protestations having soothed him, she returned warily to the subject.

"But you didn't tell me how Dwyer came to be speaking of me," she said.

"He said he'd seen this young whelp in town, an' that he was hangin' about after you; an' as your acquaintance had a way of comin' expensive, he supposed Averil had money. Then he said he'd toss us for our shares in old man Averil's Iceland Development Company flam, an' try to get the price of a dinner out of Averil with 'em. Reingold an' me we had a share each. I won 'em first, and then 'e tossed me again an' won 'em back himself. Rum thing, too. He said he had one share before we tossed; so after we got back to the office Reingold 'e looks out the original prospectus, and there was nothin' about Dwyer bein' on the board—and nobody 'ud ever buy shares in the thing. So Reiny, 'e was passin' Dwyer's office this mornin', an' called in to pull his leg about bein' so hard up as to do us down for a couple of shares that wasn't worth the paper they was printed on. And s'help me, he had a share after all—two shares. He'd got two more of the original shares in his [illegible]

"Where did 'e get 'em from?" Constance asked, with only simulated interest. The man's talk was going in at one ear and out at the other but any appearance of boredom was forbidden.

"Some old draper chap in the City—I forget his name—Reingold was fair surprised at it, I tell you. 'What should young Dwyer be gettin' 'old of them shares for?' says he. 'Tossin' us was all right—if 'e really 'ad a share of 'is own lyin' idle. But to go an' buy two, an' then accidentally to meet us an' toss for two more—an' all to try an' get young Averil to bra- [illegible] four quid—an' Averil 'is pal, too, all! Besides, there ain't no [illegible] it. There's dozens of other things old man Averil touched. This pup couldn't square 'em all, not unless 'e [illegible] want nothin' with this particular company [illegible]. Reingold can't make it out neither. But they've come to the wrong shop for once. Reiny's [illegible] out the holders of other shares—I reckon we can buy a good whack of 'em for next to nothin'—and if [illegible] blessed Pat Dwyer and his pal Averil think they can do M. & R., they've come to the wrong shop."

Emerging from a reverie, which Laurence, Farrant, and the urgent necessity for a new evening cloak shared between them, the last few words caught and arrested Miss Armitage's ear. No observer could have detected that her expression meant aught but admiration for Mr. Mortimore's business acumen.

"I'm sure of that," she said agreeably.

Mortimer swelled pompously, much to her concealed distaste.

"And what are these shares he was trying to sell?"

"Sell! There's a woman all over. He wasn't selling. He tossed us for 'em—an', as I tell you, Reiny's found out he's been buyin' elsewhere. Looks queer, don't it?"

"Very," she said, in total ignorance of what he was talking about. "And what is he buying them for?"

"Who knows? He says he wants 'em to pull young Averil's leg with—make him pay full value for 'em rather than 'ave it dragged up in conversation that 'is father was a swindler."

"I don't think——" said Constance Armitage, and then relapsed into silence. She did not think anything about it. She was positive that no power on earth could get money—or anything else—out of Laurence Averil without his own goodwill. And that Pat Dwyer should be trying to blackmail him! The thing was impossible.

By questioning, she got the whole story out of Mortimer again, and so judiciously did she frame her inquiries that she managed to convey the impression that his own power as a raconteur was her sole reason for asking for a second rendering of the tale. He bloated as he repeated it in what he considered a breezy, man-o'-the-world style, and poor Constance, whose name, contrary to all traditional precedent, really was Armitage, and whose dim girlhood had been spent among kindly folk of the middle class, writhed inwardly. She controlled herself successfully, however, and by her merry laughter and naïve comments managed not only to get all the information she needed, but also, before Mortimer departed, a promise of the desired evening cloak. So that, when the door had closed behind him, her action in stamping her foot and throwing a book violently across the room was entirely unjustified.

Her feelings relieved by this [illegible] outburst, she sat down in the same [illegible] her elbows on her knees, her pretty chin in her hands, and thought her very best. What bearing could this have upon Laurence's absence? But that the circumstances were in some way linked together she felt certain. Dwyer buying shares in a worthless company to threaten Laurence with! She knew both the men too well to conceive that possible for a moment. Perhaps he was buying them as a mere speculation on his own initiative? And yet, Laurence was away somewhere. True, Dwyer had sworn he didn't know his address, and he seemed to be telling the truth. But Laurence away, Laurence's father's connection with the company when it was floated—she felt [illegible] have something to do with the business. Her tangled thoughts [illegible] to a knot that refused to [illegible] back to their [illegible] sat upright and [illegible] down on her knees [illegible] decision.

What was it he had got so [illegible] about when he was talking to Farrant? Some silly piece of stone that he had nearly smashed his hand with. She remembered his keen attention to Farrant's [illegible] tions, and the way in which he one rushed off down her stairs. That was it! That was it, for certain!

Within ten minutes a telegraph operator in the nearest post office was tap-tapping a message to Farrant that ran: "Bored to death come and take me out to dinner. C. A."

Farrant was delighted. This was promotion indeed. He kissed her hand prettily on his arrival, and murmured compliments on her appearance which were wholly sincere, for excitement had put more brightness than usual into her eyes and an unwonted color on her cheeks. She smiled graciously, and thanked him for his kindness in coming.

"I was getting lonely and depressed," she said. "Being out of an engagement so long, you know. But I won't bother you with that, Fra—Mr. Farrant. And now, we won't go to a big place this evening. You shall take me to some dear little quiet restaurant, where we can chat in peace, and you can talk to me and cheer me up."

Farrant glanced at himself in the mirror, squaring his narrow shoulders and straightening his tie. As Constance had intended, her little slip into his Christian name had sent him into the seventh heaven; and when she remembered hulking, sulky Laurence, she could have laughed at the little dandy's smirking face. However, dandy or no, he served her turn, and he was at all events a gentlemanly little fellow, a point that counts with every woman when any man but the one man of her choice is in question. From him oaths are pet sayings and kicks caresses. From other men courtesy goes far.

They went to a little Italian restaurant in Oxford Street, and, once ensconced in a quiet corner, Constance soon was able to turn the conversation towards Averil, half hinting that his brusque brutality of late had incurred her displeasure.

Farrant, delighted and encouraged by her acquiescence, launched out into a diatribe on Laurence's vile manners and—as he put it—the rough clumsiness of his personal appearance.

"He could pull you in pieces with his hands," Constance meditated, as she gazed at him critically from under her drooping eyelids; but all she said was, "Oh, I think you're hard on him, Mr. Farrant. Of course he hasn't had your advantages. Living in town, don't you know—and travel." Farrant, having once visited Liege for the purpose of inspecting the Belgian coalfields, naturally preened himself. "I used to like him," she went on. "He seemed to me genuine—sincere, you know. But of late, really, he seems so rough. You noticed his manner the other afternoon?"

"A perfect boor," Farrant declared. "Personally I should describe him as of a low type—animal, you know." Laurence's square, strongly set head was far more intellectual than his own, but perhaps Farrant had in view his deep chest and long arms, which certainly in no way approached the ethereal.

"He's very strange sometimes," Constance assented with a faint tinge of sadness in her tone, suggestive of a rebuke wrung from a deeply charitable nature. "What was that nonsense he was talking the other day about that bit of stone of his being worth more than turquoise?—more than that dear pretty turquoise you gave me? See!" She held it up from the laces in which it had been hiding, and flashed a look at him that made the youth's head spin with gratification.

"D'you like it? I'm so glad I've [illegible] he was saying, did you ask? There! There's an instance of the man's intelligence. One would think anyone with any education at all would have known better than to call malachite a precious stone. And he compared it with turquoise! Of course, what I gave you was only matrix turquoise," he added modestly.

"It's perfectly sweet, whatever you call it. I like these pretty streaks in it."

"Exactly. That's the matrix. But malachite!—it's quite common stuff relatively. One would be inclined to call it merely an expensive marble, almost. But why do you ask?"

"He—he offered to have that little piece cut for me," Constance lied promptly. "He seemed to value it himself."

"Polished, you mean, not cut. The man's merely a cheap humbug, my dear lady—if you will allow me to speak so of a friend of yours." She shook her head slowly as one reluctant to acknowledge an unpleasant truth. "Why, the stuff's cheap and rubbishy. People use it quite commonly for inlaying with marble for such things as clock cases, and as jewellery it shows atrocious taste. I told him so at your rooms. 'It's only fit for Brummagem jewellery,' I said. 'Quite Brummagem!' He went after that, if you remember." A superior smile testified to the pleasant memory of Laurence vanquished and routed.

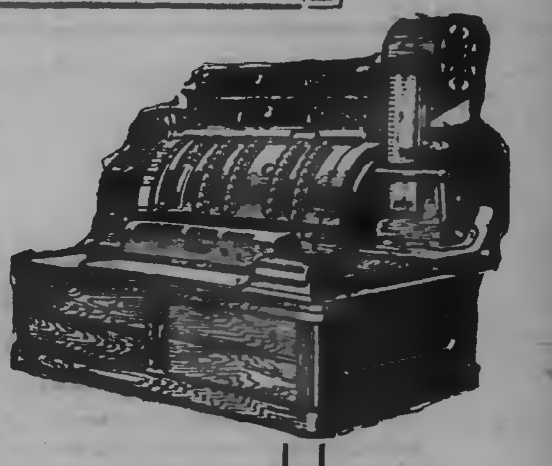
SUMMER HEAT HARD ON BABY

No season of the year is so dangerous to the life of little ones as is the summer. The excessive heat throws the little stomach out of order so quickly that unless prompt aid is at hand the baby may be beyond all human help before the mother realizes he is ill. Summer is the season when diarrhoea, cholera infantum, dysentary and cholic are most prevalent. Any one of these troubles may prove deadly, if not promptly treated. During the summer the mother's best friend is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and keep baby healthy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.



Mistakes Cost Money

Mistakes are easily made. It may be only a cent too much or too little given in change. Through the loss of a record a bill may be paid twice. Your clerks may forget to charge for some goods and you lose the money. A cent here and a quarter there, sometimes a dollar. Individually perhaps they are negligible, but in a year the total loss will astound you.

Do such mistakes as these happen in your store? You cannot afford to continue sustaining the loss of good money. You need not. The National Cash Register System will protect you against these costly mistakes. A National Cash Register makes a correct record of every transaction—of cash, credit and C.O.D. sales. It Prints a receipt for the customer. If misunderstandings should arise you can trace the history of the transaction.

McLAUGHLIN again wins Reliability Test

THE GRAND PRIZE OF THE OTTAWA-PRESCOTT HIGHWAY RELIABILITY TOUR GOES TO DR. R. E. VALIN AND HIS McLAUGHLIN D-SIX-45

Sixty-five motorists driving cars of all makes started on June 28th in the Reliability Tour from Ottawa to Alexandra Bay via Prescott and Gouvenor, N. Y.

The McLaughlin D-Six-45, driven by Dr. R. E. Valin, emerged with a perfect score of 1000 points from the gruelling tests to which all were subjected. So keen was the competition for highest honors that Referee Edenburn had to devise special tests in which the McLaughlin proved its superiority.

McLaughlin supremacy in points of Power, Easy Control, Efficiency and Economy has again been established by this Tour.

The results of the tour reflect credit on Dr. Valin as well as on Canada's Standard Car.

The Reliability Tour was not a road race nor a speed test. No professional chauffeurs took part. Owners drove their own cars and the tests brought out the best both in car and driver.

Canadians who want the joys of motoring, without the annoyance of mechanical trouble, will heed the lesson brought out by this tour and make their new car a McLaughlin.

REPRESENTATIVE OF LEADING RUBBER GOODS HOUSE ON TOUR EASTWARDS FROM TORONTO

Pleased With the Success of His Trip and Impressed With General Industrial Conditions---Interesting Talk on Rubber Goods.

To travel over Canada from coast to coast, visiting each important business point, is certainly a unique experience for an advertising manager, when such positions are usually considered "inside jobs." Mr. A. A. Briggs, Advertising Manager of the Dunlop Tire & Rubber Goods Co., Limited, is undoubtedly the first advertising man in Canada, if not in America, to carry the story of a company's progress to the people. Only a few months ago he was on a 10,000-mile tour of the West, and had previously been to the Arctic Circle in a 7,000-mile journey.

Peterborough was practically the last leg of a trip that has taken in every city and town in the Maritime Provinces and Quebec. Mr. Briggs travelled by train, boat and automobile—any way that served to give him a correct line on the habits and customs of each particular piece of territory visited.

Naturally he is enthusiastic about the future part rubber will play in our commercial life, just as he is enthusiastic about the wonderful success that has come to the Dunlop Company.

AUSTIN A. BRIGGS

In an interview Mr. Briggs spoke as follows regarding the scope and extent of the Dunlop Company's operations:

Dunlop the Pioneers.

"I am told that the Dunlop Company are the pioneers of the tire industry in Canada?"

"That is correct," said Mr. Briggs. "We made our first bicycle tire in 1894, and, like many other business enterprises, we started in a small way and grew with the country. One of the things that appeals to me the most when contemplating the history of Dunlop achievements is this: Long before the Company had a factory they had a selling policy, which summed up in a few words meant, 'Make Good Products and Keep a Good Name.' It certainly is a source of pride to think of those early days when the total staff consisted of a few people, and to contemplate today that the Company has fourteen full-fledged branches, as follows: Halifax, St. John, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver and Victoria, also a number of district offices, as well as approximately 10,000 distributors over all Canada."

That Coin Stunt.

"Naturally, when people think of the name Dunlop they think of the "Two Hands" put in The Post man. "Is it true that in following the policy of originality in featuring the 'Hands' your Company were unconsciously the means of causing the Government to enact a special statute on advertising?"

"What you refer to is the stunt put over by the Dunlop Company some years ago. Our people evolved the idea of stamping a number of coins with the trade-mark. Whenever a coin was returned the successful holder of same was given an honorarium. The idea created so much interest at the time that the Canadian Government shut down on it, and put through a statute making it impossible to get up such a scheme in future. Yet, to show you how the 'Two Hands' had been seered on the minds of the people, eight years after the discontinuance of the contest, the Dunlop Company received a letter from a man in a small town in Quebec, accompanied by one of the special five cent pieces. He wanted to know if the money belonged to us. You can imagine how large a pair of hands would be on a common five cent piece, when those hands were imprinted into a space clear of all words and border. Yet this man, living in a district where we did no direct advertising, found out what the mark meant and who it belonged to."

Widening of Trademark.

"While we are on this subject it may not be amiss to note that originally the 'Two Hands' mark carried the slogan 'These are the only Tools You'll Need,' the reference being to the Dunlop idea of quick-detachability in bicycle tires. After years of popularizing in Canada, until the 'Two Hands' became one of the widest-known trademarks in the country, the tire industry commenced to broaden out from the bicycle end of the business to take in carriage, automobile, truck and motor-cycle tires. The trademark had to broaden too— not only because the tire business had developed new ramifications—but the Dunlop Company had also embarked into what is known as the mechanical end of the rubber goods business, namely: Rubber Belting, Rubber Packing, Rubber Hose—in fact, practically everything in rubber products.

Twenty-Three Years' Association.

"Obviously, the 'Two Hands' sign, with the original slogan, had no bearing whatever on the mechanical end of the business, but the 'Two Hands' sign, with an association now of nearly twenty-three years back of it, had come to mean a quality standard, a business indicator that stood out from the field because of its unique character.

"So the phrase 'These are the Only Tools You'll Need' was changed to 'Seal of Quality.' Then the 'Two Hands' and the phrase were brought into a scroll arrangement that immediately linked them up with the idea of Dunlop Automobile Tires, Dunlop Truck Tires or whatever might be the individual line receiving the publicity. "Dunlop" being a registered word in Canada and the 'Two Hands' a registered trademark, gives the company double trademark strength."

Bicycle "Comeback."

Mention of the revival in bicycling immediately brought an enthusiastic statement from Mr. Briggs. "No other sport in the history of the world," he went on, "took such a great hold on a large number of people simultaneously as cycling. That is a broad statement, but those who have lived through the many seasons of sport since 1894, or who have kept in close touch with various sporting innovations from time to time will, we believe, confirm us in the above declaration."

Bicycle Tire History.

"J. D. Dunlop invented the pneumatic bicycle tire in 1888, and, as noted previously, it was in 1894 that the Dunlop Company commenced the manufacture of the pneumatic bicycle tire in Canada. That event is probably the most remarkable thing in the whole history of tire events which followed, because the success of the motor-cycle and the automobile have been largely based on the success of the bicycle pneumatic tire, which in their case, of course, was at first merely an enlargement of the Dunlop bicycle tire.

"You probably have noticed that in our advertising we use the phrase 'If it isn't a Dunlop it's an imitation.' This is a reference to the wired-on feature which we commenced manufacturing under patents twenty-three years ago. Eighty per cent of the bicycle tires used in Canada are Dunlop.

The Famous Dunlop Race.

Mr. Briggs continued: "Of course no reference to the bicycle is complete without a reference to the Dunlop Trophy Race which, undoubtedly more than any other single factor, kept the bicycle 'game' alive. Of all the 'annuals' started in the 90's, the 'Dunlop' alone is left. It has been run continually for twenty-three years. The very first race in 1894 was conducted in a blaze of excitement. Feeling ran so high when the results were announced that the losers in the contest took the matter to court in an effort to upset the bicycle judges' decision. The court upheld the bicycle judges' ruling. This decision brought to life the famous phrase, 'Did McCarthy turn the Barrel,' to which even the poet has devoted his muse.

"In addition to the event noted above, the two greatest achievements in connection with the Dunlop Trophy Race were put on, firstly in 1912, when before thousands of people the Dunlop Company staged the first bicycle motorcycle and auto meet ever held in Canada on one track at one time and, secondly, in 1915, when a monster meet was held before ten thousand people and the entire proceeds given to the Red Cross, the Dunlop Company paying all the expenses."

Passing of Leather.

The Dunlop man was next interrogated apropos of the talk commonly heard that the scarcity of leather has brought rubber more than ever into the limelight. He answered: "It is needless to point out that good leather is scarcer than before the war. This condition immediately benefits two portions of the rubber industry—rubber belting and 'Acme' soles. You probably have seen some of our announcements concering 'Acme' —'The Sole of Perfection.' This product which outwears and outserves leather, is fast coming to its own, and undoubtedly, will be taken up by the people on a large scale. Why shouldn't the people, in line with the Government's appeal, save money on their shoe soles, as well as in household articles? Naturally too, conditions governing the leather market will further popularize the rubber heel, though Dunlop Heels have been accepted as standard for more than a decade. As a matter of fact, the demand for Dunlop "Peerless' Heels has been little short of phenomenal."

Vastness of Rubber Business.

Mr. Briggs now proceeded to give thorough education in the wherewithals of Mechanical Rubber products. He stated that the Dunlop Company has to its credit the sales of tens of thousands of feet of heavy belting for the elevation and conveyance of sand, gravel, coal and ore in one province alone. This is exclusive of the many thousand feet of belting sold for various other purposes. To one huge elevator the Company supplied belting measuring well over two miles in length and weighing thirty-two tons. At another time they shipped to one of the largest conveying and elevating systems in the world belting which weighed well over fifty tons.

Belting Endurance.

Carrying approximately half a million tons of destructive rock and gravel and one million tons of coal are certainly some tests of belt endurance. Those are the respective records two Dunlop Conveyor Belts have to their credit since being installed.

One Mile of Belting.

It wasn't so very long ago, either, since one of the biggest saw mills in the Martime Provinces was fully equipped throughout with "Gibraltar Red Special" Belting, approximately one mile in length. More than two-thirds of this belting was on its way by express direct from the St. John headquarters of the Company on the same day the order was received. The owners of the mill in question are using the same brand of belting in no less than four other mills coming under their control.

Supremacy in Rubber Hose.

There are few municipalities in Canada in which Dunlop Fire Hose is not at the present time recognized as a most efficient medium for the fighting of fires. It is great source of pride to the Company that their product is daily keeping guard over innumerable lives and millions of dollars worth of property. Thousands of feet of other hose for all manner of use are turned out daily at the Dunlop factories. Steam, air brake, car tender, and water hose in enormous quantities have and are being supplied to practically all the railroads either domiciled or operating in Canada. Huge Dunlop dredge sleeves, into which several men could easily crawl at one time, are in commission on many big dredges.

Underwriters Lend Approval.

In Mill and Gasoline Hose the Company has achieved creditable success and has been given authority by the Underwriters Laboratories, Inc., Chicago, to manufacture Dunlop Underwriters Mill Fire Hose (Cotton Rubber-Lined) bearing their label of approval.

Rubber Packing Indispensable.

It seldom occurs to many people that if all Packing was taken out of a factory, and there was no more obtainable, closing down would be the inevitable result. Wherever there is steam there must be Packing.

Rubber Packings, therefore, are necessary in order to keep the wheels of industry moving to the zenith of their efficiency. Dunlop "Sunset" Red and "Globe" Spiral Packings are doing just that in practically all the busy centres throughout Canada. Particularly in the big steel industries, where abnormal conditions call for superb service—such as 175 lbs. steam pressure—they are living up to the general reputation of Dunlop Rubber Products.

Rubber Tiling in Demand.

In hospitals, Dunlop Tiling is finding constant and increased favor. Particularly in this case is it suitable because of its sound-deadening and sanitary qualities. Libraries, banks, and schools of learning, too, have need of it. They are, in greatly increasing numbers realizing its matchless qualities.

The railroads long ago found Tiling to be indispensable for use in buffet cars, smoking compartments, aisles and on the platforms of their cars. Consequently, many thousand square yards of Dunlop Tiling have been laid in coaches belonging to practically all the leading railroads in Canada. Steamships utilize it profitably also.

Theatres Use Rubber Mats.

Conspicuous positions on floors of the palatial entrances to some of Canada's largest theatres are occupied by Dunlop Rubber Mats. Many commercial establishments are keeping abreast of the times, also, by installing them.

Carriage Tires Still Used.

Questioned as to the influence of the automobile on the demand for carriage tires—one of the pioneer lines manufactured by the Company — Mr. Briggs remarked, "Contrary to the general impression, there has been no 'landslide' curtailment of carriage tires on account of the general popularity of the motor car In the larger cities, particularly throughout Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces, great quantities of carriage tires are being used annually. That the majority of carriage makers in the Dominion have found it advantageous to adopt this Dunlop product as the standard equipment on vehicles of their make, speaks for itself."

Motor Trucks Increasing.

Mr. Briggs made it clear that it didn't take the motor truck long to become popular as an efficient means of commercial transportation, just as it has proven to be a valuable asset in the war. The two main types of Solid Motor Truck Tires in favoor at the present time are represented by Dunlop Pressed-On Fit and Dunlop Removable types—the one for large city use where equipments for attaching or detaching are available, and the other for use primarily in smaller cities or towns, because it is easy to attach or remove by a mechanic without the aid of a special machine.

Noteworthy Fact.

It is a noteworthy fact that the Canadian Government—and American Government—have both adopted as standard equipment for all war trucks the removable type of solid Motor Truck tires, and this is the very type that the Dunlop Company were the first to make in Canada, and have been selling to an ever-widening circle of users each year.

Factors in Success.

Turning to a discussion of the Dunlop factory itself, our visitor had a good deal to note. It seems that ever striving to improve and keep ahead of the times the concern maintains a big experimental station which devotes its attention to perfecting established lines and creating new ones, and in both departments it has achieved remarkable success. One of the most important factors responsible for the rapid growth of the Dunlop Company is its absolute control of the Doughty Patent Process which, it is claimed, is the most exclusive and efficient method of making high-class bicycle tires and tubes for all purposes. Other notable inventions and improvements that are associated with the Dunlop Company are the pneumatic tire principle, the quick-detachable principle, the straight side principle, and the science-built, anti-skid tire.

Thoughtful of Employees.

From the first the Dunlop Company has been thoughtful of its employees, and one of its valued organizations is a Mutual Benefit Society, while another is its Amateur Athletic Association. A few years ago the company put at the disposal of its employees large athletic grounds, so that sports, such as soccer, etc., could be carried on without any of the usual difficulties in securing actual space for playing the games. With the coming of the war, and the later call for greater production in foodstuffs, the company immediately offered to the employees free lots for their own use in planting whatever they might desire. The idea has grown in greater popularity each year and for 1917 the increase in "take-ups" is about fifty per cent. over 1916.

The Company have also fitted up special dining quarters with every convenience for the factory staff, and here coffee is provided every working day, free of charge. Another department of the dining service provides the noonday dinner at less than cost to the office staff.

Romance of Tiredom.

In conclusion, Mr. Briggs remarked, "I believe commercial Canada has no greater romance than the growth of the automobile, with the consequent growth of the automobile tire. Seven years ago, the total number of cars in all Canada was not half as great as the total number now in use in the Province of Ontario alone. A few years back American tire maufacturers were boasting of production figures per day, which we have equalled this year. The freight car, the express car, the steamboat, the big horse lorry, the huge motor truck — all these are necessary now to deliver Dunlop Traction Tread and Dunlop Special to the great concourse of motorists in the various parts of Canada, who will accept no less value than is offered in the 'Most Envied Tires in all America.'

Auto Tire Triumphs.

"Despite the fact that we have practically never let up on increasing floor space and equipment—and we are adding to our staff of tiremakers every day—there is at present one continuous call from all over the country to 'ship auto tires at once.' The Traction Tread Auto Tires, as you know, hold the transcontinental record. They were equipped to a car that blazed the trail from Halifax to Vancouver in forty-nine days, forty-one of which the party were actually travelling.

"Then again, the two most expensive automobiles ever seen at a New York auto show were both completely equipped with Dunlop Traction Tread Tires. One was a $25,000 De Dion Bouton; the other a $20,000 English Daimler. And, think of this, nine men are employed in New York City doing nothing else but sell Dunlop Traction Tread Automobile Tires.

Tube-Making An Art.

"Of course, you are acquainted with the tube used in auto tires. You would hardly think, though, that nineteen different and distinct operations are

LIBERALS CONFER IN ATTEMPT TO STRAIGHTEN OUT TANGLES

Forty-Three Members and Would-be Members of Parliament in Session at Toronto lead—Ont Libs

The convention of Ontario Liberal members and candidates pledged support to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, favored an appeal to the people, and the delay of conscription to allow a further trial of the voluntary system.

Toronto, July 21.—Behind closed doors in the rooms of the Ontario Reform Association in the Excelsior Life Building yesterday afternoon forty-three Ontario Liberal members and Liberal candidates for the Federal House are in session, discussing matters concerning the political future of the party in view of an approaching general election. Thirteen of the 58 members and candidates invited were absent, five of the absentees being overseas or in military service in Canada.

F. F. Pardee, Chief Liberal Whip, who called the conference, would not comment on the significance of it when seen by The Star before he entered the meeting.

"Will there be an attempt to arrive at any agreement to cement different factions together?" asked The Star.

"I do not know what will be done," he said, as his Ottawa colleague, Hon. Geo. P. Graham, came up. The member for South Renfrew was equally reticent.

"Have you any comment to make in regard to the business of the conference?"

"You will get an official statement after the conference," he said. "That's all I have to say."

Harmony Prevailed.

At 4.30 after the caucus had been sitting for two and a half hours, during which every one was invited to give a free expression of opinion, there was no statement ready for the press. The conference was marked by frequent outbursts of applause which could be heard distinctly throughout the building, attesting to the apparent harmony and enthusiasm of those attending.

Twelve of Those Who Attended.

The fourteen Federal Liberal members for Ontario constituencies attended, namely: Hon. Geo. P. Graham, Brockville, South Renfrew; Hon. Chas. Murphy, Ottawa, Russell; Hon. W. A. Charlton, Toronto, Norfolk; F. F. Pardee, Sarnia, Lambton West; R. E. Truax, Walkerton, South Bruce; J. A. McMillan, Alexandria, Glengarry; A. B. McCoig, Chatham, Kent West; Duncan C. Ross, Strathroy, Middlesex West; E. W. Nesbitt, Woodstock, Oxford North; Edmond Proulx, Prescott, L'Orignal; W. M. German, Welland, Welland; Hugh Guthrie, Guelph, Wellington South. represented in the making of the Dunlop Product. And what is more important, Dunlop Tubes are the only tubes made by an exclusive and patented process which ensures absolute uniformity in thickness and weight."

Fairnes of Prices.

"And, just let me add, as a final statement," went on Mr. Briggs, "that there is no fairer business in the world than that of tire making. I am speaking now for all rubber companies. Do you know that in the period from 1911 to 1914 there was one continuous revision of prices almost without exception, nothing but downward? The ethics of the rubber business demand that the moment crude rubber prices drop to any appreciable extent, the price of tires to the people also drop. So that if there is one thing the tire-buying public can be sure of, it is this—No controller of tire prices is necessary. The crude rubber market, thousands of miles away, does the controlling."

RETURNED MEN GIVEN A CHANCE AS INSTRUCTORS

MEN IN CANADA BEING INDUCED TO TAKE COURSE AT CAMP BORDEN.

It is stated on reliable authority that up to date the military officers who for some time past have been active among the returned soldiers seeking instructors for the men who will be called up under conscription have been promised the hearty co-operation of about five hundred men. No fewer than 1,200 returned men have been interviewed in the different military hospitals. Nearly all were quite willing to act in the capacity of instructor at Camp Borden when the time came, but only about forty per cent of them are physically able to undertake the task.

Returned soldiers who have been given their discharge are to be approached next. They will receive a circular letter from the military authorities, and, so far as practicable, will be interviewed personally. After passing their "refresher" course at Camp Borden, when the men who are to be trained are mobilized at camp, the instructors will be given the rank of sergeant instructor and will receive in the neighborhood of $100 per month.

WAGES INCREASED

In the Toronto terminals of the Grand Trunk Railway about 500 men in the different departments, chiefly laborers, car cleaners, car repairers and others have benefited by an increase in wages from 6 to 6½ cents an hour. The men in the yards thoroughly appreciate the increase, which comes to them, they say, at an opportune time.

DELIGHTFULLY COOL ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Port McNicoll, a short, pleasant journey via the Canadian Pacific Ry., is the Gateway to the Great Lakes. Steamship Express leaves Toronto 2 p.m. each Wednesday and Saturday, making direct connection at Port McNicoll with either steamship Keewatin or Assiniboia for Sault Ste. Marie, Port Arthur or Fort William. Particulars from C. P. R. ticket agents or W. B. Howard, D. P. A., Toronto.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

What was once known as the Ontario Reformatory is now a thing of the past. There is not a single prisoner of any description in the institution.

Jack Campbell, aged 27, tried to save Albert Littleford, aged 16, who got into a hole while bathing in the river at Medicine Hat, and both were drowned.

A woman visited Camp Borden, and as a result a deserter, held in the guard house, was brought to the Provost Marshal's office, where the two were married.

What the American Y.W.C.A. is Doing

As an example for all women the Young Women's Christian Association is intelligently facing the facts of war as they are without foolish sentimentalizing, without hysteria. As a body of women keeping pace with the times, they view the war situation from all angles and aim to serve the country through women and the family—not the women as separate from the men—since women are "only one-half the community." As its sacred obligation, this organization is doing constructive work. Its women are not weakly regretting war, though every one of them feels the sorrow of the hour.

Much of the present conservation and preparedness work of this association, in which it is reaching out to all women and girls, is merely what it has long been building into the lives of members, but is now presenting from a new angle, using the patriotic motive to help women and girls in what they should know anyway, with the remote chance that they may have to do these things in connection with war. The Y.W.C.A. is serving the country now, and women for all time, by devoting its domestic science equipment to canteen, commissariat and hard times cookery and canning. One association even offers its cooking equipment to teach men army cooking. It has turned its garment making to a war economy; it gives the gymnasium for endurance; it teaches auto driving and repair, first aid to the injured, and it maintains a foreign language service bureau. The commercial department co-operates with the employment bureau to find girls available to take the places of men in case of need, and is ready to coach trained women for emergencies.

The patriotic attitude of this great body of Christian women is shown in this from the emergency bulletin, expressing the purpose "to take advantage of the emphasis of patriotism, and over against the tendency toward hatred between nations to set forth the principle of world brotherhood. * * * to point out the obligation of the Christian to take his part in the world situation by governing his life by a law of love in the place in which he finds himself."

From another patriotic circular:

"We thank Thee, our Father, for the men and women of our nation who have loved liberty and served their fellow men without thought of selfish gain. Weld, we pray Thee, the nations of the world into a brotherhood of the right that shall not fail. Teach us to carry our daily tasks in a spirit of loyalty to our country, to our world, and to Thee. Amen."

WILL PREACH AT GEORGE STREET CHURCH

Evangelist H. D. Kennedy, who, with his wife, is visiting with his parents in the city, will preach at the George Street Methodist Church to-morrow evening. His subject will be: "The Ideal Man." Mr. Geo. W. Mulligan, who was at one time with Mr. Kennedy on evangelical work, will sing at the service.

The British Government announces prizes for models of a memorial plaque to be given to the next of kin of soldiers and sailors who have fallen in the war. Canadians may compete.

A COW MOOSE IS SEEN NEAR RENFREW ON C.P.R

Engineer E. J. Funnell of the K. and P. branch of the Canadian Pacific reports having seen a magnificent cow moose the other day at Mile Lake about 20 miles this side of Renfrew.

This is the first cow moose that has been seen in this district in years and many people had begun to think that there were none around. Mr Funnell says this was a magnificent specimen.

A few days later he saw a deer just ahead of him, crossing the track, but this, of course, is not an uncommon sight.

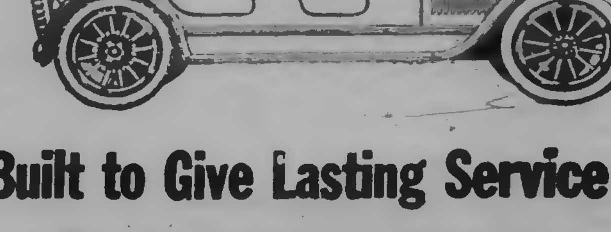
Studebaker
Established 1852



Built to Give Lasting Service

The Series 18 Studebakers are the best cars the great Canadian Studebaker factory at Walkerville, Ontario, has ever produced. They have been perfected by four years' experience with the same basic design.

They embody ninety distinct improvements in mechanical construction, convenience and comfort, over the Series 17, which made such a great record throughout the Dominion for Studebaker in 1916.

They are made of carefully selected materials, tested and developed in the great Studebaker laboratories.

Their workmanship is experienced, painstaking and carefully supervised. The inspections are rigid and exacting in the extreme.

Studebakers are probably the most powerful cars on the market in ratio to their weight. In ratio to power they are most economical in the consumption of gasoline.

For these reasons Studebakers stand up on the hardest, hilliest drives in all Canada and under the most racking tests of the road at a minimum cost for up-keep.

Let us prove the quality and economy of Studebakers—let us give you a thorough demonstration.

MARKET PRICES

PETERBOROUGH MARKETS.

The market this morning [illegible] very large and prices on all produce was steady if not a little [illegible].

In the fowl department [illegible] spring chickens were [illegible] at prices ranging from [illegible] per pair. [illegible] were quite [illegible] that there was no money in feeding the chickens for table use at the present price of grain.

Several very fine spring ducks were also to be had at 80c to 90c each.

Butter was firm and sold at 37c to 38c generally although one lady asked 40c.

Eggs were a little stronger and the lowest price asked was 3[illegible] and the highest 40c.

Strawberries sold at 18c per box or 2 boxes for 35c.

Green peas in the shell sold for 7 and 8 cents a quart.

Carrots and beets were plentiful and could be had at 3 bunches for 10c.

New potatoes were on sale on several wagons and sold at 75 to 80c a peck. One sample in particular were exceptionally fine looking and the grower stated that he had a good crop.

Hogs were down a little and were quoted at $14.75 for next week delivery. Some of the drovers got badly stung on the Toronto market this week owing to the price of butcher cattle dropping very considerably.

MARKETS AT A GLANCE.

Two important lines in which advances have been recorded during the week are salt and baking powder. [illegible] of soap have also been increased in price to the retail trade. Cornflakes have been advanced from the lower quotations, and there are indications that the higher prices may become quite general. Corn is now a scarce article, as millers who have been endeavoring to buy in the United States for the manufacture of cornmeal and other products find there is none for sale at present. They state that if there are still supplies in the United States they are being held out of the market. One milling concern is out of the market entirely on yellow cornmeal for the reason that corn has not been available. Prices on corn products such as corn flour and hominy have been moved to higher levels in conformity with the situation in corn. Rolled oats are in firm market, due to the scarcity of the grain for milling purposes.

Cooked meats are quoted higher now that the summer demand has set in heavier. There has been a good demand for barrel pork by the lumber companies of the Maritime Provinces, as they are getting ready for operations in the woods next winter. One large Ontario lumber company has also been in the market for this class of meat. Lard and compound are in easier tone, due to the light demand during the summer months. There is a desire to stir up business and prices are shaded when any business looms up as a possibility. Butter is in easier tone, although prices have not receded. Eggs are higher in price, due to lighter receipts.

Flour held in steady market with a better demand developing. Sugar refiners were still in a divided market, some holding at the advance recorded last week, while one refiner continued to quote at previous prices. Consumption of sugar has not yet started to be heavy. Cloves have been advanced quite genrally. Cheaper stocks of coriander seed are on the way, and if the ships are not intercepted by submarines lower prices can be expected in this commodity. Some of the first raspberries of the season reached the market during the week. Strawberries are dearer as the zenith of production is thought to have passed. Business in grocery lines continued quiet.—Canadian Grocer.

POTATO BLIGHT

Can Be Checked If Prompt Action Is Taken

The potato blight which has started to appear amongst the plots of potatoes this year is easily discernible, and can be soon checked if proper precautions are taken. The blight appears first as a small brown spot on the leaf, which later spreads, and then a fungus growth appears underneath.

To check this blight when it first appears, the leaf that it is seen on should be picked off and burned. If this is done with the potatoes the blight will soon disappear.

Some complaints have been received by the Agriculture Department regarding a small insect which seems to get into the stalks of the potatoes and eats them through, causing the vine to die. One man who has a considerable plot of potatoes up in North Toronto has reported this to the department. In other places slugs this year have done some damage, but a little slug shot, or for that matter dirt from the road, sprinkled over the potatoes will soon cause them to disappear. The warm weather, however, coming on will help a lot, as the slugs will be driven off by the heat of the sun.

THIS NEGRO IS BARRED FROM CROSSING LINE

Religious scruples occasionally cause men to seek escape from military service, but Andrew Jackson Green, of Windsor, Ont., whose hair is almost as white as his skin is black, has offered immigration authorities a new application of religious principle. The aged negro applied Saturday for an identification card. When told he must furnish three pictures of himself, he refused on the ground the Bible prohibits the taking of photographs. He obtained no card.

A REAL CHICKEN STORY DID HEN WORK OVERTIME

Here is a real chicken story, and it must be true, for the source of the information is most reliable. A young lady, of Guelph, who is doing her best to increase production, decided to go into the poultry business, and she purchased a few hens. One of them showed an inclination to set, and a setting of thirteen eggs was procured and the hen put to work. She must have worked overtime, for the other day no less than fourteen real live little chickens were found in the nest. The young lady has been trying to explain to her friends that there are twins in the brood, but she can't pick them out.

TEAM STANDING IN BIG LEAGUES

CINCINNATI NOW LEADS IN BATTING IN NATIONAL LEAGUE.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Chicago, July 21. — Cruise, of St. Louis, and Roush, of Cincinnati, are tied for batting honors in the National League with an average of .331, according to figures published today. Cincinnati leads in team batting. Detroit leads in team batting in the American League. Cobb is easily first with .373; Speaker is once more second with .343, and Sisler is back in third place with an average of .338.

Round shouldered men would be scarce if there were no troubles but real ones.

AMONG THE ISLANDS OF GEORGIAN BAY

Why not take a vacation at one of the very desirable spots among the islands of the Georgian Bay. This district is one of the wonders of a wonderful region. The archipelago consists of something like thirty-two thousand islands, ranging in size from several square miles down to the size of a dining table. Lunge and bass fishing is exceptionally good in the water of this district, and comfortable and well operated hotels and boarding houses are located at Honey Harbor, Minicog, Whalen's, Go-Home Bay, Sans Souci, Parry Sound and many other points. The Grand Trunk operate through coaches and parlor library buffet cars from Toronto to Penetang where direct connection is made with steamer for Georgian Bay resorts. Full particulars from Grand Trunk Ticket Agents or C. E. Horning, District Passenger Agent, Toronto.

SPORTS OF ALL SORTS

BALLAD OF THE WAYWARD SON

(To be sung soft and low)

An aged judge was sitting
Within the court house grand,
An officer was by his side,
A pen was in his hand.
"I've got to sign this warrant,"
The aged judge then said,
The soldier wiped away a tear
And slowly shook his head.
"I cannot face my son again,"
The officer then cried,
"Oh, calm yourself and have no fear,"
The aged judge replied.
"Although your son is wayward,
And in jail is breaking stone,
Your heart should not be hard because
He stole an ice cream cone,
Just think how bad it would be
For his mother and for you,
If in his waywardness he had,
Instead of one stole two."

One after another the veterans of the game who have made the fans yell with joy thousands of times are retiring from the game. Old age or a break-down gets them. Frank Chance, who recently had to give up the management of the Los Angeles team will twiddle his thumb for a long time before he gets used to being out of the game for good. It looks as though he'd have to join the colony of chicken farmers.

Clark Griffith is not alone a good baseball manager, but also a good patriot. The fans over in the trenches will think of him gratefully every time they use some of the $4000 worth of baseball paraphernalia he's sending over.

Optimistic Oscar says: If Germany's enemies keep on increasing automobile owners on this continent will have to hock their goggles in order to buy flags with which to decorate their flivvers.

One of the hottest baseball teams in the country to-day is Cincinnati. Do you know why? Just look at what the Reds are doing and you will have the answer.

There is repitition of the old lesson, "Always mind your teacher." In the return of Chief Bender to the big leagues. The veteran was released last winter from the Phillies when Moran came to the conclusion that the Chief had seen his best days and was on the downward grade. Bender went in sorrow. He decided that he'd do something with himself and try to "come back." He went into training this spring and pitched for several semi-professional teams in Pennsylvania. He found that he was doing pretty well, and decided to apply to his old boss for the return of his job. He convinced Moran that there was still some play in him and now he's working once more with his old team. But here's where the lesson comes in. Connie Mack long ago told the Indian to take better care of himself physically or he'd soon be down and out. Mack was right. Bender knows better now.

AN EXPERT ON PLAYING GOLF

"CHICK" EVANS EXPLAINS VARIOUS POINTS OF THE GAME.

By Charles (Chick) Evans

In the course of one of his lectures Dr. David Starr Jordan once remarked that all actual learning must be done in solitude. To my early recognition of that, this truth also applies to the world of sport, I owe much of my success at golf. In sayng this I do not mean to write anything against that delightful feature of the game—companionship on the links—for nothing can take the place of that; but I do mean that for the ambitious golfer who wants to learn how to control his shots a certain amount of solitary practice is absolutely necessary.

One may play well at times in matches, but the sort of skill that results in a reasonable certainty of being able to produce a given shot at a given time must be the product of a practice that is something akin to the practice of scales by a musician. Muscles must be so trained by intelligent repetition that the power to make the correct shot becomes largely automatic.

When a man plays in a match the fighting, rather than the artistic spirit is uppermost, and he is tempted to do many an unorthodox thing in order to gain a temporary advantage. If this becomes habitual the wrong consists in having no settled method, being really master of no shot. The impulsive player who trusts to the inspiration of the moment may rise to great heights, but, alas! he fails, too, to great depths.

The real object of training is to acquire a settled form, for the good player is one that averages high; the veriest dub may be able at times, playing subjectively, to make a fine round. Therefore, I partcularly advse the player who hopes to improve to make a great effort to find a few regular hours of solitary practice during the week.

It is my theory that the problem before each golfer is how to adapt his individuality to the game. In working this out he will necessarily make many mistakes, and it is best to meet and conquer them alone.

The onlooker is likely to judge one too leniently or too severely. The hard conscientious worker needs a tempered judgment. It must not be severe enough to discourage, nor lenient enough to overlook serious faults. It is easy to crush a beginner by criticism. It is equally easy to smother out any good game by undue flattery.

For these many reasons I advise after acquiring the fundamentals from a professional to spend a little systematic time in solitary practice striving to look after one's game impersonally and keep one's judgment clear and level-headed.

Questions and Answers

Can you give me some help with my driving? I seem suddenly to have lost the ability to get any distance and am continually "topping" my ball, a fault which I never had until recently.

Answer.—Topping usually results from trying to see where the ball is going before it is actually hit. And it may result from trying to get too much distance, that is, swinging too hard. Discipline your mind so that you will not look up too soon and guard against an attempt to swing too hard. Rely on your club head and a moderate swing to give you distance.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

SCOTT—SCOTT.

A pretty midsummer wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Scott, Guelph, when their daughter, Lila K., became the bride of Walter H. Scott, B.S.A., of Guelph, son of Mr. Robert Scott, Norwood, Ont. The ceremony took place in the drawing-room, which was artistically decorated. A pathway of white felt bordered on either side with smilax, and flecked here and there with dots of fern and smilax, was laid from the entrance reaching to the back of the drawing-room, where a tall bank of foliage and flowers made an effective background. From the upper portion streamers of wide satin ribbon were suspended, joining the electrolier and forming a canopy, under which the bride and groom stood. The bride was given away by her father and looked handsome in her travelling costume of African brown chiffon broadcloth, the coat opening over a pretty maize silk crepe de chine blouse, with a hat of Milan straw. Her only attendant was Marion McDonald, a tiny tot not yet three years old, who carried the ring in a basket of sweet peas and maidenhair fern, and who was attired in a dainty frock of white mull and lace. After the ceremony and wedding breakfast Mr. and Mrs. Scott left for points east and will spend their honeymoon in the groom's launch cruising some of the minor lakes en route to Georgian Bay. They will reside in Guelph.

C. M. R. In England he was transferred to the 5th C. M. R. after taking a course in machine gun work. At the battle of Zillebeke, June 2, 1915, he was wounded in the leg and taken prisoner by the Germans. His captors, realizing that he would never be fit for active service again, sent him to Switzerland. Idleness was never a weakness with him, and the ruling passion prevailing again, he took up newspaper work.

In the opening address to his readers he tells them that his object is to record the doings of the British interned in Murren and vicinity, and the magazine is filled with spicy news notes of those who share his isolation. All the work is done by the internes, including a handsome cover design. Lieut. Hubbs overlooks nothing. He has a fair advertising patronage, church notices, vital statistics department, and in short everything usually found in the columns of a live newspaper.

New Premier Leaves For Front---Soldiers Demand That all Authority be Turned Over to Him and Council at Home Vote Him Unlimited Powers--Reforms Promised

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, July 23.—Premier Kerensky has again started for the front at the instance of the Central Committee of Soldiers and Workmen's delegates, according to Reuter despatch from Petrograd. Despatches from Galicia state the breach in the Russian line is eight miles wide and ten miles deep. The Bourse Gazette says that at a meeting of delegates from the regiments at the front it was resolved it had become imperative to turn over all authority to Kerensky.

Petrograd, July 23.—The Council of Soldiers and Workmen's Delegates and Peasants of all Russia voted today after all night session to grant the Government of Premier Kerensky, unlimited powers, under the title "The Government of National Safety" for the reestablishment of public order both at the front and at home.

"Our troops have shown complete disobedience towards their commanders, and are continuing their retreat beyond the Sereth. Only the one hundred and fifty-fifth division resisted in the region of Dolgeanka. Our armored cars fired on German cavalry on the Tarnopol road.

"In spite of our superiority in numbers in the regions attacked, our retreat was almost uninterrupted. This is the result of the instability of our troops, disregard for military orders and the propaganda of the Maximalists.

New Reforms Promised.

The Provisional Government has issued a proclamation to the nation setting forth the seriousness of the situation, declaring that its first duty is to apply its whole strength against the foreign foe and in defence of the Administration against anarchial and counter-revolutionary attempts,' and outlining important reforms throughout the country. The proclamation reads:

"Citizens, the fateful hour has struck! The German Emperor's armies have broken the front of the national revolutionary army. This terrible operation has been facilitated by the criminal levity and blind fanaticism of some and the treachery of others. At this fateful moment, when, taking advantage of the general confusion, the hidden forces of counter-revolution can raise their heads, the remodelled Provisional Government clearly realizes its heavy responsibilities. It possesses, however, full and firm confidence in the strength of the eration of the life politic, now that the contagion, which has shaken the Russian people and in the rapid recup-national organism, has manifested itself and burned itself out in an acute crisis.

"The Government firmly believes that the crisis will lead to recovery, not death. Strong in that belief, the Government is ready to act with the energy and resolution the exceptional circumstances demand. The Government regards as its first and capital task the application of its whole strength to the struggle against the foreign foe and to the defence of the new Governmental regime against every anarchical and counter-revolutionary attempt, without hesitating to take the most rigorous measures in its power. At the same time the Government reiterates that not a drop of blood of a Russian soldier shall be shed for any foreign end, as already proclaimed to the whole world."

NO ROOM FOR COMPROMISE SAYS THE TORONTO GLOBE

Every Liberal Candidate Must Take His Stand Upon One Principle or the Other.

The following extracts are taken from the editorials in the Toronto morning papers discussing the platform drawn up by Liberals in that city Friday:

A Clear Issue
(Globe)

In the coming election there will be no room for compromise between the advocates and opponents of compulsory military service. Every Liberal candidate must take his stand upon one principle of the other. He will have no right to the votes of conscriptionis Liberals unless he is pledged to support a conscriptionist program, which is the first essential. An anticonscriptionist Government would mean that if a new recruiting campaign failed there would be no recourse to compulsory measures, and that Canada would be eliminated from the war unless a revulsion of public sentiment forced a change of rulers through a new election; and this would involve an intolerable loss of precious time.

What An Election Means
(Work)

An election means all kinds of uncertainty and delay. It means a murderous refusal to supply reinforcements to our troops in France in time to enable them to carry on without being frightfully overburdened. It means everything that should not be in such a crisis as the nation now faces. It is to be expected that at such a juncture the old Ross guard would take the wrong side.

No Bowing to Laurier
(Mail and Empire)

For the honor of Ontario's Liberalism there must be another conference, one in which the weight and dignity of Liberal patriotism in the province that has raised half of Canada's total overseas force will be worthily represented. There can be no bowing of the knee by Ontario's stalwart loyalists of either party to a political chief who shows himself alien in feeling from the valiant sons Canada has sent to this war.

Petrograd, July 23.—The resolution passed at the joint meeting of the Committee of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates and Council of Peasants' Delegates says: "The Provisional Government is proclaimed the Government of national safety. BERLIN CLAIMS WIDE VICTORY

SAY ROUT OF RUSSIANS IN GALICIA MORE GENERAL THAN SUPPOSED.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Copenhagen, July 23.—Despatches from Germany seek to convey the impression that the Russian defeat at ZloChoff is edveloping to even wider proportions. Special despatches from German headquarters say the Russian front, north of the Dniester, is tottering and that even the Russian seventh army, south of the Zlochoff gap, is affected by the pressure on its flank and is also beginning to retire. Russians have destroyed the Sereth bridges.

HAROLD ECCLES IS LYING AT THE POINT OF DEATH

Alleged That He Was Assaulted by Workman at Incinerator---Chief Howard Finds Him Unconscious and Neglected.

Harold Eccles, a young Englishman employed by W. Graham, the garbage collector, is lying near to death as a result of injuries said to have been inflicted by William Faiers who has charge of the incinerator.

If the young man recovers from his injuries he can thank Fire Chief Howard, who paid a visit to the incinerator about 10 o'clock this morning and found the young man lying bruised and wounded on a rubber coat just inside the door. The chief, thinking that the man might have fainted or injured himself in some way tried to rouse him, but got no sign that his efforts were heard. An examination disclosed the fact that the limbs of the man were cold and there was only a slight trace of the pulse.

Chief Howard called to the men that are around the building, and in a few moments met Faiers coming, and he told the chief about having a few words with Eccles, and that he had hit him a few blows with a hook or poker, and that he had tried in vain to get a doctor.

Knowing the dangerous condition of the injured man was in the chief sent his driver to get a doctor, and in a short time Dr. Harvey was in attendance, and after examining the patient the doctor ordered his removal to Mr. Graham's residence, where a more thorough examination was made by Dr. Harvey, assisted by

CENTRAL ONTARIO BATTALION PENETRATE GERMAN LINE TO A DEPTH OF FIVE HUNDRED YARDS

Successful Operation Early This Morning Inflicts Heavy Losses on Foe---Raid Was Made in Face of Heavy Difficulties by Men Not Experienced in Assaults.

(By Stewart Lyon)

Canadian Headquarters, July 23.—"A remarkably successful minor operation which resulted in the capture of sixty prisoners and the infliction of serious losses on the Germans in killed and wounded was carried out early this morning by the Canadians in the region southeast of Avion. The force engaged was a central Ontario battalion. The German line was penetrated to a depth of over five hundred yards along a front of seven hundred yards. A large number of enemy dugouts containing many men which had been constructed on both sides of a twenty foot railway embankment stretching between Avion and Mericourt were successfully bombed.

In order to reach these dugouts the attacking forces, consisting largely of men who had not hitherto taken part in an assault, had to find their way in darkness through groups of wrecked houses, a tangle of enemy wire cut during the past few days by our artillery, and a brick yard. To add to their difficulties gas shells were put on by the enemy as they went over the trench tops and continued as they advanced which made it necessary for them to wear gas masks during the attack.

Under conditions prevailing an advance would have been impossible had the men not been carefully instructed by Scouts as to the obtsacles they would have to encounter and in the means of getting around or over them.

The colonel of the regiment himself assisted before the attack in placing a white tap to mark practicable paths through the enemy wire which at this point of the Oppy Mericourt line is very wide.

Thus aided the assaulting waves, protected by an excellent barrage from our guns, had little resistance to overcome until they passed the enemy's first line trenches, where a number of prisoners were taken. Pushing on rapidly the attacking force encountered a fierce resistance and had to fight their way forward with bombs and bayonets. When the embankment was reached the occupants of the dugouts were called on to surrender. Only a few of them did so the remainder preferring to take their chance below The men who made this choice had only been in Lens for a day, having come from the Russian front. They did not know that the means now used in destroying the dugouts is so effective that few occupants escape.

Our men had no time to argue the matter or to descend and explore the dugouts from which armed Germans were beginning to swarm out. Bombs were thrown into the entrances and explosions speedily followed. Gathering up the wounded raiders our men returned towards their own lines leaving others behind, with instructions to fall back if heavily counter attacked. The enemy in force attacked these outposts at dawn and they were withdrawn to a point in the northern part of Avion from which the raiders set out.

Prisoners state there were many men in the destroyed ducouts and relatively few could have escaped in the short time between the sounding of the alarm on bells kept at their enmy casualties must be up in the huntrance and their destructions. Enedreds while our own were little more than the number of prisoners taken.

TURKISH TROOPS FORCED TO RETREAT IN PALESTINE

British Troops Raid Trenches Near Gaza and Capture Men and Booty---Germans Worsted in South Africa---French Line Broken in Spite of Vigorous Resistance.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, July 23.—The following official account of the military operations in Palestine was issued here today: On the morning of July 19 the enemy pushed two cavalry regiments from Beersheba toward the line at El Buggagr-El-Gerjeirabout, nine miles west of Beersheba. Our mounted troops engaged them and drove them back to Beersheba.

On the night of the 20th our troops successfully raided enemy trenches southwest of Gaza. They killed one Turkish officer and 101 men, and brought back 17 prisoners, a machine gun, a trench mortar, a number of rifles and other booty.

Huns Worsted in Africa.

London, July 22.—German troops in German East Africa attempted to make a stand last week against the allied forces which are gradually closing in on them. The official statement issued here today says heavy fighting took place in which the Germans suffered large losses.

French Line Broken.

Paris, July 23.—German attacks, accompanied by violent bombardments, continued last night on the plateau in front of Craonne. In the Caseman plateau the enemy in new efforts of extreme violence succeeded in penetrating our first line. An immediate and vigorous French counter-attack resulted in the preservation of only a small portion of this line. On the Californie plateau the fighting was not ended till late at night.

In spite of all their efforts the Germans were unable to dislodge us from the plateau, which we occupy in its entirety. There was intermittent cannonading at various points on the front.

FOUR KILLED BY LIGHTNING

BOYS WERE ON THEIR WAY HOME FROM SUNDAY SCHOOL.

London, Ont., July 23.—Four boys, ranging from fifteen to seventeen years of age, and residing in or near Scottsville, about seven miles south of this city, were killed Sunday by lightning while on their way home from Sunday School. The names of the killed lads are: Leonard and George Jones of Scottsville, Glen Scoyne of Scottsville and Aubrey Lovely of Payne's Mills. The storm in which they were killed occurred shortly after four o'clock, but the bodies were not found till about six o'clock, when Wesley Baker, a farmer, found them when going for his cattle.

CAPT WARD WRITES END OF WAR IS NOT IN SIGHT

Has Been at Front for Over Two Years as Medical Officer and Has Re-enlisted.

Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Ward, 467 Downie street, have received a letter from their son, Capt. (Dr.) F. G. Ward, who enlisted in Kingston, February, 1915, and went overseas one month later. He was for a time at Clivedon, England, later at Limerick, Ireland, and in September of the same year he went to France, returning to England in June of this year. In all of that time he has had only two leaves of ten days each. He has never been sick or injured since he enlisted.

His first work in France was in the Casualty Clearing Hospital. He was later in the field ambulance service, was medical officer in charge of an artillery brigade and then medical officer in charge of the 7th South Lancashire Battalion.

Capt. Ward has re-enlisted for another year. He was on the Somme front from the time that battle started July 1, 1916, until June 6, 1917. His letter to his parents is as follows:

Blackpool, (R.A.M.C. Training Centre), England, June 23, 1917.

Dear Father and Mother and All:—

It is now some time since I have written a letter. I sent a cablegram from London as soon as I arrived from France, but have been dodging about since getting a new outfit—jacket, breeches, kit, etc.—as I determined to sign on for another year of this war, as the end does not yet seem to be in sight, since the Russians have stopped fighting on their front.

I remember you asked about Xmas parcels! Well, now that letter detailing the different ones is now mislaid in my kit somewhere. It is difficult to know where one is at when moving about so I acknowledged all, either by field postcard or letter. Some of them arrived long after Xmas., in January. Arthur's parcel arrived day before Xmas with some cigars. I do remember well one parcel with socks (khaki) was open, no paper left on hardly. I remember Sarah's cake quite well and all officers present had a go at it. I will get a hold of letter containing details of parcels and write again. You say you have not received any letters from me since when? Well, now I cannot remember when I have written, dates, etc., but I have written field post card or letter every week, some times field post card every day for a few days. I have not written many letters the last eight months but have written some. I got two letters from you when at Holts & Co. last week but they were first in six weeks I have received. Possibly some in France to return to me now.

Holt & Co. is the only possible permanent address, as I may change before I could notify you re-address.

I have left the 7th South Lanc. Battalion and am now in England, near Blackpool, at a training centre, forming fours, etc., over again, waiting to be re-posted after re-engaging for another year. I did not re-engage in France as I wanted leave at end of May so that I might see all the fellows who came over when I came. All came back wtih exception of two, one in Salonika, one in Egypt, Harry

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

PETERBOROUGH MONDAY, JULY 23, 1917

WHO WILL WIN THE WAR?

BUT THE QUESTION will inevitably be asked, if you determine to settle this on the line of personalities: Who are the people most likely to conduct this war to a satisfactory conclusion? And I venture to say that, so far as clearness of motive is concerned, so far as determination is concerned, so far as working in season and out of season, day and night, with a single eye to victory, for the great principles that are at stake upon the battlefields of Europe today, there is no man in Canada who is fit to stand in the same company as my right hon. friend the leader of the Government.—Dr. Michael Clark in Parliament.

THEIR OWN LEADERS.

(Toronto Star.)

WHEN THE PEOPLE do not agree with party leaders they must themselves assume the duty of leadership.

GET AFTER THE BIG GAME.

THE CHINESE RESIDENTS, it seems, occasionally seek relaxation after six days of strenuous labor over the wash tub by taking a hand in a game of chance in which small bets are placed to add zest to the excitement. The police, zealous for the morals of the city and for the enforcement of the Lord's Day Act, break into the laundries, confiscate the gaming paraphernalia, and drag the players before the police magistrate, who does the rest.

Another class in the community have been made the objects of official espionage and have been taken into court on a charge of gambling, a recent case of the kind being heard and ending in an acquittal. It seems peculiar that in a city where there is so much gambling in progress, on the Lord's Day and at other times, the police appear unable to detect any evidence of it except among two classes.

In more than one substantial mansion in the better residential sections the light can be seen burning as early as two or three o'clock Sunday morning, and the shadow on the blinds will show a group of men gathered around a table, not foreigners, but substantial natives of this city or district. They are not met there at that hour for religious worship or even to discuss the political situation. The well-trained ears of the police could, if called into requisition, detect the rattle of the celluloids and the clink of coin as one or other of the players invests in another stack of chips or cashes in on the ivories he has won. The local sleuths could prowl around such domiciles without the risk of bumping into garbage cans and so breaking up their own game and that in progress inside. A haul of such citizens would be something worth while.

But it is the alien within the city gates who is always made the goat. It makes all the difference in the world whether it is a case of penny ante or a game in which the roof alone is the limit. The police seem to prefer to fish for sprats, while the whales are left undisturbed in their fastness.

There are people in Peterborough who insist upon the right to spend any day in their own homes after their own devices. If this privilege is accorded one class, it should be extended to all, whether they are native born or members of an alien race.

HEAR THE PEOPLE.

(Toronto Star.)

THE CONCLUSIONS arrived at by the Ontario Liberal members of Parliament and candidates emphasize the need for a larger and more democratic gathering. There should be a convention at which Liberal opinion can be manifested.

A POPULAR CONVENTION.

THE TORONTO STAR suggests that the Liberals of Ontario meet in a popular convention to draw up their own platform instead of accepting the one prepared by a coterie of self-constituted leaders in session in Toronto last week. This suggestion is especially significant, voicing as it does, the general disapproval of what the Liberal members and would-be members did on that occasion. Sir Wilfrid Laurier can no longer be regarded as the party leader in Ontario. The enforcement of the Conscription Bill must not be delayed.

Some time ago a convention was talked of in West Peterborough for the purpose of having all elements in the community without regard to party settle upon a candidate whose platform would be win-the-war at all costs. Fortunately for the people of this riding the necessity for such a gathering no longer exists, if it ever did. The electors are in accord. One aim unites the parties, and the chances are that this riding will be spared the agony of a campaign or a contest. But if a convention of all the voters was called, the result would not be in doubt for a moment.

THE LIBERALS' LATEST.

THE GLOBE on Saturday takes the stand that in this crisis politics should be shelved and the entire energies of the country devoted to winning the war. The manifesto has a pleasing sound, but close investigation will show that it has been inspired by a desire to gain a strategic advantage rather than from a conviction due to a high sense of duty. The Globe may well propose that politics be left out of the discussion. Politics is what it has most to fear, and its plea for a truce now is on a par with the petition of a man for peace after he has been deprived of the power to fight. Politics will figure in the coming election as never before, and The Globe's party leaders, by their action in Toronto on Friday, are responsible for introducing into the campaign the very element which The Globe suggests should be left out.

For once the three evening papers published in Toronto are in accord in their editorial discussion of the conclusions reached by the Liberals in conference. They are a unit in condemning the acceptance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier as party leader in Ontario, the man who is already at odds with the better element of the people, even those of his own party in Ontario.

The Toronto Star repudiates the action of the Liberal members and candidates. It calls for action on the part of the rank and file and suggests the calling of a popular democratic convention, in which the Liberal elector will have a chance to express his real opinions and choose his own leaders. Members of Parliament have a right to express their own opinions, but, says The Star, in the present critical situation it cannot be assumed that they speak for the tens of thousands who form the Liberal electorate in this province. Those who disagree have a right to be heard and should insist on being heard.

The Star continues:

> "The present situation cannot be dealt with upon traditional lines or by old methods of party organization. The issue is one which cuts clear through party traditions, and creates a cleavage that runs at right angles to the party lines. It must be handled in a new way, by methods that are essentially democratic and will give the rank and file a chance to say what they think. Individual opinion must take the place of party leadership. No man in this crisis can assume to speak for his neighbor."

Striking out with its usual vigor and deadly accuracy of aim The Toronto Telegram says:

> "Thousands of Ontario Liberals, including the Liberal fathers and mothers of Canadian soldiers, will not be made partakers in the shame brought upon all that is true and genuine in the Liberalism of this province by the political chattels of an anti-conscriptionist leader. Ontario Liberals are asked by the chief parliamentary serfs of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's czardom to accept as a true representation of their patriotic and national ideals a policy that betrays the dead and deserts the living—betrays the dead who have died for Canada, and deserts the living who still fight for Canada."

The Toronto News says editorially in dealing with the conference:

> "If Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his Nationalist and Liberal followers had agreed to coalition, or even to an extension of Parliament, the hundred thousand men required to reinforce the Canadian overseas army could have been speedily drafted and placed in training. The Canadian officers and men on the firing line asked the Prime Minister for the support which he is striving to give them. They have sent repeated appeals to Parliament. The Opposition leader and his colleagues have turned a deaf ear to these cries. It is for Canada to choose between the eminent politician who seeks power with the aid of the alien enemy vote and the steadfast statesman who for months past has sunk party considerations in order that the Dominion may be worthy of the men who have laid down their lives, and of those who are still risking their lives in order that Canada and the Empire and humanity may prevail. All voters who are loyal to the men at the front will support the Prime Minister. Others will side with Sir Wilfrid Laurier."

Commodore Æmelius Jarvis, chief naval recruiting officer for the Dominion and a lifelong Liberal, is most forceful of all in his criticism of the men who not only endorsed Sir Wilfrid Laurier as leader but who would delay conscription for no other reason than to placate one province the support of which is their only chance of success. He says:

> "I am not one of the men who was taken into their confidence. To delay the enforcement of any measure which would help to reinforce the boys at the front is nothing short of murder. Any politician who attempts to delay the enforcement of the conscription act is a murderer and should be put up against a wall and shot. They call for a whole-hearted trial of the voluntary system. We have already given it a whole-hearted trial, and have gone as far as we can go with it."

NOTES AND COMMENT.

SIR WILFRID'S HOOF is on your neck, Ontario, Ontario.

• • •

PRETTY SOON there will be many a Canadian wrist watch on the Rhine.

• • •

MR. JOSEPH WEARING'S win-the-war plank has been reduced to kindling wood.

• • •

LOCAL LIBERALS may have to resort to conscription to find a candidate if they decide to contest the riding.

• • •

TO CALL the new German chancellor Dennis instead of Michaelis would be just as Hibernian and vastly more appropriate.

• • •

THE TORONTO NEWS intimates that it is not impossible that German gold will finance the campaign of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

• • •

THEY ARE drafting men in the United States these days, and the method is regarded as one of the institutions of democracy.

• • •

IF THE MEMBERS of Parliament would work half as hard as the Canadian soldiers at Lens, something worth while would be accomplished.

• • •

NOT FOR PARTY SUCCESS, but for the nation's safety, should be the slogan. Not for the politicians, but for the soldiers, should the people work and vote.

• • •

COMMODORE JARVIS says that the Liberals who took part in the Toronto conference should be stood against a wall and shot. But why accord such slackers a military death?

• • •

WHAT WOULD HAPPEN if the Canadian troops lay down on their arms, waiting to see whether conscription is to be enforced at once or the voluntary system that has run itself out is to be given another trial?

Wit and Wisdom

Wonderful Echo.

An American and a Highlander were walking one day on the top of a Scotch mountain, when the Scotchman, wishing to impress the boastful "cousin," produced a famous echo to be heard in that place. When the echo returned clearly after nearly four minutes the proud Scotchman, turning to the Yankee, exclaimed: 'There, mon, ye canna show anything like that in your own country."

To which the other replied: "I guess we can better that some, stranger. Why, in my shooting lodge in the Rockies, when I go to bed I just lean out of the window and call out, 'Time to get up; wake up,' and eight hours afterward the echo comes back and wakes me."

Honesty.

Mark Twain was called upon to speak at a club dinner and took for his theme "Honesty." He said when he was a boy at home he one day saw a cartful of melons. He was only a boy—and he was tempted; besides, he liked melons.

The opportunity was there; there was little or no risk.

"I sneaked up to that cart," said mark, "and I stole a melon. I went into a passage to demolish it. But I had no sooner set my teeth in it than I paused; a strange feeling came over me. I came to a quick resolution. Firmly I walked up to that cart, placed the stolen melon where I got it from and—took a ripe one!"

He Was Drafted.

For business reason Hunks was exceedingly sorry to find he had been drafted. His partner was sorry, too, as business was good and growing.

Still Hunks had hopes that he might fail to pass the doctor, and on the eventful day he was accompanied by his equally anxious partner, who waited hopefully outside.

A few minutes later Hunks emerged, his face wreathed in smiles. "Congratulate me," he cried; "I say congratulate me. I may fall down dead any minute!"

No Danger.

A slater who was engaged upon the roof of a house fell from the ladder and lay in an unconscious state upon the pavement. One of the pedestrians who rushed to the aid of the poor man chanced to have a flask of spirits in his pocket and began to pour a little down his throat.

"Easy, man, easy," said a man looking on, "or you'll choke him."

The "unconscious" slater slowly opened his eyes, and said quietly:

"Pour away, sir, pour away; you're doin' fine."

Not Alone.

"Why, you women ought to be thankful that you do not live in foreign countries, where they yoke up women with mules and make them pull together," said a rough opponent of woman suffrage to a gentle but strong minded suffragist.

"You are married, are you not?" she asked.

"Yes," snapped he.

"Well," she rejoined, "then foreign countries are not the only ones in which women are yoked with mules."

A Question of Trimming.

Halefeller (wildly)—"What! Do you mean to tell me woman, that it cost $39 to get that hat trimmed? Jumping Jupiter! But that milliners' game is the limit!"

Mrs. Halefeller (sweetly) — "Really? Why, I understood it costs some men more than that to get trimmed in a poker game."

"A Plan of Their Own"

One day soon after Pope's defeat a private soldier belonging to an Ohio regiment sought an interview with his captain, and announced that he had a plan for a military campaign which must certainly result in crushing out the rebellion. The officer very naturally inquired for particulars, but the solder refused to reveal them, and asked for a chance to lay his plans before Pope himself. After some delay he was given a pass to headquarters. He did not get to see Pope, but after the chief of staff had coaxed and promised and threatened for a quarter of an hour, the Buckeye stood up and replied:

"Well, sir, my plan is for John Pope and Bob Lee to swap commands, and if we don't lick the South inside of sixty days you may shoot me for a patent hay-fork swindler!"

When he returned to Camp he was naturally asked what success he met with, and he ruefully replied:

"Well, they had a plan of their own."

"What was it?"

"Why, they took me out and booted me for a mile and a half."

Burns' Anniversary in Toronto

Saturday the thistles and the "opening gowans wat with dew," that he sang about in one of the loveliest of his lyrics were entwined around the monument of Robert Burns in Allan Gardens in Toronto, placed there by the officers of the Burns Literary Society. It was the 121st anniversary of the death of the beloved Scottish bard, a day that is always remembered by the Celt and honored in all parts of the world.

Great poets have come and gone. Their works, elaborately bound, are on the bookshelves. But Burns lives in the hearts of men. He needs no vellum binding, no pedantry to sing his praises. He has left an enduring heritage. And as Tommy Atkins flings his Kipling midst the shot and shell of battle somewhere in Flanders the great strong Highlander tenderly recites the love songs and the patriotic lays of immortal Bobbie.

A hundred and twenty-one years! They are as nought. If the songs are as fresh as when they were written, assuredly the spirit is the same and the battle song of Burns:

"Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled;
Scots wham Bruce has aften led;
Welcome to your gory bed,
Or to victory—"

is echoing and re-echoing throughout Scotland today.

No one has arisen in the literary world to supplant him in Scottish estimation because no one before or since has so simply, so inspiringly interpreted the everyday life of his fellow-countrymen. He did not live in a period of war, but through everything he wrote thrilled a strong and unquenchable vein of patriotism and were he alive today it is easy to imagine him throwing down the ploughshare and grasping the sword. As it is, his spirit is with the sons of Scotland. It has led them in their gallant charges. It has kept them cheerful through the long, weary months of trench warfare. His songs have sweetened their lives, and we owe him a debt for that if for nothing else.

"Ayr, gurgling, kissed his pebbled shore,
O'erhung with wild woods' thickening green.
The fragrant birch, and hawthorne hoar,
Twined am'rous round the raptured scene.
The flowers sprang wanton to be prest.
The birds sang love on every spray
Till too, too soon the glowing west
Proclaimed the speed of winged day."

But Ayr—beautiful Ayr, where Burns was born, is bereft of men today and on the banks of the river are weeping women — women who the sake of the land he loved so well, have given their dearest and best for.

Nevertheless, it was the thistle in its pride and not the sprig of rue that they twined around the statue of Burns in Toronto Saturday.

SEVENTEEN YEARS AGO

From The Review of July 23, 1900:

Miss Edna Armstrong, daughter of Mr. S. R. Armstrong, town clerk, won the scholarship for girls at the entrance examination with a total of 807 marks. Mark Butcher was the highest among the boys with a total of 754.

Mrs. Bert Myles, wife of a C.P.R. engineer, committed suicide at her home in Havelock by shooting. Melancholia due to long illness was the cause.

Baking by the Book.

Mary—"Well, ma'am, blessed if it be my fault. The young ladies has just been showing me how they bile a pertater at their cooking school."

"DONT'S" FOR TENNIS PLAYERS

Dr. E. B. Dewhurst an international authority on lawn tennis, presents some "dont's" on tennis. He says:

This might be called very well a "Chapter of don'ts" for young players and a careful avoidance of these special errors will do much to improve the game of the novice.

Don't fail to keep a firm grip on the racket; a loose hold ruins many strokes.

For the forehand stroke, the thumb should overlap the middle finger.

For the backhand stroke, the thumb should be stretched along straight up the back of the handle as a support.

For the forehand stroke the finger nails should face the direction of the stroke; for the backhand stroke, the middle knuckles.

Don't hold the racket with a short grip; take it by the extreme end.

Don't use the first finger straight up the handle.

Don't hold the racket loose enough to let it twist in the grasp nor clench it so tight as to tire the hand.

The above list of don'ts are those which are concerned in the grip of the racket and should be mastered first.

On Hitting The Ball

Then comes the actual hitting of the ball and follows closely on the matter of grip; in fact, is almost part of it, but includes the placing of the feet, the position of the ball when striking and the movements of the racket as the ball is hit. These, of course, so far deal only with the drive or the shot off the ground, the foundation stroke of the game itself.

Don't let the ball get close in, so the playing elbow can become cramped during the stroke.

Don't play the ball directly in front of you; this position is impossible for any stroke.

Don't make a stroke with the feet squared toward the net or parallel with it; don't put the wrong foot forward while making a stroke and don't stand flat-footed on the heels.

Don't hit the ball too far forward or too far back; the correct position is opposite the middle of the body.

Don't hit the ball underneath except to make a lob; play it from behind, with an upward motion of the racket to carry it over the net.

Don't try to guess your own faults; practice before a mirror to discover your errors.

Don't use a short grip or a short swing and don't play with the wrong foot forward.

Don't make the stroke with stiff knees, flatfooted and the body held erect; bend down to your work and jump at the ball.

Don't fight the ball away from you as if you were afraid of it; go right to the ball and punish it.

Don't move backward as you strike; this ruins any stroke.

Don't hit the ball forward or behind your position; meet it at the middle and swing opposite your body.

Don't try to hit the ball too hard at first; get it back over the net and let the other man make the errors.

Next comes the most important stroke of the game, which plays so great a part in the modern volley game and gives the attacking position to the server:

Don't step on the line in serving, nor step over it until after the ball has left the racket; this is a cast-iron rule of the game, not simply a piece of advice.

Don't throw up the ball to one side or too far forward, for it must be hit straight overhead to make a good service.

Don't try to hit the ball with a short grip or with a bent arm or wrist, for you need as much reach as posible, except for the American twists.

Don't bevel the racket backward to overcome the effect of hitting the ball out in front of the body; correct the error by throwing the ball further back.

Don't try to make a fast service with a straight ball for a twist is necessary to overcome the tendency for the ball to travel too far and make a fault.

Don't swing the racket sidewise around the head in making the service keep its swing as much as possible in line with the flight of the ball.

Don't try to serve too hard at first and don't be ashamed of making a second service slow enough to be certain of striking in court.

Don't make double faults—that is a deadly sin that even beginners cannot afford to commit.

Don't rush forward into the court after serving unless you intend to go all the way up close to the net to volley the next return. Then comes the volley, that master stroke on which the American game is built and with which the greatest players in the world have made themselves famous.

Don't swing at the balls on the volley. This stroke is more of a short, sharp stab at the ball and there is no time for a full swing usually.

And Watch These

Don't volley from too far back in the court. The nearer the net the better if you don't get lobbed over.

Don't let the ball fall below the top of the net; jump in and intercept it before it gets too low and has to be volleyed up.

Don't volley short unless the other man is hopelessly far back or you will be passed on the next stroke. Volley deep always, if possible, and away from the other man.

Don't stand still at the net. Follow the ball to the side to which you have sent it, to cover the opening; jump from one side to the other, for you have an even chance of guessing right, and the only place where the ball will not go is where you are standing.

Finally comes the overhead smash, the pont winner of most volleys:

Don't try to smash from further back than the service line. Block them back deep and come in again for the next lob, which may be shorter.

Don't smash while running back. Jump back first to the right position and then smash from there.

Don't check the swing of the racket in smashing. Let it go well back and come well through with all the force you can put on it. To check the swing means to miss the stroke.

Don't smash from too far in front or too far back of you. The proper place is right overhead, as for the service.

Don't aim your smash always for one side of the court. The other man may be intelligent and get onto this and go there for the ball and be ready for it when it comes.

The Flavour Lasts

THE SALVING OF A DERELICT

By MAURICE DRAKE

Constance remembered perfectly well, and said so. The light from her fine eyes was such as that with which a Queen of Beauty might have rewarded a valiant knight of olden time, but behind the admiring glance was vivid curiosity. Her conversation flowed smoothly, but question after question rose in her busy brain. Why had Laurence bolted as he did? What had he learned from this little fool of a man that he should fly downstairs three steps at a time? Why had he gone away?—and where? Why was Pat Dwyer buying worthless shares? What was the name of the company? The Iceland something or other, she remembered.

"And where does malachite come from?" she asked, when next the conversation gave her an opening.

"Russia, I believe—and, I think, Australia."

"Is there any in Iceland?" she asked innocently.

"Hm—ah—I—ah—I really don't know. There's sulphur there, of course, as you know." She didn't know, but nodded as intelligently as if she did. "If there's any copper there—I'm ashamed to say I know little of the Iceland deposits beyond the fact that they're mainly volcanic—but if there's copper there, there's very probably malachite as well. But I don't know."

Perhaps Laurence had gone to Iceland, she reflected. In that case Dwyer's statement that he was ignorant of his address might be true—at least it wasn't a deliberate lie if he was at sea. And despite Pat's manner, a lie she had half believed it to be.

"How far away is Iceland?" she asked.

"I really don't know the number of miles. It's about a week's journey to get there. I knew some fellows once who went there salmon fishing."

A week to get there, and a week back. That disposed of her last theory. She had seen Laurence the Thursday before, and next Thursday he had an appointment with Dwyer. Oh, bother it all! she couldn't think with this little idiot talking, talking, talking and expecting to be answered all the time. So she shelved the whole matter for reference in some remote recess of her brain, and devoted herself to being as pleasant as possible to the man before her.

She bade him farewell at the foot of her stairs, thanking him profusely for his kindness. "Such a pleasant evening," she declared. "I feel quite another woman. I was so depressed before you came. Good bye, dear Mr. Farrant—well, Frank, then. Come and see me next Monday." Her hand lingered in his long enough to send the youth home in a mood of jaunty confidence in the invincibility of his manly charms.

To induce sleep she drank a glass of weak whisky and water and smoked a cigarette before going to bed; but all through her dreams Laurence bore great masses of malachite on his shoulders to build a mighty green palace, and when it was finished he knelt at her feet with a sneering laugh on his face and told her it was for her. When [illegible] she lifted him by the hand and led him towards it; but just as they reached the door it vanished into thin air, and all that was left was her friend Lucy, who was crying and saying, "Men are beasts, Con. I really did want a bit of that stuff to wear in an earring."

CHAPTER XVI.

On the following Friday Laurence walked to the station with Marion Stewart, and then, presuming on three days of irreproachable behavior petitioned to be allowed to lunch with her again. "I've business in the City," he said. "At least——"

Her finger went up warningly, but she laughed cheerfully nevertheless.

"The truth," she said. "Please."

"At least—I really do want to have lunch with you," he declared. "You called it a business transaction last week yourself."

"It's a stretching of the bond," she said slowly. "Are you sure you quite understand how I feel?"

"Positive. You think I'm improving rapidly," Laurence said impudently. "I behave as prettily as—as a tailor's dummy. And you picture me in future going back to steady work and writing you once a week, thanking you for putting me on the right path, and giving you interesting sketchy letters about a northern fishing port. Isn't that so?"

It was so exact a description of her own thoughts that she flushed in spite of her laughter.

"You—you really are queer," she said. "Yes. You may come with me to lunch to-day, if only as a reward for your cuteness. D'you know—I—I don't believe you're half as big a silly as you look."

Laurence shouted like a schoolboy, but soon fell silent. His time was coming—the time when the brown eyes behind their long lashes should look into his own with something better than curiosity or laughter in them. Nearly a week now of fairly constant intercourse to his credit, he reflected, and, so far, no shadow across the joyous days of sunlight.

His conversation and the new consciousness that he was a trusted friend broke up the defensive reserve in which the lonely Englishwoman must perforce travel, and for once her bi-weekly ride to town became a blithe holiday jaunt. They got out at Charing Cross, and he was allowed to accompany her along the busy Strand as far as Fleet Street. They dawdled, making a long half-hour of the promenade by looking into shop windows and watching the traffic, and Laurence tentatively suggested a theatre for the evening; but, finding her demur a little, postponed the visit for another more favorable occasion. Promising to meet him at Rupert Street at one, she nodded an adieu and went about her business.

Laurence called upon Dwyer, but on being informed he was out, retraced his steps. At the corner of Bedford Street he decided to have a drink, and went to the Bodega for that purpose. The place, as usual, was blue with tobacco smoke and crowded with the stranded flotsam and jetsam of the boards, and he took his glass with a copy of the Telegraph to a corner for quietness. He glanced over the news, but the first moment his eyes rose above the top of the paper they fell on Constance Armitage. She was talking listlessly to a gorgeous member of the provincial manager tribe, but had evidently seen him before he saw her, for their eyes met and she came over to him, her hand extended.

"My dear Lucifer," she greeted him. "Fancy finding you here, of all places in the world!"

Laurence stammered something about having come in for a quiet drink and she drew a chair towards his table and sat down.

"So you've returned from your journey?" she smiled.

"Haven't been on any journey," Laurence averred.

"No? Then where on earth have you been keeping yourself?"

"I haven't been out of London."

"Then I think you're very horrid not to have come to see me all this long week. Do you know, I actually went to call on you last Monday."

"Yes? I—I've left New Cavendish Street," Laurence said lamely.

"So I found. Where are you staying?"

"In the suburbs."

"Oh! Of course, if you don't want me to know where——" She paused. Laurence preserved a stony silence.

"You're a very mysterious person of late," she ventured, as a re-opening. "Fancy not letting Mr. Dwyer know your address, even."

"You called there, didn't you?"

"Yes. Have you seen him? He told me you had an appointment with him yesterday. Has he succeeding in buying all those shares you want?"

"What shares?" demanded Laurence aghast.

"Why, the Iceland—Development—something—aren't they called?" She trickled out her little knowledge in a series of hesitating pauses, and seeing the lively anxiety in his eyes, flashed a knowing smile at him and drove the bolt home. "You know, where the malachite comes from."

Laurence slowly and methodically folded his copy of the Telegraph in four, folded it again and yet again, until it was a concise billet and he could fold it no longer. Then he pressed it flat upon the little table and looked up.

"What on earth are you talking about?" he demanded.

"Malachite—isn't it some coppery sulphur stuff? You know. That little stone you showed Mr. Farrant and myself. And the shares Pat Dwyer got from Messrs. Somebody & Reingold and bought from that old draper in the City. I forget his name."

"When did you see Dwyer last?"

"Yesterday."

"What time?"

"Really, how you cross-question anybody!" She drew a bow at a venture. "About this time yesterday morning, I should think." For once she missed the mark. Laurence had been at Dwyer's office himself half an hour later, and Pat had mentioned her only as calling the Monday before, so he began to feel himself on safer ground.

She mistook his silence for consternation and reached out a gloved hand to pat him on the wrist. "You're like all big, strong, masterful men, Lucifer," she said. "You think we women are such silly, thoughtless things that you can do anything with us and you can, too—your type, I know." Her look frankly showed he had found favor in her eyes, and he fidgeted uncomfortably. "But we're not altogether fools, for all that." We keep our eyes open, and even think sometimes. Now, see. You didn't know what that stuff was till you came to my rooms, did you? When young Farrant told you, I mean. You said you valued it more than turquoises—but that was because it had a sentimental value, wasn't it? Then he told you it had a market value as well, and you went off in a big hurry to find out what it was worth, or perhaps to buy some from somebody who didn't know. A shareholder in the Iceland Company, eh? And—and you've never been near me since," she concluded reproachfully.

Whilst she trusted to her infallible woman's instinct she bulled him through and through at every shot; but the moment she started guessing he knew it, and her relapse into sentiment gave him him breathing space. He made no answer, only pushing his hands deeply into his pockets and regarding her under lowering brows.

Again she stretched out a hand towards him, and there was something wistful in her glance and the relaxing corners of her mouth.

"Aren't you ever coming to see me any more?" she asked.

After all, she was a woman, he reflected, and his new love for another of her sex made his manner gentler than his wont.

"No, little lady," he said, kindly enough. "Not any more. I'll send you something in place of the pair of shoes I spoiled last week, and then we won't see any more of each other."

He could not know that words and manner alike were cruelly familiar to her, and her flash into quick anger startled him.

"Curse the shoes!" she said shamelessly. "Do you think I care for the ——— shoes? You could have had the shoes and the woman who stood in them for the bare asking, if you liked. Cowardly beasts you men are. You play with me for a month, and just when I care more about you than anything else in the world, off you go—with another woman, as likely as not." She read the truth in his eyes. "It is another woman, then! But I'll be even with you. I know more than you think about that Iceland business, and I'll spoil your game. You shan't make money out of that to spend on another woman." In a towering rage she struck the table with her clenched hand and rose to her feet. "I hate you!" she exclaimed. "Oh, how I hate you—you devil!" and before Laurence could make any answer she was gone, leaving him whistling softly through his teeth in half-angry, half-pitying pre-occupation.

"Tss—tss," he said to himself. "Poor little beast of a woman. I wonder how much she knows. This means trouble. I must hurry Pat up."

Constance, in a whirl of tempestuous fury, was half-way to Mortimer's office before she remembered that visits there were forbidden. Recalling the prohibition, she sought the nearest post office and sent him an express letter. "News," she wrote. "Averil's Iceland Co. Come and see me at once.—C." Driving straight home, she raged and relented, and raged again until Mortimer arrived, hot and hurried, a couple of hours later.

"What's up?" he demanded.

"What have you done about that Iceland company?" she returned.

"Found out the fool the sham was aimed at. But he's dead nearly two years ago. He died after the inquiry."

"Who's got the shares now?"

"His daughter. But we shall have 'em in a week."

"Don't you be too sure of that. What are they worth?"

"Lord knows. There's ten thousand in debentures and a few hundreds ordinary stock. We're going to offer her forty quid for the lot. That ought to buy 'em."

"Forty pounds won't. Oh, you fools! —you fools! Don't you see what the game is?"

"No, I'm dashed if I do," said Mortimer. "What's up, Connie. What bee have you got in your bonnet now?"

"Bee! Good heavens above! Half a minute. What do I get out of this?"

"What do you get? Ain't you a bit ahead of the game? We don't know there's anything in it yet."

"I do. I know just what's in it, too, for a bet. Look here. If my information's right, do I get half profits?"
